Mr. DENISON. Then there is the treaty game law by which we made it unlawful to cause to be transmitted through the agencies of interstate commerce any part of the wild game which had been killed in any State contrary to the law of that State. If it was not killed unlawfully it would not be unlawful to transmit it through interstate commerce. We have followed this precedent in a number of instances. There is nothing novel about this bill or about the theory of it.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes; if I have the floor.

Mr. LONDON. This presupposes the knowledge by every citizen of the laws of every State.

Mr. DENISON. It presupposes a knowledge of this law, and when the citizen reads this law and sees that he can not use the United States agencies to send an unlawful stock into another State for sale he will inquire what the law of that State is.

Mr. LONDON. Before he determines whether he can send any particular stock into a State he will have to inquire what the law of that State is.

Mr. DENISON. Exactly; and that is true in the case of putting wild game on the trains to send it from one State to another. It would not be true, of course, in the case of any stock exempted under the provisions of the bill.

Mr. LONDON. I thought the only persons who are charged with the knowledge of all of the laws, as I understand it, are the members of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. DENISON. Well, we must all take notice of the laws of any States in which we wish to do business.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That every sale or contract for sale of any security or securities made or in any manner directly induced by or through any of the acts made unlawful by sections 2 or 3 of this act shall be void at the election of the purchaser; and the person making such sale or contract for sale, and every solicitor, agent, or broker of or for such seller who shall have knowingly performed any act which directly contributed to bring about such sale or contract for sale, and every person who shall have knowingly participated in the benefits or proceeds of such sale or contract for sale, shall be jointly and severally liable to such purchaser, upon tender to the seller or in court of the securities sold or of the contract made, for the full amount paid by such purchaser, together with all taxable court costs and reasonable attorneys' fees in any action brought under this section. Suit to recover such amount may be brought in any State court of competent jurisdiction or any district court of the United States in the district in which the defendants, or either of them, reside or are found, without respect to the amount in controversy: Provided, That such suit must be brought within two years from the date of such sale or contract for sale.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, in line 11, page 11, the words "at the election of the purchaser," after the word "void."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Page 11, line 11, after the word "void," strike out the words "at the election of the purchaser."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, this section, in my judgment, from what consideration I have been able to give the bill, is the most doubtful one from the viewpoint of expediency and also from the legal standpoint that there is in the measure. We have provided a punishment for persons utilizing the mail or presumably the telegraph or other instrumentalities of interstate commerce in the sale or disposition of fraudulent stocks or securities. I suppose that this section is in the nature of additional punishment, because it is provided that the sale or contract of sale which was made under the laws of some State shall be void, and it is left to the purchaser to say whether or not it shall be void. I presume the reason for that is that if a man made money out of the transaction he will not want the contract to be void, even though he broke the law in the transaction by using the mails or other instrumentalities of interstate commerce. I do not think we ought to enact a law and then say to the beneficiaries of an illegal act, "If you say so, this contract can stand and be all right," but that the man who employed the instrumentality can be proceeded against and punished by a fine or imprisonment. If the man made some money out of it, it is provided that he may keep his profit and the contract may be all right, and then that the law will take care of the man on the criminal side of the court who violated the law; whereas if the man lost money it is provided that you will punish him for making use of the mails or other instrumentality of interstate commerce, and you will also say because he lost money the contract is void, and the man can go into the civil side of the United States courts under the provisions of the contract made under the laws of the State.

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. HOCH. If the gentleman's amendment should prevail, would it not require the purchaser in every case to investigate to ascertain whether the seller had complied with the law?

Mr. WALSH. Since Congress has undertaken this vast program of legislating for the individual and going into fields of legislation that ought to be occupied solely by the States, we seem to have abrogated the maxim, "Let the buyer beware"; and some of these people who are fools enough to buy sections of blue sky ought not to be encouraged by Congress to lay aside all caution, all prudence, simply because we are going to deny the use of the United States mails to them, and the people who are seeking to sell blue sky to them or acres of the ocean.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. We are not trying to encourage them to do that, but rather to discourage the other man from selling it to them.

Mr. WALSH. How are you going to discourage them if you are going to let the purchaser who makes any money out of the transaction say that the contract will stand? It will just encourage them to keep on and enter into another contract with the hope of making some money. The only time it will be abrogated or voided is when some of these people lose money, as, of course, they always do when they buy a section of blue sky.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DENISON. If the gentleman will yield for another question, of course the gentleman from Massachusetts understands that after all the evil that we are trying to get at is the evil of selling fraudulent stock. If a man gets hold of a stock and it is a profitable investment, he has not been defrauded in any sense, even though technically he may have violated the law.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, may I suggest that this bill covers a lot of transactions that are not fraudulent at all. The ordinary State laws simply require the filing of certain information. Suppose a person fails to file that information properly, and a sale is made innocently, this would allow the purchaser to bring a suit to recover back the purchase price at his option at any time within two years, though the sale was free from fraud or any intentional wrongdoing.

Mr. WALSH. But the gentleman must remember that the sale or contract must be for securities made or in any manner directly induced by or through any of the acts made unlawful by sections 2 or 3 of this act.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. But it is true that this bill makes every act unlawful that is denominated as such by the State law, and a very large number of those acts may be innocent.

Mr. WALSH. This does not apply.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Oh, surely.

Mr. WALSH. This says "by or through any of the acts made unlawful by sections 2 or 3 of this act."

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Sections 2 and 3 make those acts unlawful because this particular bill adopts the statutes of the States, and in a large number of cases the acts denominated as unlawful by such statutes are innocent of any fraud.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman is correct. I misunderstood the application he was making. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois another question. Having penalized a person who enters into a contract for using the mail in the confirmation of his scheme or plan or contract, which was made under the law of a State, what jurisdiction has Congress then to come in and say that under an act of Congress that contract is void?

Mr. DENISON. Well, I will answer the gentleman. Now, if my friend will read the Clayton Antitrust Act, which covers similar transactions in interstate commerce, he will see it provides that if any person suffered a loss, damage, or injury by reason of the acts forbidden, the person who so suffered loss may recover in a civil suit treble damages, and in preparing this provision we considered similar provisions in a number of Federal acts prohibiting interstate transactions——

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman will remember the Clayton Antitrust Act was a Federal statute that forbids certain transactions by law of the United States. Now, they go in and make a contract under the law of a State and the Federal Congress says that law shall be void if the purchaser or buyer wishes to say so. What authority has Congress to say that in case of a contract made under the law of a State, even though the mail is used in the consummation of that contract and punishment is meted out for the use of those mails, you can go further and say the contract is void? Where do you get jurisdiction over a contract which may in all other respects have complied with the State laws except the use of the United States mails in sending circulars or soliciting for subscriptions for stock?

Mr. DENISON. I want to state this to the gentleman: That the phraseology, if properly interpreted, means that the contract is voidable; that it is void at the option or election of the purchaser. It means it is a voidable contract, but not void absolutely. It is a voidable contract in favor of the purchaser only, and it says that if a person enters into a contract which is brought about or in any manner induced by an act that is prohibited by this law, that it is voidable at the election of the purchaser who has been defrauded.

Mr. WALSH. Now, why should the purchaser be given an election? If they violate the law, if they use interstate commerce instrumentalities in bringing about the negotiations and enter into this contract, why should it be at his election? Why should they be permitted to enter into a contract and the beneficiaries if they benefit say, "No; the contract is all right," and nobody can force him to declare it void, whereas if he suffers monetary loss he can then come in say, "No; I will say this contract is void"?

Mr. DENISON. If the gentleman will pause to think for just a moment, he will see that this provision is put in for the benefit of the purchaser only. Subsequent purchasers can not declare it void.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WALSH. I will ask for three minutes additional.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DENISON. Certainly he would not want the man who committed the wrong to have the privilege of declaring it void. We do not want to give that privilege to the wrongdoer, the man who brought about the contract wrongfully, we do not want to give the privilege to him, but we simply extend the privilege to the man who is first imposed on. Then, if he sells the security to a third person, the third person can not recover from the original seller.

Mr. WALSH. And if he has not been imposed upon, just punish the fellow, fine him, and the man will keep the profits; is that the idea?

Mr. DENISON. Well, we are trying to make the law so plain and the penalties so heavy that no one will violate it. Men will not ordinarily violate a law if they know they can not profit by doing so.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. If the gentleman will just yield for this suggestion, I think I can think of a case where it would appear important to have the right of election in the purchaser. Of course, I understand what is in the mind of the gentleman that in this sort of a transaction you may permit a man to take advantage of this sort of thing and thus encourage the violation of the law. But suppose the purchaser innocently spends the money, buys some of this stock, and his money is gone; all chance of recovery is gone, because the seller is outside of the jurisdiction, and then all the purchaser has left is this stock, which by this law is declared void and therefore worthless. He has not only lost his money, but he has lost his stock. Ought there not be some chance to make a recovery of some part of it? In other words, a man who is defrauded ought to have the right to get whole on the transaction, ought he not?

Mr. WALSH. Then the gentleman takes the position that if a man sells stock which at the time of the sale or transaction is subject to the provisions of this act, and the man loses all his money, he should be permitted to wait and see whether this stock may rise in price and whether he may eventually profit in the transaction; and, if so, then he can dispose of all the stock and put the profits in his pocket, or, if not, that he can declare the contract void and sue for the recovery of his money?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Now, take the ordinary case of fraud. A man is defrauded. A contract in the civil courts is only declared fraudulent or voidable at the request of the person who is defrauded. Ought it not to be the rule in this law?

Mr. WALSH. It would be the rule if my amendment was adopted.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. That would in itself, as a matter of law, make it void and not voidable.

Mr. WALSH. And he could recover.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to call the committee's attention to this situation: The "blue-sky" laws in the States require that certain things shall be done; usually the filing of certain information with a certain officer. If a person in describing the securities that he expects to put upon the market fails to comply with those requirements, he is punished by the State statutes.

Mr. DENISON. I will state to the gentleman that it is the selling of stock without having first complied with the laws.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The failure to file those particular statements constitutes for all practical purposes the offense. If you sell anything without having filed these statements with the proper officer, you are guilty. Look at the situation: Here is a man in New York who sends to the State of Minnesota some security to be sold there; that stock has not been properly listed in Minnesota; that is, they have not filed the particular descriptions of that stock. There may not be a fraud in fact. A man may send it from New York to Minnesota and sells it in the utmost good faith and receives every dollar that it is worth. That thing may reoccur in a thousand instances. It runs along for a year, and the fellow who bought finds that that stock has depreciated in value. Under this section you give him an absolute right to bring a suit to recover the whole purchase price. It does not depend on actual fraud, because those statutes do not require that there shall be any fraud. It simply requires that there shall be certain facts filed in the State in the office of some commissioner or some officer—facts that the commissioner deems sufficient to show that the securities are bona fide.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. The officials of your State consider it a fraud for a man to undertake to sell stock in that State without complying with the law.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I do not care what they consider it. I am telling you what the actual facts are under those statutes. You can not make it a fraud by calling it a fraud if it is not a fraud. I am perfectly willing you should draw a statute punishing fraud and give a right to recover in those cases where fraud or misrepresentation induced the purchase, but it seems to me utterly ridiculous to make a person liable for damages where there is in fact no damage, and to give to the purchaser an option to repudiate the contract and punish him, though he may perhaps have been the one who perpetrated a fraud.

Mr. DENISON. Let me remind the gentleman from Minnesota that his own State law gives the man to whom the stock has been sold, under the "blue sky" law of that State, the right to sue and recover his money. Not only that, but nearly every other State that has a "blue sky" law has the same provision. The gentleman has hit upon the very purpose of this provision. It is a deterrent to stop dishonest promoters.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I have had occasion to examine a great many of those State laws, because, as I said, we had a hearing before the Judiciary Committee on a similar bill, and I know that a great many failures to comply with certain provisions of State statutes are only punished with slight fines.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition in opposition to the pro forma amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD].

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that we are misapprehending the question. We are not punishing fraud by this bill. We are punishing a man who does an unlawful thing. Now, that is the reason, the essence and the gist of this proposition. The statement made by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] is based upon the idea that we are trying to correct and punish a fraud. But that is not what we are trying to do.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this ought to be clear, that this bill only declares as unlawful and imposes a penalty upon that which a State has declared unlawful. Under this bill a man may do an unlawful thing by even sending, without selling, fradulent securities of any sort. But if he does sell it, and if the man is fraudulently induced to purchase that which is declared by law to be a worthless thing outlawed by the prohibition and penalties of the law, the victim ought not to be required to wait to see whether it is worth anything or not. The very fact that it is unlawful is sufficient, or ought to be sufficient, for him to have accrue to him immediately the right of recovery. If somebody has sold to him a piece of paper which is unlawful under the law in the State where the purchaser resided, that man then at that time ought to have the right to repudiate it and to bring suit, if necessary, against the man who unlawfully sold him something prohibited by the law. And so it seems to me, that being the case, it answers sufficiently the argument suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD].

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. VOLSTEAD and Mr. BARBOUR rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Minnesota rise?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I want to offer an amendment, on page 12, lines 1 and 2.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Strike out the words "without respect to the amount in controversy."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOLSTEAD: Page 12, line 1, strike out "without respect to the amount in controversy."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, this is a new departure from anything that I know of anywhere in Federal legislation. From the very beginning of this Government we limited the amount that a Federal court could take jurisdiction of. The very first law we passed provided that the amount in controversy must be at least $500. Under existing law it is necessary before a person can go into the Federal court that the amount shall be $3,000. Now, you propose to give to these parties a right to bring an action for, say, $100 in a Federal court.

I think we are all aware that the Federal courts are pretty well congested. It does not seem to be advisable to pass a statute that gives a Federal court jurisdiction in these small cases. I am perfectly willing that the State courts shall be given jurisdiction.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I do.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Would not this statute prevent the transfer of a suit involving over $3,000, commenced in a State court, to the Federal court, where diversity of citizenship was involved? Under this provision if the amount in suit is $5,000 or $1,000,000, brought by a citizen of one State against a citizen of another State, the defendant can not have the case transferred to the Federal court from the State court of plaintiff's State. Under the existing law defendant could move to have it transferred to the Federal court. This would practically repeal the right which the defendants have now under existing law on account of diverse citizenship.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I am not prepared to say as to that. But it would give to the Federal court jurisdiction in cases of less than $3,000, which is the limit to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. BARBOUR. I would like to ask a question of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON]. I notice that in line 25, on page 11, the jurisdiction of suits brought under section 7 is limited to the United States district court, if brought in a United States district court, "in the district in which the defendants, or either of them, reside." What was the purpose of limiting it to the district in which the defendants reside? This law is intended for the protection of a man who might purchase stock of no value.

Mr. DENISON. I understand you have to go to the district in which the defendant resides in order to get proper service on him.

Mr. BARBOUR. But the district court of that district has jurisdiction and control of the action. Could it not be provided here that the district court of the district in which the plaintiff resides should also have jurisdiction?

Mr. DENISON. I do not think you can drag a defendant from one State to another as a defendant in a civil suit.

Mr. BARBOUR. This is intended to be a protection to the man who has bought fraudulent stock, where a man in New York has sold stock to a man in Missouri, for example. Missouri has been referred to as the residence of the man who might buy this bogus stock. In such case the Missouri man must go to New York and sue in the district court where the defendant resides.

Mr. DENISON. I do not think any other provision would stand the legal test. You can not drag a defendant from one State to another simply because a plaintiff resides in a particular State. I think I am right about that. That is the view of those who advised with me in the preparation of this bill.

Mr. BARBOUR. I would say to the gentleman that I have not looked into the legal phase of it, but in reading this section it occurred to me this would not offer any protection at all to the man who lived at a distance.

Mr. DENISON. That is true, but it is also true of all litigation. If people reside in different States, the plaintiff is obliged to go into a different State where service can be had on the defendant. You can not get service on the defendant outside the district in which he resides in the case of a civil suit.

Mr. BARBOUR. The gentleman thinks this is necessary?

Mr. DENISON. Yes. I think that language should be there.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Amendment offered by Mr. JONES of Texas: Page 11, line 23, strike out the remaining part of line 23, after the word "State," all of lines 24 and 25; and on page 12, line 1 and line 2, down to but not including the proviso, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "or United States court of competent jurisdiction."

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, the way this measure is worded the person defrauded would be compelled to go into the State or Federal court in the district of the residence of the defendant in order to secure redress. In many of these fraud cases the defendant can not be found. You can sometimes find something—money or property—that belongs to him. I know I have tried several cases brought for the cancellation of notes given for worthless so-called securities, when the defendant was nowhere to be found; I have brought suit and canceled notes and attached money and property in a bank, when the party complained about was in another State or in another district entirely. The way I have drafted my amendment the text will read: "Suit may be brought in any State or United States court of competent jurisdiction." That leaves it under the general law. Then if you can find any money that the man may have to his credit or any property that he may have in one district, even though he may have absconded and run off to escape the law, this would get him, and this would leave all the present machinery of the law available for use, and give to any State or Federal court of competent jurisdiction the right to handle the property.

It seems to me that would be furnishing complete protection, and would accomplish what the committee really intended to do. As the text now reads, if you want to go into the United States court you must go into the district in which the defendants or either of them "reside or are found." Now, suppose a man in a transaction that involves only $500 out in California should be defrauded by mail by somebody in New York. He could not afford to go to New York to sue for $500.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman read his amendment again? I did not hear it.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The amendment will read as follows:

Suit to recover such amount may be brought in any State or United States court of competent jurisdiction.

Then follows the proviso:

Mr. DENISON. The gentleman means State court or United States court.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I started to put it that way. I think this means any State or United States court.

Mr. DENISON. Put the word "court" after "State."

Mr. JONES of Texas. I ask unanimous consent to insert the word "court" after "State," so that it will read "any State court or United States court."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas modifies his amendment. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JONES of Texas: On page 11, line 23, after the word "court," strike out the remaining part of line 23 and all of lines 24 and 25, and on page 12, line 1 and line 2 down to but not including the proviso, and insert in lieu thereof "or United States court of competent jurisdiction."

Mr. DENISON. I think that amendment is all right. I have no objection to it.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be recognized in opposition to the amendment. I doubt whether it is wise to give the plaintiff the right to sue in any State in the United States other than defendant's State or in a State where he can be served by original notice.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Any court of competent jurisdiction.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Defendants have their rights as well as plaintiffs.

Mr. DENISON. This gives them all their rights.

Mr. RAMSEYER. But here is your California citizen, who claims to be defrauded in New York. He files his suit in California, and makes the New York defendant go all the way to California.

Mr. JONES of Texas. You can not do that under the present law. You would not have jurisdiction of the defendant. You have got to obtain jurisdiction of the defendant.

Mr. RAMSEYER. The way your amendment is written, would not that change the existing law?

Mr. JONES of Texas. No.

Mr. RAMSEYER. You can sue the defendant in the plaintiff's State if you get jurisdiction of him—that is, if you can serve process or original notice on him in plaintiff's State, and if the amount involved is below $3,000 you can sue to final judgment, but if the suit is for over $3,000 the defendant has a right to have it transferred to the Federal court. Now, after striking out that clause concerning the amount in controversy by the amendment, which the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] offered—that is, with respect to the amount in controversy—is not this section as the committee brought it in the law as it is to-day? And if so, why repeat it here?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. If the gentleman will yield there, the gentleman from Texas brought up this situation, where you might not be able to locate the defendant or to find him for service, but you might be able to locate property in the State where the plaintiff resided, thereby getting jurisdiction of the suit, instead of the plaintiff being compelled to bring suit in the place where the defendant resided.

Mr. RAMSEYER. You can bring an action in rem in the State where defendant's property is located. You can attach property.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Not according to the committee provision.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to strike out all of section 7.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Amendment offered by Mr. McPHERSON: Page 11, beginning with line 8, strike out all of section 7.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, it appears to me that this whole provision of section 7 is so foreign to any power we have that it makes us ridiculous to pass it. We are all familiar with the fact that each State creates local causes of action for local wrongs. Each State in the Union has either adopted the common law or has created a cause of action for fraud or deceit, and provided the damages to be awarded. They have regulated the liability of those who cooperate with the wrongdoers in the perpetration of the fraud. This act undertakes in this situation, growing out of these transactions, to punish the sending of mail matter or telegraph messages to induce a person to make the bargain. Section 7 in no way relates to the wrong we are dealing with, but undertakes to award damages and create a cause of action for the fraud that might be in part or in whole induced by the sending of these messages. In fact, as I understand it, if we pass this act it will be a crime to use the mails, even though the sender did not succeed in making the sale, if he used the mails at all for that purpose, if he sent a letter, and, of course, we have jurisdiction over interstate messages. But we have not any jurisdiction to say that if somebody goes down into Illinois and sells a citizen there some stock by misrepresenting its value, either by mail or orally or otherwise, we have no right to say that not only that person shall be liable in damages, but that he shall be criminally liable. Yet we undertake to say that every person who makes a sale, every solicitor, agent, or broker for the seller who knowingly performs any act which contributes to bring about the sale, shall be liable. We do not even require that these brokers or other persons shall have any knowledge of the fact that the stock is fraudulent, and, as the gentleman from Minnesota has illustrated, it might not be fraudulent, it might not be valueless. As has been stated, the wrong might consist in having failed to comply with the State law, while the stock itself might have value; but the crime would be complete because the State regulations had not been complied with.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McPHERSON. In a moment. We say that every person who acted as agent or broker for the seller, or who knowingly performed any act which contributed to bring about the sale—that is, introduced the purchaser to the seller, even if he knew that 20 years ago he was a good citizen—and every person who knowingly participated in the benefits or proceeds of the sale or contract, shall be jointly and severally liable to such purchaser. I say that that would change the rule of law in every State of the Union in actions of fraud. Do you contend that in Congress we can repeal the police regulations or local laws creating legal causes of action?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McPHERSON. I will.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Does the gentleman base his objection to the section on the ground that he does not think it within the power of Congress, that it is unconstitutional, or does he base it on the ground that he does not think it wise?

Mr. McPHERSON. I base it on both grounds. I say there is no question in my mind that we have no right to create a cause of action for legal fraud in Illinois or Missouri.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. If I can get some time I will answer that.

Mr. McPHERSON. I have read the gentleman's argument. He refers to the game laws, where the United States punishes persons for transporting game that was unlawfully taken. That thing which we lawfully had the authority over is the transporting of the game. But no case, in my judgment, can be cited where Congress lawfully undertakes to usurp the police powers of a community successfully, or where Congress was held authorized to destroy the local laws of a State regulating and governing local transactions.

Mr. DENISON. Is the gentleman familiar with the Clayton Antitrust Act?

Mr. McPHERSON. I am.

Mr. DENISON. This provision is identical with that, only in the Clayton antitrust law they collect treble damages.

Mr. McPHERSON. Not at all; the act punished in the Clayton Antitrust Act is the conspiracy, combination, or restraint of trade and commerce, and that act was clearly within the jurisdiction of Congress. The loss resulting from the violation of the act, but the violation of the act in this case is the sending of a letter. You undertake to regulate the proceedings and recover damages from the sale of stock. It is not the sale of the stock which the gentleman says he is trying to punish. It is the sending of the means or inducement to make the sale; it is the use of the mails of the country to deceive people into buying the stock that this bill is designed to punish, and to that extent we have authority over it, because we have a right to punish a man for sending through the mails something intending to deceive or defraud somebody.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has again expired.

Mr. DENISON. I ask that the gentleman from Missouri may have two minutes more, as I desire to ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DENISON. Among other things, the Clayton Antitrust Act says:

That it shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce in the course of such commerce to lease or make a sale or contract for sale of goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, supplies, or other commodities, whether patented or unpatented, for use, consumption, or resale within the United States or any Territory thereof.

That is one of the prohibitions between persons of different States. Now, section 4 of the Clayton Act provides:

That any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found or has an agent, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee.

The gentleman from Minnesota said that such a thing never was heard of, but here is the exact provision in the Clayton Antitrust Act. In fact, the provision in this act was taken from the Clayton Antitrust Act.

Mr. McPHERSON. But there is a difference in the two situations. One is a provision for recovering treble damages for doing an act that Congress had a right to forbid and punish, but Congress has no right to forbid or create a cause of action by some one in Illinois deceiving some man in another State as to his loss or injury.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McPHERSON. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman contend that Congress has no right to forbid the sale of worthless stock in the State of Minnesota?

Mr. McPHERSON. I say no.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, it has not. That is the theory on which this is based.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 8, after the word "sale," where it occurs the second time, insert "induced by misrepresentation or fraud."

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that we ought not to write a statute that arbitrarily directs the recovery of money without reference to whether there was any intentional wrong or not. The purchaser of securities may under this statute recover regardless of anything of the kind. That is not just. I have already pointed out that under any number of State statutes a person would become liable under this section where there is no intention of fraud. I think I understand this bill, though I know that some gentlemen here say I do not. I have had occasion to study this subject as much, perhaps, as the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. We had hearings on this subject before the Judiciary Committee and had the various State statutes before us. I know that in many instances a person may fail to comply strictly with the law, though he tries to comply, in trying to file the statements required by the State statutes. If he fails to comply in describing his security, he becomes technically guilty under the State laws. In many of those State laws only slight penalties are applied. In this bill the slightest violation is subject to very drastic penalties. It seems to me that when you give the one who does the purchasing of this stock the right to recover in case the stock has been misrepresented to him, or in case there has been fraud, it is as far as we ought to go. What Congress ought to give is relief in case of injustice, and not put a premium to be paid the purchaser on some technical violations of the statutes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, if the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] be adopted, it seems to me that it takes away from this act one of its best features. The act is not intended as a Federal blue sky law, as has been many times stated. It is intended to help the States enforce their laws and to help the people of the States when they are trying to protect themselves against a certain class of securities to extend the aid of the Federal Government, so that by means of interstate commerce something shall not be done in that State which could not be done if it were not for the general laws regulating interstate commerce.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman is familiar with the various State statutes?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Somewhat.

Mr. WALSH. Against these offenses? Do they not permit a recovery from the person who sells these worthless securities?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes; most of them do. I have one in my hand now which I intended to cite as an illustration.

Mr. WALSH. If that be so, what jurisdiction has Congress to enact legislation permitting a recovery under these contracts in the United States courts?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. If the gentleman from Massachusetts will not interrupt for a moment I think I can make that plain. Let me call attention to the act of the State of Illinois which I have in my hand, which contains a provision that every sale and contract of sale made in violation of any of the provisions of the act shall be void at the election of the purchaser. It then goes on and gives a right of action just as this bill does. That act was held to be valid and constitutional in a case in the 300 Illinois, in which the whole ground was covered as to whether that was a valid exercise of the police powers of the State. A similar statute in Ohio, a similar statute in Michigan, a similar statute in South Dakota, were all held to be valid exercises of the police power of the State by the Supreme Court of the United States in the 242 United States report. These authorities I have cited in my remarks in yesterday's RECORD. If that is true, then the Supreme Courts, not only of the States but of the United States, have recognized the fact that the States can constitutionally enact that sort of legislation. The same cases and other cases have laid down the general rule, and I have no doubt that it is the law, that what States can do the United States can do in the exercise and enforcement of its laws. Let me read a brief statement from Cooley:

It is not doubted that Congress has the power to go beyond the general regulations of commerce which it is accustomed to establish, and to descend to the most minute directions, if it shall be deemed advisable. * * * Congress may establish police regulations, as well as the States. (Cooley's Cons. Lim., p. 856, 7th ed.)

That is the law so far as the constitutional features of this section are concerned, and there is no doubt that Congress can enact this kind of legislation and that it is valid and constitutional. The only question is whether it is wise to do so.

Mr. WALSH. Is this a law forbidding the sale of worthless securities in Missouri or any one of the 48 States?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. It is not.

Mr. WALSH. Then, if it is not a law, how can you write a section into the bill punishing the sale in those States or setting aside a contract for the sale?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Such a provision can be written into the law in exactly the same way that you can write a criminal penalty for its violation. It is an additional provision in the way of police regulation which the Congress is seeking to make for the purpose of enforcing that law. That sort of provision has been made in many Federal laws. Some provide for the confiscation of property and vessels, some for treble damages, as in the Clayton Antitrust Act, and some provide other remedies. In other words, it is a police regulation which we have a right to make if we want to. It is only a question of whether we ought to do it or not.

In my view of the case I think it is a wise provision and will help stamp out this thing. If you simply make it a criminal act you have got to catch the man and punish him, and if you put in the provision by which the man who is defrauded can sue and get his money back it will help enforce this act.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I will.

Mr. BURTNESS. Of course, this section does not apply to the sale made locally within the State?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. No; not at all. It is simply an interstate transaction when the security goes into another State.

Mr. BURTNESS. One other question. Of course, as I understand it, the fundamental part of this legislation is that you are giving a person within a State who has bought a fraudulent security in violation of this law the same right as he would have substantially if that sale had been completed within his own State; that is the right he would have under the existing law.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Substantially so.

Mr. BURTNESS. Coming down to this particular section, it is true, is it not, that this section may give some different and additional rights perhaps in some cases——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I would ask for one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BURTNESS. My point is this; that if you had followed the theory of this bill to its logical conclusion it seems to me section 7 should have gone to the extent of giving the resident of the State the same right he would have had if the sale had been completed within his State.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Perhaps so. But the fact that the relief given by this provision and that given by the State laws differ does not create a legal objection to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri to strike out the section.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the "noes" appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. WALSH) there were—ayes 18, noes 30.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. That any person or persons violating any of the provisions of sections 2 or 3 of this act may be tried and punished either (1) in the district in which such unlawful matter was deposited or caused to be deposited in the mails of the United States, or was delivered or caused to be delivered to the railroad company, express company, telegraph company, telephone company, or other agency of interstate commerce; or (2) in the district in or to which it was caused to be carried, sent, transmitted, or transported for delivery, according to the direction thereon; or (3) in the district in which it was caused by such person or persons to be delivered to the person or persons to whom it was addressed, sent, or consigned.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, it seems to me that the argument in favor of this bill is a little inconsistent and is illustrated by the argument just had on the preceding section and which doubtless will be held on this section if there is going to be further argument upon it. This bill is justified on the theory that it is desirable and very meritorious in that we ought to prevent the sales of fraudulent securities. We all agree that that is "a consummation devoutly to be wished." And yet when these very severe penalties are considered, gentlemen rise here and say, "Oh, no; the bill goes beyond that. We are going to do more than punish frauds. We are going to punish acts which are unlawful merely because they are prohibited by the laws of this or that State." The gentleman from Minnesota has called our attention to the fact that under many of these laws the thing is unlawful merely because certain statements have not been filed, an offense certainly not involving any moral wrong at all. My State of Colorado is referred to in the committee's report as one of the few States which has no "blue-sky" law. It is not because the matter has not been very carefully considered in my State by several legislatures. It has been very thoroughly gone over.

It is not because in my State there is any greater disposition than in any other to allow fraudulent transactions, but because there, on account of the nature of a particular business which is extensively carried on in that State, we realize there ought to be a distinction between a business which is fraudulent and one which is merely speculative. Now, every mine was at one time a prospect, though many of them have added millions of dollars to our national wealth. Every mine is yet throughout its entire history largely speculative, even when considerable blocks of ore are in sight. But when the mine was started no man could tell what there was in the ground. The mere discovery of the lode was all they had. And no man can tell when an abundant lode may pinch out entirely. A man locates an oil well in good faith on the evidence of the geologic structure and the history of the vicinity. He locates a mine in the same way. The development of either requires much capital and no man can tell with certainty whether it will be productive. And yet the Government itself encourages that kind of investment.

We recognize claims to mining locations on public lands. We grant title to such claims as the just reward of arduous toil and splendid confidence. We encourage exploration for minerals in order to develop a most important industry. Mining is one of the cleanest businesses in the world. It creates new wealth. It takes away from no man anything which he had. It is a perfectly legitimate and honorable business, even though by its nature it is highly speculative. You are putting into these bills a series of drastic penalties for engaging in acts that involve no moral turpitude, acts that are not in any degree fraudulent, merely because they happen to be forbidden by the laws of some States. Now, it would be impossible for the average mining company, organized in the utmost good faith, to comply with the laws of many States, because those States, having developed different kinds of business on a different theory, require a certain showing of visible assets. Nobody could make a very certain showing of the visible assets of a mine. Yet very few mining enterprises are fraudulent. Many of them may be ill-advised, but the number of actually fraudulent cases is exceedingly small. These corporations are run largely, very often, by poor men. Here is a group of men who form a little corporation, and they have a few friends in the East who are interested with them. Along comes a time when they need $5,000 or $10,000 for further development. They write to their friends in the East and say, "Will you chip in with us? Send us your share," which is $500, perhaps; and they issue stock in return for such advances. If they want to accomplish that after this bill is passed they would either have to comply with the laws of 39 States, filing certain papers and making a showing of visible, definitely ascertained assets, which they could not show, although they are in a business that is honest and legitimate and necessary, or else they would have to comply with the other impossible requirement of being listed on the Boston, New York, or Chicago Stock Exchanges. I think the argument in favor of the bill and in favor of this section is wrong. I appreciate the public spirit and the beneficent purpose of its advocates, but I fear that while they will help to suppress a few frauds they will practically stop the necessary development of thousands of legitimate enterprises which are carried on in the utmost good faith and are none the less meritorious because they are, admittedly, a venture.

It was ventures, it was venturesome courage, which developed our country. Let us find some other way to prevent fraud than by choking this spirit, which is one of our finest national assets.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out entire section 8.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Amendment offered by Mr. LONDON: Page 12, beginning on line 5, strike out section 8.

Mr. LONDON. May I ask the chairman of the committee whether there is any precedent in any law for the provisions contained in this section?

Mr. DENISON. This section is taken from the postal laws providing for the punishment of cases of fraud. It is taken literally from present postal laws.

Mr. LONDON. Relating to fraud?

Mr. DENISON. Yes. It was taken after consultation with the Post Office Department.

Mr. LONDON. I distinctly recall that in a case of libel involving one of our New York newspapers the courts held that the defendant could be tried only in the place where the paper was published, not where it was being distributed.

Mr. DENISON. The provisions of the present postal laws have been tested, tried, and found satisfactory, and thus that provision was followed in this act.

Mr. LONDON. I think it is an extremely oppressive provision. Under this section a defendant who may have violated a law not involving any moral turpitude, involving a mere violation of a regulation of a State, may find himself transported from the Pacific coast to the Atlantic coast, or from New York to Texas, to be tried for an offense which is not in itself immoral but which is a statutory offense.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. I do.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, the gentleman has in mind that the almighty dollar must be protected.

Mr. LONDON. I have not that exactly in mind. My almighty is mightier than the almighty dollar. I think this is an extremely oppressive measure and we should cut it out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Certified copies of the record of, or certificates with respect to, the listing of securities or of striking them from a stock exchange list given under seal by the secretary of such stock exchange under oath, and certified copies or certificates of the approval, nonapproval, termination, or cancellation of the right to sell securities, given under official seal by the securities commission or other proper administrative officer of any State, Terrtiory, District, shall, when properly authenticated, be prima facie evidence, in any court, of the truth of the contents thereof.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, the word "Territory" is misspelled. I ask unanimous consent that it be corrected.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DENISON: On page 13, line 8, strike out the misspelled word "Terrtiory" and insert the correctly spelled word "Territory."

Mr. DENISON. And also insert the word "or" after "Territory."

The Clerk read as follows:

And also insert, after the word "Territory," the word "or."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. That within 60 days after this act becomes effective, the Attorney General of the United States shall procure from the various States copies of their laws and regulations relating to the offering for sale and the sale of securities, and thereafter he shall procure copies of any amendments to or changes in the laws and regulations as they occur. Such information, so procured, shall be kept on file in the Department of Justice and shall be compiled, published, and communicated to the various United States attorneys by said department in such form and at such times as the Attorney General may direct. Such compilations shall be furnished any person, upon written application, under such reasonable terms, rules, and regulations as the Attorney General may provide.

Mr. WALSH. Why should not this be the Postmaster General who has this information? This is for violating the postal laws, and the solicitor of the Post Office Department passes on all these questions before they get to the Department of Justice.

Mr. DENISON. Perhaps the gentleman from Massachusetts does not fully realize that the Post Office Department is given no authority whatever in the administration of this act. As the act was originally drafted it contained a mail exclusion provision, and upon consideration by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce that was excluded. The enforcement of this act was placed entirely in the Department of Justice, and the Postmaster General is given no power whatever in connection with it. The committee did not approve of giving any more power to the Postmaster General in connection with this act.

Mr. WALSH. But the gentleman knows that every infraction of the postal laws is first passed upon by the Post Office Department through the solicitor before it goes over to the Attorney General.

Mr. DENISON. But technically speaking this is no infraction of the postal laws.

Mr. WALSH. That is what you were telling us all along, that you were passing this act so as to make it a violation of the postal laws, and denying to these people the use of the mail. Now you have got past that section, section 7, and another characteristic—and I presume the true characteristic—of the bill makes its appearance. I was wondering, if this is a postal violation law, why should not the Post Office Department pass upon it, as they do upon other violations of the postal laws, before passing it on to the Attorney General?

Mr. DENISON. This bill is for the purpose of preventing the sending through the mails certain things, or sending by express certain things, or by freight, or by telegraph or telephone messages which are intended for certain purposes. The enforcement of the act is placed in the Department of Justice, and I think properly so. This bill does not create a bureau or job or position of any kind, but places its enforcement in the hands of the Attorney General, and I think inasmuch as the enforcement of it is in the Department of Justice and the various district attorneys, the Department of Justice ought to secure this information and furnish it to the district attorneys. If this bill becomes a law, its real value, after all, will depend largely upon the good faith and the ability and the conscientious devotion to duty of the Attorney General and the different United States district attorneys. But, of course, they should be promptly supplied with a compilation of the State laws.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I failed, when we were considering one of the sections, to move to make a slight amendment, which I ask unanimous consent to do now. I ask unanimous consent to return to page 7, subdivision h, for the purpose of offering an amendment which I had agreed with several Members I would offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to return to page 7 for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, what is the amendment?

Mr. DENISON. To change the word "sixty," in line 5, to the word "seventy."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois will offer his amendment.

Mr. DENISON. It is in line 5, page 7, to change the word "sixty" to the word "seventy."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DENISON: Page 7, line 5, strike out the figures "60" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "70."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with the various amendments to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10598) to prevent the use of the United States mails and other agencies of interstate commerce for transporting and for promoting or procuring the sale of securities contrary to the laws of the States, and for other purposes, and providing penalties for the violation thereof, had instructed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to the final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put the amendments in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. DENISON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL MONDAY NEXT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MINORITY VIEWS ON ARMY AND NAVY PERSONNEL BILL.

Mr. KRAUS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the minority of the committee appointed to consider H. R. 10972 have the time for filing their views extended to include Monday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the minority of the committee on the Army and Navy personnel bill have their time extended until Monday next to file their views. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 4 minutes p. m.) the House, under the order previously adopted, adjourned until Monday, May 1, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. WEBSTER: Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. H. R. 10531. A bill to distribute the commissioned line and engineer officers of the Coast Guard in grades, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 934). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. STEENERSON: Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. H. R. 11379. A bill authorizing and directing the Postmaster General to permit the use of special canceling stamps in the post offices of the first class in the State of Arkansas, bearing the words and figures "Visit Arkansas State Fair and Exposition, October 4–14, 1922"; with amendments (Rept. No. 938). Referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, April 29, 1922.

(Legislative day of Thursday, April 20, 1922.)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

NAVAL PETROLEUM RESERVE IN WYOMING (S. DOC. NO. 196).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in further response to Senate Resolution 277, relating to naval petroleum reserve No. 3, Wyoming No. 1, commonly known as the "Teapot Dome," copy of a contract between the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Mammoth Oil Co., executed April 7, 1922, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 10598) to prevent the use of the United States mails and other agencies of interstate commerce for transporting and for promoting or procuring the sale of securities contrary to the laws of the States, and for other purposes, and providing penalties for the violation thereof, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

FISCAL AFFAIRS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask permission to submit a concurrent resolution and have it read and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 23) was read and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia as follows:

Whereas the people of the District of Columbia have paid into the Treasury of the United States during the last few years nearly $5,000,000 more than they have been required to pay toward the expenses of the District; and

Whereas the use of this money by or on behalf of the District is denied for the reason, among others, that advancements have been made without interest from time to time during the last 50 years by the National Government for the benefit of the District, and that revenues which in equity belong to the United States have gone to the credit of the District; and

Whereas for these reasons and others it is claimed that the District of Columbia, instead of being entitled to a credit of nearly $5,000,000, is in equity indebted to the United States: Now, therefore, for the purpose of ascertaining and determining the amount, if any, to which the District is entitled from the United States, or the amount, if any, which it may owe to the United States, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That a joint committee of three Senators, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and three Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, is hereby created and authorized and directed to ascertain and determine what, if any, indebtedness there may be owing to the United States from the District of Columbia, or what, if any, indebtedness there may be owing to the District of Columbia from the United States, growing out of transactions or relations existing between them since the passage of the organic act of 1878. The committee in reaching a conclusion shall consider not only legal but equitable claims and obligations, and shall report its conclusions and recommendations to each House of Congress, on or before the first Monday in January, 1923. The committee is authorized to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ such stenographic, clerical, and expert assistance as may be necessary, and to pay for the same upon vouchers signed by the chairman, one-half out of the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives. The committee is authorized and directed to avail itself of the services of the Bureau of Efficiency and such expert and legal help of the Treasury Department and of the District of Columbia as it may deem practicable so to do.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN PUBLIC LAND PATENTEES IN MINNESOTA.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10007) for the relief of certain persons to whom, or their predecessors, patents were issued to public lands in the State of Minnesota under an erroneous survey made in 1876. It is a local bill relating to some lands in Minnesota and is approved by the department. It will provoke no discussion. It relates purely to a local matter in Minnesota.

Mr. KING. I ask the Senator whether it relates to any Indian lands of the Chippewas or any lands which any of the Chippewa Indians claim?

Mr. NELSON. No; it does not relate to Indian lands. It relates to a resurvey of the lakes which have been drained.

Mr. KING. It is not involved in any claims made by the Indians or any lands taken from the Chippewa Indians?

Mr. NELSON. No; not at all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to sell for cash at $1.25 per acre any unsurveyed land which may on resurvey be found to exist in sections 28 and 33, in township 149, range 40 west, fifth principal meridian, in the State of Minnesota, to those persons who in good faith, by themselves and their predecessors in interest, have heretofore acquired, occupied, and improved such lands under the public land laws in accordance with a Government survey made in 1876; and the Secretary of the Interior may in like manner on principles of equity adjust, settle, and confirm by patent the title to any lands in said area heretofore claimed, occupied, and improved under descriptions which on resurvey are found to be erroneous: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall have the effect of defeating the rights of any other person or persons, which may have attached to such lands or any part thereof.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to make any rules and regulations necessary to carry out and effect the purpose of this act, and any person or persons claiming any benefits hereof shall make the required payments and perform such other acts as may be necessary or required within the time fixed in the regulations; otherwise any right or advantage claimed under this act shall be forfeited.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CALL OF THE ROLL.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. FLETCHER. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. TRAMMELL] is unavoidably absent. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. HEFLIN. My colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is absent on account of illness in his family. I ask that this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] is necessarily absent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-three Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented resolutions of the Lapeer County (Mich.) Farm Bureau, protesting against the proposed reduction of the appropriation for maintenance of agricultural extension work in the United States, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. NELSON presented resolutions of the Minnesota State Board of Health, favoring the enactment of legislation to control the traffic in narcotic drugs, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ODDIE presented resolutions adopted by Division No. 158, International Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, of Sparks, Nev., favoring the enactment of legislation authorizing the Interstate Commerce Commission to approve or disapprove contracts involving the construction or repair of equipment of railroads engaged in interstate commerce, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. LODGE presented the following resolutions of the Legislature of Massachusetts, which were referred to the Committee on Finance:

THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS,
In the year 1922.

An order urging upon Congress the necessity and importance of acquiring or establishing within the Commonwealth of Massachusetts a Government hospital for the care, restoration, and relief of disabled veterans of the World War.

Ordered, That whereas, as a result of the World War, a large number of citizens in the Commonwealth who saw active service are to-day suffering from various disabilities incurred in the course of such service; some are physically incapacitated; others are mentally incapacitated; many of the disabilities are of a temporary nature; and

Whereas many of these worthy veterans find themselves to-day without proper care, either because of inadequate means of relief or lack of available infirmary facilities; and

Whereas the crowded condition of the State institutions renders the Commonwealth incapable of supplying the needs of this group of deserving veterans, and their condition therefore presents to the State a serious problem: Therefore be it

Ordered, That the general court urges upon Congress the necessity and importance of acquiring or establishing within the Commonwealth a Government hospital to be devoted to the care, restoration, and relief of disabled veterans; and be it further Ordered, That copies of this order be sent by the secretary of the Commonwealth to the Presiding Officers of both branches of Congress and to the Members thereof from this Commonwealth.

In senate adopted April 17, 1922.

In house of representatives adopted, in concurrence, April 18, 1922.

A true copy.

Attest:

F. W. COOK,
Secretary of the Commonwealth.

Mr. LODGE also presented resolutions and telegrams in the nature of petitions of the Ladies' Auxiliary of the Hebrew Free School, Mrs. A. Zelig, president, Haverhill, Mass.; committee, Hebrew Free School, Eli Rosengard, chairman, Haverhill, Mass.; Hebrew Teachers' Union, of New York City, K. Whiteman, secretary; Bronx Committee of the American Jewish Physicians, Dentists, and Pharmacists, Dr. Samuel Boorstein, chairman, New York City; board of directors of the Talmud Torah Associations of New Jersey, S. Nissenbaum, president, Jersey City, N. J., praying for the passage of Senate Joint Resolution 191, favoring the establishment in Palestine of the national home for the Jewish people, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SPENCER presented a resolution adopted by the Kirksville Presbytery, at Green City, Mo., favoring the enactment of legislation providing for uniform marriage and divorce laws, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Kirksville Presbytery, at Green City, Mo., favoring the enactment of legislation to prohibit polygamy, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Kirksville Presbytery, at Green City, Mo., favoring the enactment of legislation providing for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a resolution unanimously adopted by the Presbytery of St. Louis, at St. Louis, Mo., favoring the enactment of legislation to prohibit sectarian appropriations, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of members of the Carnation Club, of Kansas City, Mo., praying for the enactment of the Dyer antilynching bill, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

THE MUSCLE SHOALS PROJECT.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, at a mass meeting of the people of Georgia, held in Atlanta, Ga., certain resolutions were adopted in regard to Muscle Shoals, which I ask may be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolved by the people of Georgia in State mass meeting assembled, on April 22, 1922, That we earnestly indorse the offer of Henry Ford and urge its acceptance by Congress without further delay. The country has begun to realize that upon water power we must rely for the solutions of the problems of transportation, fuel, heat, and industry. The Ford offer carries into effect the objective sought by Congress in the passage of the national defense act of 1916. It puts the fixation of air nitrogen upon a steady and increasing basis, makes the United States independent in war, and provides the farmer with fertilizers at the lowest possible cost in time of peace. In our opinion there is no other offer comparable to that made by Henry Ford, and further delay would be both unwise and unnecessary.

Resolved further, That in our opinion the failure of Congress to commence work on Muscle Shoals this summer would mean another year's delay to the millions of unemployed and the farmers of the United States, who are demanding that Congress shall at once carry out its original purpose, formerly declared, so as to render the farmers, as well as the United States, independent of Chilean nitrate fields.

Resolved, That we oppose the offer of the Alabama Power Co., as well as the offers made by other corporations or persons, as not being comparable to the offer made by Henry Ford, and not in the interests of the public welfare. We have no disposition to interfere with the rights of Congress to give the offers submitted proper consideration, but in our opinion further delay would only be for the purpose of defeating the only offer which, in our judgment, is comprehensive and liberal for the people of the United States, the offer of Henry Ford.

Resolved, That we urge upon the Senators and Representatives in Congress that they shall act immediately upon this proposition, and that they shall accept for the American people, whom they represent, the offer of Henry Ford, so that this great work shall start in the development of Muscle Shoals without further delay.

REPORTS OF THE COMMITTEE ON CLAIMS.

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 314) for the relief of Forrest R. Black, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 677) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 858) for the relief of Alfred P. Reck, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 678) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SPENCER:

A bill (S. 3524) to authorize the setting aside of certain tribal lands within the Quinault Indian Reservation, in Washington, for lighthouse purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 3525) for the relief of Alvira E. Poindexter, widow of James N. Poindexter, for losses sustained during the Rogue River Indian outbreak in southern Oregon in 1855; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 518. An act to carry out the provisions of an act approved July 1, 1902, known as the act entitled "An act to accept, ratify, and confirm a proposed agreement submitted by the Kansas or Kaw Indians of Oklahoma, and for other purposes," and to provide for a settlement to Addie May Auld and Archie William Auld, who were enrolled as members of the said tribe after the lands and moneys of said tribe had been divided.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 10598) to prevent the use of the United States mails and other agencies of interstate commerce for transporting and for promoting or procuring the sale of securities contrary to the laws of the States, and for other purposes, and providing penalties for the violation thereof, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

ADDRESS BY THE VICE PRESIDENT.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, on Thursday, April 27, the Vice President of the United States delivered a very eloquent and splendid address at the dedication of the monument to General Grant. It is broad in its spirit and generous in its expressions regarding the brave soldiers of that great war. It is a notable contribution to the literature of the country because of its broad, generous, manly spirit. I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD in the regular RECORD type.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type, as follows:

At the dedication of the monument to Gen. Ulysses S. Grant, at Washington, Thursday, April 27, at 2.30 o'clock p. m., Vice President Calvin Coolidge spoke as follows:

"The world has always worshipped power. As in their humblest beginnings mankind stood in wonder before the forces of nature, so now in their highest development they stand in reverence before the figure of genius. It is in response to an increasing sentiment of gratitude and patriotism that national action has set apart this day to observe the centennial anniversary of the birth of a great American who was sent into the world endowed with a greatness easy to understand yet difficult to describe, the highest type of intellectual power—simplicity and directness—the highest type of character—fidelity and honesty. He will forever hold the admiration of a people in whom these qualities abide. By the authority of the law of the land, with the approving loyalty of all his fellow countrymen, in the shadow of the dome of the Capitol which his work proved and glorified, fittingly flanked on either side by a group of soldiers in action, looking out toward the monuments of Washington and Lincoln, this statue rises to the memory of Gen. Ulysses Simpson Grant. It is here because a great people responded to a great man.

"Such greatness did not spring into being in a generation. There lay behind it a wide sweep of ancestry representing the blood of those who had set the standard of civilization and borne its burdens for a thousand years. Into his boyhood there came little which was uncommon. He had the ordinary experiences of the son of an average home maintained by a moderately prosperous business.

"He went to West Point not so much with the purpose of becoming a soldier as from a desire to secure an education. He liked horses and rode well. He did not appear brilliant, but he had industry. He worked. He made progress. He had that common sense which overcomes obstacles. As a student he is worthy alike of the careful consideration of the young men of the present day and of those who are intrusted with their training.

"After his graduation he remained in the Army for 11 years, rising to the rank of captain. He served through the Mexican War, part of the time as quartermaster and commissary of his regiment. He demonstrated his personal courage by bearing dispatches on horseback over a course which was under heavy fire. In 1854 he voluntarily retired from the Army, and the Secretary of War, Jefferson Davis, refused to reconsider the acceptance of his resignation. Destiny sent him to private life where he could better feel the rising tide of freedom.

"The next few years he spent as a farmer and a business man. He still worked hard, but he did not prosper, scarcely making a living. He had little taste for small things; it required an emergency to call forth his powers.

"The great crisis found him in Illinois employed in his father's leather business. 'Whatever may have been my political opinions before,' he declared, 'I have but one sentiment now. That is, we have a Government and laws and a flag and they must all be sustained.' He engaged in recruiting and offered his services to the War Department, but received no reply. He sought an interview with McClellan but was unable to see him. Soon, however, being appointed colonel of the Twenty-first Illinois Regiment by Governor Yates, he took command in a speech of five words: 'Men, go to your quarters.' Within four years he was to be recognized as the greatest soldier in the world.

"His regiment was soon disciplined and he was on the march. During the summer Lincoln commissioned him a brigadier general of volunteers. In the following February he captured Fort Henry and Fort Donelson. This was one of the first important victories and it was received with a wild enthusiasm. Grant was at once made a major general of volunteers. During the remainder of 1862 he fought the somewhat ineffective Battle of Pittsburg Landing. A little later he was placed in command of the Department of Tennessee and was soon making his advance on Vicksburg. This town was surrendered on the morning of the 4th of July, 1863. Within a week the Mississippi River was under Union control. The Nation celebrated the double victories of Gettysburg and Vicksburg. Grant was made major general in the Regular Army.

"The campaign for the year closed with the Battle of Lookout Mountain and the heroic storming of Missionary Ridge, relieving Chattanooga. Here Grant demonstrated his great military genius both of plan and execution.

"The following March he was called to the White House and made lieutenant general of the Armies of the United States. He took command of the Army of the Potomac. Then followed blow on blow from the Wilderness to Appomattox. A campaign of a year brought success and victory. His losses were great, but they had been greater during three years of failure. The sacrifices of life had been larger when the result had been little more than a call for more men than they were now when at last the bands could play 'Home Sweet Home.'

"He immediately hastened to Washington where he was received by the President and the people with those expressions of joy which only the end of a war can bring. His work finished, though the President had invited him to attend the theater, he left the city on that fatal evening of April 14. He mourned the loss of Lincoln, but his first allegiance was to his country. His attitude toward Johnson was all that could be required of a general toward his Commander in Chief, until the President, seeking to embroil him in his own political disputes, charged him with bad faith. Although he had received from him a commission as General of the Armies of the United States, and acted a short time as his Secretary of War, he was thereafter in sympathy with those who sought to impeach the President. While Johnson sank in the public estimation, Grant rose, being unanimously nominated and handsomely elected President of the United States.

"He had little taste for political maneuvers. He found his eight years fell on a time of confusion, both of thought and action. He worked as best he could with the contending elements which made up the Congress. 'I shall have a policy to recommend,' he said, 'but none to enforce against the will of the people.' He secured a settlement with Great Britain for the Alabama claims and an apology from Spain for the Virginius affair. Although he broke with a well-meaning reform element of his party which supported Horace Greeley, he was triumphantly reelected. One of the important contributions which he made to the public service was his veto of the bill which provided for the inflation of the currency by issuing $400,000,000 in greenbacks. At a time when the political ideals of the country were very low, President Grant held to his own high standard of honorable public service. Through the contested-election case of Hayes and Tilden in 1876, he took a course marked by a high spirit of patriotism. 'No man worthy of the office of President,' he said, 'should be willing to hold it if counted in or placed there by fraud. Either party can afford to be disappointed in the result. The country can not afford to have the result tainted by the suspicion of illegal or false returns.' When the man who knew how to command armies took this position for the enforcement of the law the country stood behind him and peacefully accepted the decision of the electoral commission.

"His closing years were marked with great tragedy. Betrayed by one whom he trusted, he saw his property dissipated and large obligations incurred. A lingering and fatal malady added anguish of the body to the anguish of his soul.

"Never was he greater than in these last days. With high courage, without complaint, on a bed of pain, seeking to retrieve his losses, he was preparing his memoirs. Congress hastened to restore him to the rank and salary of a retired general of the Army. At last his writings were finished. He was still thinking of his country, not as a partisan but as a patriot; not even as the general of the armies he had led, but as an American. 'I have witnessed since my illness,' he wrote, 'just what I have wished to see since the war—harmony and good will between the sections.' While he was thus longing for the peace of his fellow countrymen the great and final peace was bestowed upon him.

"Great as he had been, his armies had been greater still. He had been served by officers of commanding ability. He never appeared to maintain for them anything but the most kindly feeling. The greater their ability, the greater was their attachment to him. But the rank and file were more wonderful still. In intelligence, in bravery, in patriotism, and, during the latter years of the war, in military capacity, no armies had ever surpassed those who fought the battles of the war between the States. Their ranks are thin now, but their spirit is undiminished. At an age when others would have quit the field, they remain still holding positions of commanding authority in the service of their countrymen, the soldiers of Lincoln and of Grant. As they supported him in the field their bronze forms support him here.

"Men are made in no small degree by their adversaries. Grant had great adversaries. They fought with a dash and a tenacity, with a gallantry and an enduring purpose which the world has known in Americans, and in Americans alone. At their head rode Gen. Robert E. Lee, marked with a purity of soul and a high sense of personal honor which no true American would ever stoop to question. No force ever quelled their intrepid spirit. They gave their loyalty voluntarily, or they did not give it at all. It is not so much the greatness of Grant as a soldier, but his greatness as a man; not so much his greatness in war as his greatness in peace, the consideration, the tenderness, the human sympathy which he showed toward them from the day of their submission, leaving to General Lee and his officers their side arms and to their men their own horses and baggage, which appealed to that sentiment of reconciliation which has long since been complete. It was not a humiliation, but an honor to remain under the sovereignty of a flag which was borne by such a commander.

"It was Lincoln who said of Grant: 'I can not spare this man. He fights.' It was Grant himself who said: 'Let us have peace.'

"Our country and the world may well consider the simplicity and directness which marked the greatness of General Grant. In war his object was the destruction of the opposing army. He knew that task was difficult. He knew that the price would be high; yet amid abuse and criticism, amid misunderstanding and jealousy, he did not alter his course. He paid the price. He accomplished the result. He wasted no time in attempting to find some substitute for victory. He held fast to the same principle in time of peace. Around him was the destruction which the war had wrought.

"The economic condition of the country was depressed by a great financial panic. He refused to seek refuge in any fictions. He knew that sound values and a sound economic condition could not be created by law alone, but only through the long and toilsome application of human effort put forth under wise law. He knew that his country could not legislate out its destiny, but must work out its destiny. He laid the foundation of national welfare, on which the Nation has stood unshaken in every time of storm and stress. His policy was simple and direct, and eternally true.

"In the important decisions of his life his fidelity and honesty are equally apparent. He was a soldier of his country. His every action was inspired by loyalty. 'Whatever may be the orders of my superiors and the law,' he wrote, 'I will execute. No man can be efficient as a commander who sets his own notions above the law and those whom he has sworn to obey.' When the conflict between President Johnson and the Congress became so acute that it threatened to result in force of arms, being asked which side he would take, he replied: 'That will depend entirely upon which is the revolutionary party.' He never betrayed a trust and he never deserted a friend. He considered that the true test of a friend was to stand by him when he was in need. When financial misfortunes overtook him, he discharged his obligations from whatever property he and his family could raise.

"Here was a man who lived the great realities of life. As Lincoln could put truth into words, so Grant could put truth into action. How truly he stands out as the great captain of a Republic. There was no artifice about him, no pretense, and no sham. Through and through he was genuine. He represented power.

"A grateful Republic has raised this monument not as a symbol of war, but as a symbol of peace. Not the false security which may come from temporizing, from compromise, or from evasion, but that true and enduring tranquillity which is the result of a victorious righteousness. The issues of the world must be met, and met squarely. The forces of evil do not disdain preparation, they are always prepared and always preparing. General Grant gave 15 years of his life to the military service of his country that he might be prepared to respond to a great crisis. The welfare of America, the cause of civilization will forever require the contribution of some part of the life of all our citizens to the natural, the necessary, and the inevitable demand for the defense of the right and the truth. There is no substitute for a militant freedom. The only alternative is submission and slavery.

"The generations shall pass in review before this symbol of a man who gave his service, who made his sacrifice, who endured his suffering for the welfare of humanity. They shall know his good works. They shall look to him with admiration and reverence. They shall be transformed into a like spirit. What he gave, America shall give."

NAVAL OIL RESERVE LEASES.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution upon which I addressed the Senate on yesterday, being Senate Resolution 282.

I desire to state that since I submitted the resolution in its original form on the 21st day of April, I have modified it, and I ask that the modified form of the resolution be now laid before the Senate as a substitute for the resolution which I originally presented.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Resolution 282, as modified by him. The Secretary will read the resolution, as modified, for the information of the Senate.

The reading clerk read Senate Resolution 282, which had been submitted by Mr. LA FOLLETTE on April 21, as modified, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior is directed to send to the Senate:

(a) Copies of all oil leases made by the Department of the Interior within naval oil reserve No. 1, and, separately, naval oil reserve No. 2, both in the State of California, and naval oil reserve No. 3, in the State of Wyoming, showing as to each the claim upon which the lease was based or issued; the name of the lessee; the date of the lease; the area of the leased property; the amount of the rent, royalty, bonus, and all other compensation paid and to be paid to the United States.

(b) All Executive orders and other papers in the files of the Department of the Interior and its bureaus, or copies thereof if the originals are not in the files, authorizing or regulating such leases, including correspondence or memoranda embodying or concerning all agreements, instructions, and requests by the President or the Navy Department as to the making of such leases and the terms thereof.

(c) All correspondence, papers, and files showing and concerning the applications of such leases and the action of the Department of the Interior and its bureaus thereon and upon all the several claims upon which such leases were based or issued, all in said naval reserves.

Resolved further, That the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys be authorized to investigate this entire subject of leases upon naval oil reserves, with particular reference to the protection of the rights and equities of the Government of the United States and the preservation of its natural resources, and to report its findings and recommendations to the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection at all to the immediate consideration of the resolution, but I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin to the fact that there is no provision made in the resolution for the expenses of carrying on the investigation provided for therein if such investigation shall prove to be extensive. I will say, however, to the Senator from Wisconsin that if there should develop any necessity for an appropriation for that purpose we can ask for it at the time when that becomes apparent.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That had already occurred to me, Mr. President. I should like to have present consideration of the resolution if I can get it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do.

Mr. McCUMBER. With the understanding that the consideration of the resolution will not lead to any prolonged debate, I have no objection.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have no desire to extend the debate at all. I am ready for a vote on the resolution at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Wisconsin that, so long as a report is being called for by the resolution on the general subject of naval oil reserves, the resolution might be made somewhat more comprehensive, and ask for a report at the same time upon the contracts for the drilling of oil wells on naval oil reserves, aside from the question of leasing, and the reasons for such contracts; also for a report on the question of the drilling of oil wells on private property adjacent to the naval oil reserves, the number of such wells, and the date when they were drilled. If the Senator from Wisconsin has no objection, I suggest the addition of a subparagraph to read as follows:

(d) And all contracts for drilling wells on naval oil reserves, date and terms of same, reasons therefor, and the number and date of the drilling of wells on private lands adjacent to the naval oil reserves.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have no objection to such an amendment, Mr. President.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I offer that amendment to the resolution.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Indeed, I am in favor of broadening the scope of the investigation which is proposed by the resolution to include everything that touches the subject and is material to it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, may I ask whether or not the department would have any information that it could submit to the Senate relative to wells drilled on private property?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Undoubtedly the department must have such information, since that is the reason assigned for the drilling of wells on the Government property.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If I may be permitted, I will suggest that if the Government is not in the possession of information with respect to that matter, under the resolution, which authorizes the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys to conduct an investigation, the committee would be able to secure such information.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I concede that may be true, but I can understand that possibly the department may have no information relative to such drilling.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Of course, if the department has no information, it will report that fact. I wish to explain the purpose of my amendment. Entirely outside of the question of the leasing of Government land, in California wells were sunk by private parties adjacent to naval oil reserves; and it was obvious that through those wells the Government supply of oil was being drained off. The only way of meeting that contingency that has been suggested was to drill corresponding wells upon Government land in order to draw from this common pool of underground oil at the same time and in a somewhat similar quantity.

Mr. NELSON rose.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Just one second. So the Government did proceed to call for the contracts for the drilling of the wells on the Government property because of the fact that wells were being sunk upon private property. Of course, the Government knew about it; the whole proceeding was based upon that knowledge, and I should like to know just what the circumstances are.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have no objection to securing any information that can be obtained. I was merely wondering if we were asking for something over which the department had no jurisdiction. I concede, of course, that under the authority given by the resolution to conduct an investigation the committee may look into all of these questions.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I simply rose to state that a report has already been submitted by the department concerning this matter, and that report indicates that the Government has considered the question of the oil being drained from Government lands by operations on adjoining private lands. The Government evidently has that information now, and no doubt a report on the subject can be secured.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask for a yea-and-nay vote on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I should like to know whether the amendment has been agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I accept the amendment, and I ask to have it stated at the desk, so that it may be clearly understood.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. In the resolution as modified, on page 2, after line 14, it is proposed to insert:

(d) And all contracts for drilling wells on naval oil reserves, date and terms of same, reasons therefor, and the number and date of the drilling of wells on private lands adjacent to oil reserves.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on agreeing to the modified resolution as amended, on which question the Senator from Wisconsin has requested the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] to the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER] and vote "yea."

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] to the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] and vote "yea."

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). Transferring my general pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], I vote "yea."

Mr. PHIPPS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] and vote "yea."

Mr. MCKELLAR (when the name of Mr. SHIELDS was called). My colleague [Mr. SHIELDS] is unavoidably detained from the city on business.

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STANFIELD] and vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CROW] and vote "yea."

Mr. HARRIS (when the name of Mr. WATSON of Georgia was called). I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. WATSON of Georgia] is absent on account of illness.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I have a pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW], which I transfer to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], and vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. HARRIS. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] to the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and vote "yea."

Mr. COLT. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH of Montana (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN], who, I observe, is absent from the Chamber. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] to the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and vote "yea."

Mr. ERNST (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] to the junior Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. CAMERON] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. WATSON]; and

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

The result was announced—yeas 58, nays 0, as follows:

YEAS—58.

So the modified resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, while I did not desire to speak before the adoption of this resolution, I want to say a word or two now about it.

It has been a great surprise to me to know that our statutes are in the condition claimed by the Secretary of the Interior. He says, in his reply to the resolution presented by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK], that an administrative department of the Government is authorized by an item in the naval appropriation bill of 1920 to make a radical change in the policy of conservation which the United States had entered upon many years ago. That was to set aside and reserve certain oil lands for the benefit of the Navy hereafter. I feel that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] is entitled to great credit for having brought before the Senate and brought before the country the fact that secretly, without any public discussion, without any information to the Congress of the United States, two departments of this Government have agreed to enter upon a radical change in our policy, and turn over this great resource of oil, which was supposed to be preserved for the use of the Navy, into private exploitation. I hope the committee, when it investigates this question, will not stop at revealing whatever may have been the reason and the motives for the action of the Navy Department and the Interior Department, but will recommend to the Congress of the United States some change in this provision of law which appears to have been incorporated in our statutes in 1920.

Certainly, beginning many years ago, the United States entered upon a policy of conserving these great oil reserves for public use, and it was not intended simply to set them aside for the present use of the Navy. It was intended to set aside these great reserves for the future, when oil becomes scarce, as it inevitably must become scarce at the rate at which it is being used. I was under the impression that that policy of conservation was inaugurated under an act of Congress, and could not be changed except upon consideration by Congress. Yet the Secretary of the Interior, in defending this proceeding in secret by which this great reserve has been turned over to exploitation by private interests, justifies his act by citing the following provision of an appropriation bill passed in 1920. He says:

> For further information of the Senate we have to advise that naval reserve No. 3, Wyoming, was created by Executive order of April 30, 1915; that in the act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat. 813), making appropriations for the naval service, etc., Congress provided:
> "That the Secretary of the Navy is directed to take possession of all properties within the naval petroleum reserves as are or may become subject to the control and use by the United States for naval purposes, and on which there are no pending claims or applications for permits or leases under the provisions of the act of Congress approved February 25, 1920, etc., to conserve, develop, use, and operate the same, in his discretion, directly or by contract, lease, or otherwise, and to use, store, exchange, or sell the oil and gas products thereof and those from all royalty oil from lands in naval reserves, for the benefit of the United States. * * *"

Mr. President, this paragraph, inserted in an appropriation bill, is cited by the Secretary of the Interior as a justification for the transfer of the authority from the Secretary of the Navy to the Secretary of the Interior, and is cited by him as a justification for turning over this great Wyoming oil reserve for private exploitation. I must confess that I did not remember anything about or know anything about that provision in the appropriation bill. The original act certainly contemplated that that oil should be conserved for the future, and that that policy should not be changed except by act of Congress; but this provision was run in here on an appropriation bill in 1920, and apparently the Secretary of the Interior feels that he is justified, whenever he pleases, in using this great public reserve for private exploitation.

I do not know how it is with other Senators, but to me that is a shocking surprise; and if that provision did become part of an appropriation bill it should be changed, and the status should be put back where it was before, so that these great oil reserves shall remain for the public use in the future, and not be frittered away at the present time when oil is so cheap.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. I am not familiar with the history of that particular provision, but I am fairly familiar with the history of the leasing bill; and, if I may be permitted to say so, that is now transpiring which the opponents of the leasing bill prophesied would transpire. I only want to say that in my opinion, unless there is a radical change in the entire structure of legislation with reference to these oil fields, and so forth, we shall not be able to protect the public. I am not alone interested in protecting them for the benefit of the Navy, but I am interested in seeing that the people of the United States, as a people who must use oil for a multitude of things, are protected; and in my opinion, unless the leasing bill is radically reconstructed there will not be very much protection to the public.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That only aggravates the situation. If the leasing bill is so constructed that the oil supply of the United States is likely to be consumed prematurely and rushed into the markets of the world, so that the future will be starved for oil, it is all the more important that what reserves we had preserved for the use of the United States should be left intact and not despoiled. It was all the time an issue, through a large part of the administration of Woodrow Wilson, whether these oil reserves should be retained as reserves for the future, and during that administration Woodrow Wilson stood firm and his administration stood firm against permitting great oil companies to exploit these properties. He stood firm in favor of preserving them as far as possible for what must be the inevitable need of the future; and I am shocked that in this administration two departments of Government should apparently agree secretly, and without any notice to the public, and without any advice to Congress, to throw them open for private exploitation.

I hope, therefore, that the committee, when it considers this matter, will also consider an amendment of the law so that the power which the Secretary of the Interior has asserted he possesses may be taken away from him and that these oil reserves may be permitted to remain intact for the use of the future.

I want to say in conclusion that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] is entitled to the greatest credit for having made the discovery that this secret work of a department, secret negotiations with favored oil interests, had been going on for some time and that he brought it to light here in the Senate; and I also feel that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] conferred a distinct benefit upon the people of the United States when he so forcefully brought it to the attention of the country, as he did in his speech delivered here yesterday, that after 13 years of a settled policy of the United States to preserve this great interest for future use two departments of Government should have entered into a secret arrangement with these oil-exploiting companies to deprive the public and deprive the future of the use of this preserve.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Nebraska, to get his views, what substitute policy he would suggest to take the place of the legislation which he condemns?

I am not at all familiar with the preliminary proceedings leading up to this lease of reserve No. 3 in Wyoming. I did have my attention called to the conditions existing on California reserves 1 and 2.

It was asserted by people who were in a position to know and understand the conditions surrounding the California reserves that wells were being sunk along the lines of the Government reserves on private property adjacent thereto, and that as a consequence of that oil was being drained from the Government reserves. The Senator will notice in the report which he just quoted, from the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of the Navy, the statement that millions of barrels of oil had been drained out of the Government reserves in that way.

It was for the purpose of having some authority vested somewhere in the Government to meet such an emergency as that that this legislation was passed, with the approval of Secretary of the Navy Daniels, who had indicated a very faithful interest in the conservation of these reserves for the purposes of the Navy. I scarcely see how the Government interests could be protected if, in the face of an emergency of that kind, in case it did exist, we had to wait for a special act of Congress. The whole matter of the administration of this property would be by the cumbersome and slow and inefficient method of action by numerous legislative bodies, instead of action by an executive authority. I would like to have any suggestion from the Senator from Nebraska on that subject.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Of course, Mr. President, I can not undertake to frame a bill upon the floor. The Senator will readily see I can not do that; but I think there are several answers to his suggestion which must occur to anyone.

In the first place, if there are fields in California such as the Senator suggests, where Navy oil reserves are being drained, that is a subject for consideration and action. There must be some way of protecting the Government. But whether there is or not, no such statement applies to the Wyoming oil fields. The Senator from Wisconsin showed to the Senate yesterday, as I think, conclusively that practically every geological authority, every authority on the formations of Wyoming, and every experienced man acquainted with the oil field in Wyoming has testified that there was no possibility of private interests draining the oil fields which belong to the Navy reserve in Wyoming; that that danger does not exist there and that that excuse does not exist there.

The Senator from Washington suggests that the naval appropriation bill containing that authorization to the Secretary of the Navy was passed with the full approval of Secretary Daniels. Perhaps Secretary Daniels did approve it; I do not know; but I do know this, and I call it to the attention of the Senator from Washington, that all through his administration as Secretary of the Navy, Secretary Daniels stood like a stone wall against any attempt on the part of private interests to exploit the great oil reserves which belonged to the United States, and he stood that way firmly from the beginning to the end, and he received the backing of the President of the United States. That was the settled policy of this Government when the present administration came into office.

I am inclined to think that legislation is quite possible which can open to the Secretary of the Navy, or, if you please, to the Secretary of the Interior, the use of these oil supplies when they are necessary for the Navy; but they are not necessary at the present time. We have enormous stores of oil, and the oil on these reserves is not being taken on the plea that it is necessary at the present time. It is being taken out on the plea, and only on the plea, that some unknown expert, some anonymous authority in the Department of the Interior, has said that the oil in the Wyoming reserve was being drawn out, or was in danger of being drawn out, by private interests. I think the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] yesterday demonstrated here that that was not the fact. Those naval reserves of oil can not be drained out by neighboring wells. These leases can not be justified on that ground. Nor can they be justified on the ground that the Navy needs the oil. The Navy does not need the oil at the present time.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Oh, yes; the Navy does need the oil at the present time. It has a large number of oil-burning vessels. But I can readily see that there might be an opinion that, notwithstanding the present need of the Navy for oil, it would be advisable to purchase that oil under conditions existing now and reserve the Government oil for some future time when oil might be scarcer and more expensive. The Navy does need oil. I am not concerned about the question of whether this oil is being taken out for the immediate use of the Navy, or taken out for some other good and sufficient reason.

I want to call the attention of the Senator from Nebraska to the statement made by the Acting Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of the Navy. That statement says:

> From a careful geological study recently made by an expert of this department, it was found that the Teapot Dome was menaced with a similar drainage danger. The naval reserves in California can be reached through existing pipe lines, but the principal problem there was the exchange of the crude oil for fuel oil in proper and available storage.

The Senator says he has formed the conclusion that the statement made by the Secretary of the Navy and the Acting Secretary of the Interior is not well founded. He says that he thinks the Senator from Wisconsin demonstrated that it was not. I myself do not think it was so demonstrated. I heard very little stated by the Senator from Wisconsin as to what the actual facts were as to the sinking of wells on adjacent property and the draining of oil from the Wyoming reserve; but my mind is entirely open on that subject. I think it ought to be investigated. That was one of the principal reasons why I asked for the adoption of the resolution of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], but I do not think that at the present time we have sufficient information on which to form a conclusion as to whether the assertions made by the Senator from Wisconsin are well founded. But if the statement made by the heads of the two departments is true, assuming that it is true, upon the hypothesis that it is true, it seems to me the legislation which the Senator from Nebraska condemns is very essential to meet such a contingency. At least, the Senator himself admits that he would require time for reflection and for preparation before he could suggest a substitute means of protecting the interests of the Government.

I want to make another suggestion to the Senator from Nebraska. He condemned the transfer of the control of this matter from the Secretary of the Navy to the Secretary of the Interior. It has not been transferred absolutely from the Secretary of the Navy to the Secretary of the Interior. This report is signed by both the Acting Secretary of the Interior, representing the Secretary, and the Secretary of the Navy, and the report contains this statement:

At the suggestion of the Secretary of the Navy, the President of the United States directed the Secretary of the Interior to take over the administration of lands in the naval reserves in consultation and cooperation with the Secretary of the Navy. The Interior Department and the Navy Department have been in close cooperation and have been endeavoring, as they saw it, to carry out the purposes for which these naval reserves were created.

So it is a joint rather than a separate control, by the two departments, rather than by one of them.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Let me stop the Senator there.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Just one word, and then I will yield.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have the floor, I advise the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. At least, I supposed I had the floor. I will yield in a moment, and then the Senator can speak in his own time.

I want to call attention to this fact: If it is a joint control by the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of the Navy, it is one not authorized by law. The very law which has been cited by the Secretary of the Interior provides that it shall be under the control of the Secretary of the Navy, and it has been under the control of the Secretary of the Navy for a good many years for the purpose of conservation.

I want to suggest to the Senator, who is an important member of the committee to which this has been referred, if new legislation is recommended for the purpose of protecting this great interest of the United States, and if the Senator still thinks that the Secretary of the Navy should have some power to make leases under certain conditions, the Secretary at least should be required to do what is required under the leasing bill, to give notice, and have public and open bids, competitive bids, and not transact the matter in secret, and raise the suspicion, at least, that the contracts are made with favored interests. As bad as the leasing bill is said to be, in view of the Senator from Idaho, we at least ought to have that safeguard.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Why does the Senator state that it was done in secret?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It took a resolution of the Senate to evolve the fact that the contracts were in course of being made. There was no publicity.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The fact that the Senator from Nebraska or even that the Senate did not know about it is no indication that it was done in secret.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is every indication. There was no publication in the newspapers, except of the vaguest rumors. Here is a matter involving probably hundreds of millions of dollars of value to the United States. Here is a reversal of the policy we have heretofore adopted, and instead of being done in the open, so that protests could be made, instead of bids being required in the open, so that there could be competition, these contracts are let to favored corporations, in a private and secret way, and the public knows nothing of it until it is a closed transaction.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator is very largely mistaken about that. I take the statement of the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of the Interior as true, that they called for offers, and that a large number of offers were received, and that out of all the offers they selected this one.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That may be, but they called for them secretly. There was no public call.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I disagree with the Senator.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator state what public call was made?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have personal knowledge of the fact that in the case of the California oil reserves—and I have no reason to think the proceedings in the case of the Wyoming oil reserve was any different—it was known publicly, and a large number of competitive offers were made. My complaint was that too much time was taken up in the consideration of those respective offers. In the meantime, millions of barrels of oil were being drained from the Government reserves.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Not from the Government reserve in Wyoming, concerning which the greatest scandal exists.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is stated here that the same condition existed there which existed in connection with the California oil reserves.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes; and it is stated on the strength of an unknown expert, and the Senator from Wisconsin demonstrated here that the chief geologist of the Interior Department had denied he had given any such opinion, and that such opinions were only held by private interests. The Senator from Wisconsin demonstrated that the geologist of Wyoming had declared that there were separate formations there, and that the formations operated by private interests could not by any possibility drain the public formations, and that same opinion was given by men who actually have knowledge of the oil formations in Wyoming, and against that nothing is produced by the Secretary of the Interior except the opinion of an anonymous expert of the department.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator from Nebraska is correct, of course the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of the Navy are wrong, and I am fully as willing to accept the statement of the Secretary of the Navy and of the Secretary of the Interior as conclusive of the facts in the case as I am to accept that of the Senator from Nebraska in a matter that is of such vast consequence to the country as this is. But all those matters can be ascertained, and ought to be ascertained, beyond a doubt, I judge, without a great deal of difficulty.

There is only one more comment I want to make on the question and that is with reference to the statement of the Senator from Nebraska that the policy of the Government has been reversed in regard to the oil reserves, that there has been a revolutionary proceeding in connection with them, that they were intended for the public use for the Navy, that they have instead of that been turned over for private exploitation. Now the Senator has the privilege of placing that interpretation upon what has been done by the department, but others have the same privilege of putting an entirely different construction upon the action of the department, and accepting the statement of the department that they have made this contract in order to carry out the intent and purpose of the act of Congress under which the reserves were established. They give their reasons for it.

We will inquire whether those reasons were sufficient or not, but the statement is made that it was for the purpose of conserving the oil, for the purpose of supplying the Navy, to meet the conditions which threatened the reserves and which would have deprived the Navy of the benefit of the oil in those reserves, that this contract was made and not, as the Senator from Nebraska stated, to turn it over for private exploitation and for private benefit. The intention as stated by the department was that it should be for the public benefit and for the specific use and purpose provided for in the act of Congress.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, as to just how close a well can be drilled to some parcel or piece of land and drain the oil that is under it is a very difficult question and usually an impossible question to decide. I take it that the provisions of the statute which is referred to by my colleague and condemned by him is the identical legislation the passage of which Secretary Daniels said he secured, as stated in his interview quoted yesterday by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. So if turning our face the one way we condemn this law and then turning around the other way we praise Secretary Daniels to the sky for preserving intact these great oil reserves, we are just a little bit inconsistent, to say the least.

I happen to be somewhat familiar with the work done by Secretary Daniels. I was in entire accord with him. I think he did a good work, but to say, as my colleague has, that we should give the credit all to the Woodrow Wilson administration is going contrary to the facts. I happen to know that there was a great contest on in that administration and that Secretary Daniels represented one side of it. Secretary Daniels did stand firm for the preservation of the oil in those oil reserves. He did everything he could, and he succeeded. I want to render to him all the praise that I think is due him. He acted in good faith. He acted wisely.

But to take the narrow-minded partisan view of it, as my colleague does in discussing anything in an attempt to get a political advantage, and give to the Woodrow Wilson administration all the praise for this national policy is again beside the mark. This is not the policy of Woodrow Wilson. It was a policy that originated before he became President of the United States. To the extent that he carried it out, he is entitled to praise, if any praise is due anyone.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRELD in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I think the Wilson administration is entitled to a great deal of credit for passing the leasing bill, but I think the Woodrow Wilson and all other administrations which had anything to do with it will regret it from this time on. I have no doubt that they acted in good faith, and thought they were conserving the natural resources, but just so long as the leasing law remains upon the statute books we will have recurring from time to time precisely the thing which is now recurring. It will not preserve, I venture to say, the natural resources of the country for the benefit of the public. The illustration which we have before us will demonstrate that. We concede that the only chance to protect the public now is to preserve these three particular oil wells or ponds, or whatever they may be called. All the rest of them are thrown open to be exploited by the same men who, we are afraid, are going to get a chance to exploit these particular propositions. I do not see any reason why the Navy should have any particular protection over them as against the general public. In other words, if we are going to administer these three particular propositions by the public and through the public, why should we not administer the entire oil field through the public in order that the public may be protected? The people who buy oil get it from the same exploiters.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, just in the interest of accuracy, the leasing law which my friend from Idaho condemns, and I think that his appraisement of its infirmities is accurate, was passed while Mr. Wilson was President, but after the Republicans had the control of Congress. The distinguished senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, as I recall, reported the bill, and the Republican House and the Republican Senate drove the bill through, and it was signed by the President. In its operations it is proving disappointing to the people. It is leading to charges of favoritism. It promotes scandal. It is an impediment to legitimate and proper development, and in the end there will, in my judgment, be a demand that it shall be effectually modified, if not repealed.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I care not how anyone stands on the leasing law. It is immaterial to me whether it was passed under a Republican administration or a Democratic administration. In fact, I do not care one iota about any of those things so far as a Republican or Democratic administration is concerned. I would not have taken the floor if there had not been an intimation by my colleague, the senior Senator from Nebraska, that all these evils came about because the present administration had failed to follow the Wilson administration. If the Wilson administration had done what this administration has now done, it would be praised by my colleague for the very act, and the Taft administration, which took the very same view as the Wilson administration, would be condemned. There is no question about that.

I do not care when the Senator from Utah says the law was enacted by the Democratic administration, but in an apologetic way he says there was a Republican administration favoring it, but did not let it through. That does not appeal to me at all. I do not believe it appeals to the American people. All parties and all men and all administrations make mistakes; at least they do if they are human, and I have not yet seen one in my lifetime that has been above that. Sometimes I think they get a little below, but if they are acting in good faith, even though they make mistakes, we can give them credit at least.

The thing which is obnoxious to me is trying to make, even in an indirect way, political capital out of anything of this kind.

I am not condemning the leasing system. I think the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Idaho are wrong. They may be right. So far as this question is concerned, it is absolutely immaterial whether they are right or wrong.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator has observed no doubt that the attitude of several Senators on the other side seems to be that President Wilson being in control of the executive branch of the Government and the Republican Party having a majority in the legislative branch of the Government, as a matter of course all the good things in the leasing act were attributable to President Wilson and all the bad things to the Republican legislative majority.

Mr. NORRIS. Now, Mr. President, I am going to take up Secretary Daniels's idea. As I said, I give him credit for acting in absolute good faith. I agreed with his policy of trying to protect the reserves. I do not agree with the policy that seems to be now in vogue. There may be evidence produced that will convince me. I think I have an open mind. However, I want to call attention to the fact that no one ever heard my colleague condemn anything in a Democrat, and no one ever heard him praise anything that came from a Republican administration, and that is why I have taken the floor.

Secretary Daniels, quoted yesterday by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], used this language:

> There never were any wells drilled near our reserves. Several times owners of adjoining lands intimated that they would sink wells close to the naval reserves. I made it plain to them that if this was done the Navy Department would put marines into these fields and sink a well for every one drilled by them. If they attempted to tap our reserves, we would tap theirs. When they learned that we would not be forced by such methods they abandoned their attempts, and we kept our oil. We made it plain that the United States was a larger business concern than any of the oil corporations, and that we would protect the naval reserves that had been set aside by former President Taft.

Not Woodrow Wilson, but Taft. I do not suppose anyone will charge me with being particularly friendly to Taft, but if there is any credit due give it to him.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Was not the order of President Taft the subject of litigation afterwards?

Mr. NORRIS. It was.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Did it not get into the courts?

Mr. NORRIS. It did.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Did it not go to the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know whether this order did. Probably not this one, but one of them did go to the Supreme Court.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I think it was this very order. That is my recollection of it.

Mr. NORRIS. I remember at the time Secretary Daniels was in charge I was a member of the Committee on Public Lands, and we took a great deal of testimony on the subject of these reserves and this question arose. I am not through reading from Mr. Daniels. I am going to read a little further, but just now I want to call attention to the question that is, in my judgment, involved here and that never can be determined with accuracy. We heard the testimony of the experts—I do not think they were unknown, either, but they were the best we could get from our departments that seem to be looked upon somewhat in derision now by my colleague. They appeared before the committee at that time, and the question arose, if we have a reserve now of a certain tract of land bounded by metes and bounds, how will we prevent the owner of the land just over the line sinking an oil well within 2 or 3 feet or 2 or 3 rods of our land and tapping what will very likely be the oil that is under the lands owned by the Government of the United States in one of these reserves?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I am obliged to leave the Chamber, and I would like to ask the Senator from Nebraska one question before I go.

Mr. NORRIS. I gladly yield.

Mr. LODGE. I entirely agree with what the Senator has said about distributing credit and discredit here and there. President Taft issued the order reserving the California field, and I think President Wilson issued the order for the Wyoming field.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; he did.

Mr. LODGE. And Secretary Daniels made a stanch fight, as I can testify, against giving up any part of the naval oil reserves. But it is just as well not to overlook the fact, in talking about the complexion of the Senate, that the Senate committee had something to do with stopping the raid on the Californian fields.

Mr. NORRIS. I happened to be a member of the committee myself.

Mr. LODGE. I am speaking of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. NORRIS. The Committee on Public Lands likewise had something to do with it.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; they had. In distributing credit it will be found that it goes in different directions.

Mr. NORRIS. I am going to throw the bouquet at the Naval Affairs Committee. I do not want to give any to the other committee, because I happen to be a member of that other committee.

Mr. LODGE. I happened to be a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs and saw the fight made. I took some little part in it and tried to keep the reserves for the Navy.

Mr. NORRIS. I did the best I could upon the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. LODGE. And without the help of the Senate the Secretary of the Navy never could have done it.

Mr. NORRIS. When the Government has a piece of land in the oil fields which it reserves and retains for the use of the Navy, and some person who owns the land right across the line sinks a well—and there is no way to prevent him from doing so if he owns the land—the question arises, How far away from the line will a person be able to sink such a well and yet draw from the oil that is under the Government land? No man has ever stated that definitely and no man claims to know definitely; but the experts do not hesitate to testify concerning that problem, and they did so in the hearing before the committee. I have forgotten the distance which they estimated, but they thought that wells could be sunk within a comparatively short distance without interfering at all with the oil which was under the naval oil reservations. The distance probably varies in different fields; but we must give to our officials, to the Secretary of the Navy, if he is going to control these reserves of oil, the authority, in my judgment, to drill wells in order to effectuate the purpose desired to be accomplished. It may be that if wells were sunk all around the Wyoming reserve the owners of such wells would not get all of the oil, but they would get very much of the oil, as everybody knows.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I wish to take exception to that statement. I put into the RECORD yesterday, perhaps, not conclusive proof, but certainly proof which ought to raise a very strong presumption in the mind of any Senator, that what the Senator from Nebraska states is not possible; that the geological formation which is found in the California field is of a very different character from that in the Wyoming field. I also put into the RECORD telegrams from the State geologist of Wyoming, stating that it was an undrainable formation; that it could not be drained at all.

Moreover, that statement was confirmed by a telegram from the governor of the State; it was also confirmed by a statement from the former governor of the State, Mr. Brooks. It has also been stated to me personally by a number of people who are familiar with that formation that the oil in the Teapot Dome of Wyoming was as safe from outside drainage as though it were in an iron basin.

The same thing is not true of the geological structure of the naval reserve No. 2 in California. There a different kind of soil is found, and the oil there could be drained by wells put upon adjacent territory.

The Senator from Nebraska says to me that I am misquoting him.

Mr. NORRIS. I did not say that for the RECORD. The Senator put that in himself. The Senator, however, is misinterpreting what I said.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I understood the Senator from Nebraska to say that in the Wyoming field the oil could be drained by the drilling of wells in adjacent territory.

Mr. NORRIS. I am speaking of any field.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator was speaking of the Wyoming field at the time.

Mr. NORRIS. I will tell the Senator what I said.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will not trespass further upon the Senator's time.

Mr. NORRIS. After I shall have made my statement the Senator may again interrupt me, if he wishes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will take the floor later in my own right.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not object to the Senator's interruption.

I said when drilling is done around a reserve next to the line, though probably the well would not get all of the oil that is in the reserve, it would be bound to get some of it. Does the Senator from Wisconsin claim that around the reserves in Wyoming there is a wall that runs down to the center of the earth, so that if a well is drilled 1 foot from the line the one who drills it will get no oil, and that if the well that he drills is 1 foot inside the line it will get the oil? Such a proposition is perfectly preposterous, Mr. President.

If there is oil on one side of a line, the one who drills a well on the other side will get some of that oil unless right straight down from that line there is a wall which may not be penetrated. I heard experts testify, as I said before the Senator from Wisconsin interrupted me, that the conditions varied in different localities, and that the distance at which oil might be drawn which would apply to one field, perhaps, would not at all apply to another.

But I was coming to the point of Secretary Daniels's assertion that he secured legislation. I judge, but I am not sure about it, that it is the same legislation which my colleague now condemns. I am not defending the act; perhaps it should be amended; indeed, I think it ought to be amended, and it seems to me it would not be a difficult thing to change it in order to meet the situation. Quoting from the speech of the Senator from Wisconsin on yesterday, Secretary Daniels said:

> The reasons given by the present administration for turning over the naval oil reserves in California and Wyoming to great private corporations are childish. They say the Standard Oil Co. has bored wells immediately adjoining our reserve in California and is tapping our oil pools. Is this Government impotent to defend its own property? Would the Navy stand by with its hands folded and let the Standard or anybody else steal our oil?
> The same threats were made when I was Secretary of the Navy. We decided that, first of all, we should get out an injunction; if that failed—
> And it probably would—
> we decided that every time the Standard or anybody bored a well that might tap our oil we would bore one immediately adjoining which would tap their oil. I got an appropriation from Congress for that purpose.

It seems to me Secretary Daniels is hitting the nail on the head, although my colleague seems to condemn any law that will give the Secretary of the Navy any authority to bore a well for fear that we shall be killing the goose that lays the golden egg. I agree with Secretary Daniels when he says:

> I got an appropriation from Congress for that purpose.

What purpose? So that he could bore wells when the Standard or anybody else bored one in such proximity to the national reserves as involved a danger of robbing the oil pool under the Government's land. That is what he ought to do. In my judgment the particular act on this subject ought to be changed; but we must not take away from the Secretary of the Navy or some other official—and I think this power ought to be in the Secretary of the Navy, probably—the power to meet private parties when they undertake to sink wells which will drain the oil from under our own lands. Secretary Daniels was in favor of such power being given, and he secured an appropriation for that purpose.

The particular provision was in the act of June 4, 1920. It does not follow, Mr. President, that we ought to have an act that is so broad that the Secretary of the Navy can bore wells, or at least lease them, for any other reason than for the preservation of the oil under the Government reservation.

Mr. President, I do not believe any expert will claim that he can tell definitely—he may, of course, have his judgment about it—that by sinking a well in a certain place it will drain a pool in a certain other place. If the pools thousands of feet, perhaps, underground are connected, they may be drained, but a pool several miles away—I think I said a pool half a mile away—may not be drained. The experts, however, know within limitations, or think they do. If we set aside a reservation for oil for our Navy, and make it so large that we go away beyond the limits of the pool which we are covering, so that around on the outside no one may get oil, then, of course, we are absolutely protected; but whenever the man who owns lands adjoining the Government reservation, there being nothing but an invisible line separating the two, and he is able to get the oil, the chances are 999 out of a thousand that he is getting some oil from under the reservation owned by the Government. The only way to even that up is to grant the power which Secretary Daniels sought. It ought to be limited to that, however, so that the Government may preserve the oil under the Government reservations. As Secretary Daniels said in his statement, the very fact that he had the power and was going to sink a well prevented the other fellow from doing it.

It may be, Mr. President, that we will want to sink some wells later on in order to care for the needs of our Navy; I do not know how soon that may be desired; but we are trying to preserve the oil in the earth for the use of the Navy; yet objection is made by the Senator from Idaho that we ought not to make any difference between the Navy and the people generally. It may be that we ought—I sometimes think that we ought—to preserve for the people generally more of the oil that is underneath the earth than we have preserved; but I believe, Mr. President, if it is possible to hold our oil in the ground for the use of the Navy, that it is a wise precautionary measure to preserve it for the Navy. Compared with all the oil fields in the United States, the amount reserved for the Navy is very small. I think we are justified in reserving it; that it was a wise thing when President Taft set aside the two reservations in California, and it was also a wise act for President Wilson to set aside the third reservation in Wyoming. So far as I am concerned, I want to see everything done that can possibly be done to preserve the oil in both fields for the use of our Navy.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I do not care to prolong this discussion. I have no sympathy with the efforts of Senators upon either side of the aisle to make political capital out of a resolution which I introduced bearing upon the preservation of the oil on the naval reserves. I think perhaps the truth of history ought to be served by a statement of fact with respect to the enactment of the general leasing bill, which was followed by an amendment as a rider upon the naval appropriation bill bearing upon the same subject.

Two general leasing bills affecting oil, coal, and other natural resources have been reported in recent years. Both of them came from the Committee on Public Lands, of which the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is and for several years has been a member. Both of them, so far as conserving the oil or the coal was concerned, were bad bills. The one reported when the Senate was controlled by the Democratic Party came before the Senate in the form of a conference report shortly before the expiration of the Sixty-fifth Congress. The attempt was made to jam it through at the end of the session before that Congress adjourned. It was a bad bill, even more harmful to the public interest than the bill passed by the Sixty-sixth Congresss, when the Republicans had control of the Senate. Both of them were bad bills. Neither of them properly guarded the Government's interest in the public oil and coal lands. I claim some part in having defeated the consideration of the bill reported at the close of the Sixty-fifth Congress.

In 1919, the Senate then being Republican, the Public Lands Committee reported out the bill which is now on the statute books as the general oil and coal leasing bill. Almost single-handed and alone, without support on either side of this aisle, I contested the provisions of that bill, which were so liberal as to leasing as to jeopardize these naval reserves.

I offered amendments. I offered one amendment in particular, which would have protected the naval oil reserves, for which I was able to get just eight votes. The bill passed, and Secretary Daniels, opposing it at every step, stated that if that bill passed in the form in which it did pass, with section 18 in it and the other related sections, he had fears that it would destroy the naval oil reserves, and permit them to be turned over to private monopoly.

Following the enactment of that law the Committee on Naval Affairs—the Senate then being Republican—reported out as a rider to the naval appropriation an amendment vesting the Secretary of the Navy with authority to lease the naval oil reservations. Why? Because the contention of the oil vandals was that the only way to save the oil of the Government from being withdrawn from naval reserves 1 and 2—there was no discussion as to naval reserve No. 3 at that time—was to lease, and let the Government get what it could out of it in royalties; that otherwise outside owners of property contiguous to these reserves would be able to deplete them. They never were able to deplete them so long as we had a Secretary of the Navy who was loyal to his Government. Daniels, as Secretary of the Navy, said to these outside pirates: "If you drill wells to withdraw the oil from one of these naval reserves, I will put down, under an appropriation I have received at the hands of Congress, two wells near the line for every one you drill, and withdraw from your property more oil than you can withdraw from the property of the Government." He stopped it.

Mr. President, it needs to be stated, in order to get into the RECORD something like an approach to the real situation, that neither of these two naval oil reserves of California was wholly in the possession of the Government. When the lands had been segregated by Executive order that was an announcement to the public that the Government had information, through the Geological Survey, that they were valuable oil lands, and the private interests rushed into this territory and made locations in the face of the Executive order reserving the territory.

They came to Congress, after the Executive order had been sustained by the Supreme Court, and said that they had entered these lands under the advice of attorneys, had expended large sums of money in drilling wells, and that therefore the Government ought to recognize their equities and give them the right to hold those wells under leases and go on, although they were within the territory reserved for the Navy by the Government; and they found plenty of Senators and plenty of Members of the House of Representatives to take up their case and fight for them. So that we did not have simply a question of the Secretary of the Navy protecting an entire oil reservation against drilling by people on outside territory, but we had these squatters who had gone into the reservation and who had their wells located within this territory; and the general leasing bill that I referred to proposed to recognize them as having some rights there, instead of sending them, as I contended they should be sent, to the courts to get a judicial determination as to whether they had any rights at all.

Mr. President, that was the situation down to the time when this general oil leasing bill became the law.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Can the Senator give the date of the final passage of the general leasing bill? I know when it passed the Senate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The second one which I am referring to now, which became a law, was passed in 1919, in September or October. The first bill I defeated by a filibuster.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator is mistaken. The Senator defeated the conference report.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Well, that conference report was a bill.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that; but it never could get to the stage of a conference report unless the Senate had first passed the bill. I asked about that.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It passed the Senate many months before it was reported on as a conference report.

Mr. NORRIS. I know; a whole session before, I think.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I can not tell just when. I think it was in the preceding session of the same Congress.

Mr. NORRIS. It was, I think.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. And it lay in conference for a year or a year and a half between the two Houses, and was brought in here at the close of the Sixty-fifth Congress. At the close of that Congress it was brought in here in the last hours, and attempted to be put through as an emergency proposition.

Now, Mr. President, I want to bring this matter down a step further.

In order to meet the contention of these private interests that the Government reserves would be inevitably depleted, and therefore must be leased, this rider upon the appropriation bill was passed. It clothed the Secretary of the Navy with authority to do the leasing in particular instances where it was necessary for the preservation of the Government's interests. Mr. President, that was a good law so long as it was executed in the public interest.

The authority conferred upon the Secretary under that provision was never abused so long as Daniels was Secretary of the Navy. When the new administration came in, the present Secretary of the Navy consented to the transfer of the naval oil reserves from the Navy Department over to the Interior Department; and instead of using the authority conferred by this provision of law that was passed as a rider on an appropriation bill for the protection of the Government reserves, it was used through the Secretary of the Interior, after the transfer had been made, to lease these reserves—the Secretary of the Navy joining in the lease—to private interests.

Mr. President, this discussion, which has occupied the attention of the Senate since the passage of the resolution, perhaps serves no good purpose. The committee that has charge of the resolution and the investigation under it will, I am sure, go to the bottom of the whole matter, and will ultimately report all the facts to the Senate.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I want to say just a word about the Wyoming reservation, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. HARRELD. I merely want to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly; I yield.

Mr. HARRELD. Some question has arisen about how the Secretary of the Interior got control of this matter—how it became his prerogative to make these leases. More than a year ago it was called to my attention that leases were being made on the naval reserve in California, and that some had been made by the Secretary of the Interior. I wrote a letter to the President at that time and called attention to the fact that the Secretary of the Interior was making leases covering naval reserves, and asked by what authority of law he did so. I received a letter from the President inclosing the reply of the Secretary of the Interior to my inquiry, and for the benefit of the Senate I am going to read part of the letter of the Secretary of the Interior at that time in reply to my query as to how he had the authority to make these leases. May I do that in the Senator's time?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I was about to conclude with a brief reference to reservation No. 3 in Wyoming. If I might just add this, then I will yield to the Senator to read the communication, which I apprehend is somewhat lengthy. I would like just to say this, that all the information I have been able to get is on authority which I think ought to be recognized as competent—geologists of the State of Wyoming and the head of the oil section of the Geological Survey of our own Government. The information from the State authorities is to the effect that the formation there would prevent the drainage of oil from that reservation by the outside world.

Mr. HARRELD. I have reference to the legal authority of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I understand, but I was speaking with reference to the colloquy I had with the Senator from Nebraska. The authority of our own Geological Survey, which I quoted yesterday, is to the effect that there is no information in the possession of the survey, excepting that of interested parties, that warranted the statement that it was possible to drain the oil from reservation No. 3 by outside drilling, as contended by those who were supporting the leasing of these lands.

I now yield the floor to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President, as I stated, I feel there is some information contained in this letter which ought to be laid before the Senate, and for that reason I am going to read it. The letter was written by Secretary Fall, and reads, in part, as follows:

Answering your letter of June 4, 1921, inclosing a communication addressed to you by Senator J. W. HARRELD, of Oklahoma, questioning your authority under Executive order of May 31, 1921, to transfer the administration of naval petroleum reserves to this department, and citing a provision of the naval appropriation act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat. 813), as committing this authority to the Secretary of the Navy, I have the honor to advise as follows:

Section 18 of the oil and gas leasing act of February 25, 1920, provides that the Secretary of the Interior may lease producing wells in naval petroleum reserves. It further provides that the President, in his discretion, may permit the drilling of additional wells by the claimant or his successor, or may lease the remainder or any part of a claim upon which producing wells have been drilled. Under this provision of law authority to administer the producing wells is directly vested in the Secretary of the Interior. The right to permit the drilling of additional wells or to lease the remainder of any such claims is vested in the President, who, undoubtedly, may delegate his authority and supervision to the Secretary of the Interior or any other executive agency he desires.

The clause of the naval appropriation act referred to by the Senator relates only to those portions of naval reserves not included in pending claims, patents, or leases, and authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to conserve, develop, use, and operate the same "directly or by contract, lease, or otherwise." This vests broad discretion in the Secretary of the Navy as to the method, the manner, and the agency to be utilized in conservation, development, use, and operation of such lands. He may do it directly, or by contract, by lease, "or otherwise." The Secretary of the Navy requested you to make the administrative arrangement carried into effect by your said order of May 31, 1921, and, in my opinion, under the foregoing provisions of law, the legal authority for the action taken by you is not open to question.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whom he is quoting now?

Mr. HARRELD. This communication was sent to me by the President of the United States.

Mr. KING. Is that in response to the Senator's interrogation?

Mr. HARRELD. My communication was one questioning the authority to make the Executive order. The President submitted the matter to the Secretary of the Interior, and this is Secretary Fall's reply to him sustaining the power of the President to make the Executive order. The letter continues:

If any doubt could exist, the provisions of the act of Congress approved May 20, 1918 (40 Stat. 556), commonly known as the Overman Act, authorizing the President to make redistribution of functions among executive agencies, is still in full force and effect, and would furnish authority for the action taken.

The said Overman Act was by its terms to remain in force during the war and for six months after the termination thereof by the proclamation of the treaty of peace, or such earlier time as the President might designate. The joint resolution of March 3, 1921, declaring that certain acts of Congress, joint resolutions, and proclamations shall be construed as if the war had ended: Provided, That in interpreting any law or treaty containing provisions contingent upon the duration or the date of the termination of the war "the date when this resolution becomes effective shall be construed and treated as the date of the termination of the war or of the present or existing emergency."

Mr. President, the letter is rather long, and I would like to have unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD my letter to the President, to which this is a response, and this letter of Secretary Fall replying thereto.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COPY OF SENATOR HARRELD'S LETTER TO PRESIDENT HARDING.

JUNE 2, 1921.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: During the early part of April I understand that the Navy Department advertised for bids for the drilling of 22 offset wells on naval petroleum reserve No. 1, in Kern County, Calif.

In response to this advertisement one of my constituents duly submitted his bid, which it was advertised to be opened on April 25. The opening of these bids was delayed, I am informed, pending consideration of the transfer of the administration of the naval petroleum reserves to the Interior Department.

I understand that a few days ago an Executive order was issued which transferred the administration of these naval petroleum reserves to the Interior Department subject only to the approval of the Secretary of the Navy in matters of general policy.

I respectfully call your attention to a provision of law which I apprehend was not called to your attention at the time this Executive order was promulgated, being an act approved June 4, 1920, clearly expressing the legislative intent of Congress, and from which I quote as follows:

"Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy is directed to take possession of all properties within the naval petroleum reserves as are or may become subject to the control and use by the United States for naval purposes, and on which there are no pending claims or applications for permits or leases under the provisions of an act of Congress approved February 25, 1920, * * * or pending applications for United States patent under any law; to conserve, develop, use, and operate the same in his discretion, directly or by contract, lease, or otherwise, and to use, store, exchange, or sell the oil and gas products thereof, and those from all royalty oil from lands in the naval reserves, for the benefit of the United States."

In view of the specific provisions of this act, indicating the legislative intent of Congress, directing the Secretary of the Navy to take possession, conserve, develop, etc., the naval petroleum reserves, I beg to respectfully inquire whether the Executive order hereinbefore referred to is not in contravention of such act of Congress above cited?

Very respectfully,

J. W. HARRELD.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Answering your letter of June 4, 1921, inclosing a communication addressed to you by Senator J. W. HARRELD, of Oklahoma, questioning your authority under Executive order of May 31, 1921, to transfer the administration of naval petroleum reserves to this department, and citing a provision of the naval appropriation act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat. 813), as committing this authority to the Secretary of the Navy, I have the honor to advise as follows:

Section 18 of the oil and gas leasing act of February 25, 1920, provides that the Secretary of the Interior may lease producing wells in naval petroleum reserves. It further provides that the President, in his discretion, may permit the drilling of additional wells by the claimant or his successor, or may lease the remainder or any part of a claim upon which producing wells have been drilled. Under this provision of law, authority to administer the producing wells is directly vested in the Secretary of the Interior. The right to permit the drilling of additional wells or to lease the remainder of any such claim is vested in the President, who undoubtedly may delegate his authority and supervision to the Secretary of the Interior or any other executive agency he desires.

The clause of the naval appropriation act referred to by the Senator relates only to those portions of naval reserves not included in pending claims, patents, or leases, and authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to conserve, develop, use, and operate the same "directly or by contract, lease, or otherwise." This vests broad discretion in the Secretary of the Navy as to the method, the manner, and the agency to be utilized in conservation, development, use, and operation of such lands. He may do it directly or by contract, by lease, "or otherwise." The Secretary of the Navy requested you to make the administrative arrangement carried into effect by your said order of May 31, 1921, and, in my opinion, under the foregoing provisions of law, the legal authority for the action taken by you is not open to question. If any doubt could exist, the provisions of the act of Congress approved May 20, 1918 (40 Stat. 556), commonly known as the Overman Act, authorizing the President to make redistribution of functions among executive agencies, is still in full force and effect, and would furnish authority for the action taken.

The said Overman Act was by its terms to remain in force during the war and for six months after the termination thereof by the proclamation of the treaty of peace, or such earlier time as the President might designate. The joint resolution of March 3, 1921, declaring that certain acts of Congress, joint resolutions, and proclamations shall be construed as if the war had ended, provided that in interpreting any law or treaty containing provisions contingent upon the duration or the date of the termination of the war "the date when this resolution becomes effective shall be construed and treated as the date of the termination of the war or of the present or existing emergency."

Therefore, the provisions of the Overman Act are, as stated, still in full force and effect and will be until the expiration of six months from and after March 3, 1921, unless the President shall himself fix an earlier date for the termination of the act.

In view of the fact that these naval reserves are surrounded by public lands, the oil and gas deposits of which are directly under the administration of this department, of the fact that the leasing of producing wells in the reserves is directly committed to it, of the fact that the plats, tract books, and other records of title are in the General Land Office, the geological data in the Geological Survey, and the appropriation and machinery for supervising the drilling and production from wells is in the Bureau of Mines, all of this department, the method of administration proposed by your order is patently in the interests of the most expeditious and economic administration; also, by the terms of your order, the Secretary of the Navy is to be consulted and is to cooperate in any general policy relative to the drilling or reserving of lands in such reserves.

In conclusion, therefore, I feel certain that there can be no legal objection to the method of administration established by your order, and it is in addition highly desirable from an administrative standpoint.

Sincerely yours, ALBERT B. FALL, Secretary.

Mr. HARRELD. In my judgment, that letter gives information which the Senate should have. I am not upholding the position the Secretary of the Interior took at that time, as I do not know whether he took the right position or not, but it will be the basis for the investigation that is to be conducted, and it gives light on his position at that time, 12 months ago.

I want to say, further, that I had nothing more to do with it until about the 14th of this month, when I began to hear these rumors about the making of these contracts covering this naval proposition, and I started another investigation. I wrote to the Secretary of the Navy and asked him to furnish me the data concerning all contracts which had been made covering the naval reserves since this administration went into power. On April 20 I received a reply from the Secretary of the Navy, in which he said this, in part:

Replying to your inquiry of April 14, wherein you request information concerning the oil leases executed with regard to the naval reserve lands belonging to the Government since March 4, 1921, the following data are submitted:

The Executive order transferring the care, custody, and operation of the naval reserves to the Department of the Interior was signed May 31, 1921, and since that date the Navy Department is not in a position to give the details of leases that may have been executed. However, between the dates March 4, 1921, and May 31, 1921, it appears that two leases became effective, as shown below.

So, for the information of the Senate, I want to say that the Secretary of the Interior justifies the transfer of this authority by the Executive order of the President from the Navy Department to the Interior Department in this correspondence, and I felt that it should be laid before the Senate for its information.

Mr. NORRIS obtained the floor.

Mr. KING. If the Senator from Nebraska desires the leasing act, I have it here, as well as the extension of it, or some provision enlarging it. May I make an inquiry of the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. KING. I would like to inquire of the Senator from Oklahoma what relevancy the Overman Act, so called, has to any procedure taken by the Secretary of the Interior with respect to the matter now under consideration?

Mr. HARRELD. I do not think it has any, but the Secretary quotes it in his reply, and I am simply laying it before the Senate for his information.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I am not willing that I should be put in a false attitude by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. The Senator from Wisconsin, after referring to the leasing bills, which came from the Committee on Public Lands as being bad, took particular pains to say that at the time when those bills came out of that committee I was a member of the committee, and there he dropped it. I do not understand the object a Senator may have in coupling me up with the committee and bad legislation which came out of that committee, except to leave the inference that I was in favor of the bad legislation which came out of the committee.

If that be a good argument, let me indulge in it. I do not suppose the Senator from Wisconsin will defend the Esch-Cummins law, for instance; and yet it came from a committee of which he was a member, and at a time when he was a member of it.

I doubt very much whether the Senator from Wisconsin will defend the tariff bill now pending before the Senate; yet it comes from a committee of which he is an honored member and has been for a great many years. I think I would be unfair and unjust to the Senator from Wisconsin if I delivered an address in which I condemned the existing Esch-Cummins law, and then said, "That came from a committee of which the Senator from Wisconsin was a member," and stopped at that.

Mr. President, I could cite some other legislation which has come from the Committee on Interstate Commerce since the Senator from Wisconsin has been a member of it. One measure in particular which passed the Senate, referring to railroads, I thought a vicious piece of legislation, but it was taken up one day by unanimous consent and passed. When the Senator from Wisconsin found it out he made a motion to reconsider it, and had the motion filed before the bill got over to the House of Representatives, I think. A man might devote an entire evening to a discussion of that law and show its evils, and as I looked at it there was not anything in it that was good. Then he could say, "Senator LA FOLLETTE was a member of the committee which reported that bill." If he stopped there and left that impression, the next man who told it might say, "LA FOLLETTE voted for that bill," and the next man who told it might say, "LA FOLLETTE was the author of the bill"; so it would get around like the story of the old black crow.

I was not in favor of that vicious bill which the Senator now says he defeated by a filibuster. I have been unable to get the exact date when it passed the Senate, although I asked the Senator, and he was not able to give the information either. From the clerk who has charge of that matter I have been trying to get the vote. I find that the bill which the Senator defeated by a filibuster was before the Senate on a conference report. There was a roll call on taking up the conference report. There never was a vote on the conference report, of course, because the filibuster defeated it. Congress adjourned on the 4th of March and there never was a vote on it, so the only vote was a vote to take up the conference report.

That was a roll-call vote. I have that roll call here. I find that I voted against taking it up. I was opposed to it. I am on record as opposed to it, although I must confess that I was a member of the Committee on Public Lands at that time. So if that argument be any good, I stand condemned according to my own belief of being in favor of a bad bill.

I find on that occasion that my colleague did not vote with the Senator from Wisconsin and myself. My colleague, who is now so anxious to preserve the rights of all the people by a leasing bill, was—I will not say in favor of it, because the record, so far as I have it here, does not show that. He did not vote at all. He may have been with the Senator from Wisconsin, but at least he was not present to help him by a vote at that time.

I agree that much which has been said here has no direct bearing upon the question. I never would have taken the floor to begin with if it had not been that I thought my colleague left the impression that this was a party matter, that the Democratic Party was always right on the question, when as a matter of fact if he wanted to, if he was so unjust and unreasonable as to make a party matter of it, two-thirds of it at least was Republican and one-third Democratic.

I would not have taken the floor again if it had not been that the remarks of the Senator from Wisconsin in their natural bearing would leave the impression that because I was a member of the Committee on Public Lands I was in favor of the bill. On the general proposition I have always favored a leasing proposition. There are some things in the leasing law that I was very bitterly opposed to, and the record shows that on a roll call I voted against taking it up.

The clerk has just brought me the roll call on the other leasing bill on its final passage, so we have two roll calls now on the leasing propositions. I think a fair construction of the statement of the Senator from Wisconsin would leave the impression upon the reader or hearer that I was in favor of both of them. I have shown already that I voted against one on the only roll call that was had, and now the clerk has handed me the roll call on the passage of the other leasing bill. I find on looking it over that I voted against the passage, as I was satisfied I had done.

In the long hearings that were had on some of the legislation I think the second time I did not participate at all in the committee, but the first time I did. On account of sickness I was unable to attend the hearings on the leasing bill when it was last considered, but I fought it to the best of my ability all the way through. I stood with Secretary Daniels, not because it was Secretary Daniels but because I conscientiously believed he was right. I was opposed to the provisions of the bill which did what the Senator from Idaho now complains about, although I preferred a leasing bill rather than an absolute sale to private parties, and was in favor of a leasing law if I could have had the right kind of a leasing law. In that proposition I was with both the Democratic and the Republican Presidents.

Now, it is interesting again, on this roll call which has just been brought to me, to see how my colleague voted, who is now expressing such awful consternation for fear a Republican Senate might go wrong. Let us see how he voted. On looking it over I find, as on the other roll call, he did not vote at all. So the Senator from Wisconsin at least did not get any assistance from my colleague, who was recorded on this vote as among those "not voting."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, oftentimes in the stress of debate we are inclined to get a bit personal. I certainly do not want to go on record here as being a critic of the position taken by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] upon public questions. I have served with him for a great many years. There are very few men whom I have ever known in public life—and I have seen something of the public service in the last 30 years—who I think are more devoted to the public interests than is the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

We do not all of us fight in the same way. I suppose I would ordinarily be called rather tense in my way of indicating my opposition to measures. I sometimes have felt critical of some of my best friends when I was not able to secure their active support in opposing bad measures or in fighting for good measures which seemed to me to be very vital to the public interests. For my part, I do not always feel that I have discharged my full duty in opposition to bad legislation simply by voting against it, if I am able to do more than that by open and persistent opposition to it in debate. I have many times here resorted to that course in order to protect, as I saw it, the public interest.

When this very bad bill, against which my friend from Nebraska voted, was brought up in the Senate and was, as it seemed to me, almost certain to be passed, I sought personally to get support in order to carry on the debate and insure the defeat of that bad legislation. Combinations had been made, as I believed, which would inevitably result in the legislation passing unless it was debated at such length as to prevent a vote being reached before the end of the then impending adjournment of that Congress. I sought the aid of such Members of the Senate as I thought ought not only to be opposed to it to the extent of voting against it but who ought to lend assistance to opposing it in debate. That is all I care to say upon that proposition, further than to add that I was not able to secure such assistance to defeat the legislation, but it was finally defeated.

The Senator from Nebraska states that I am a member of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and that the Esch-Cummins law was passed while I was a member of that committee, and that upon that statement alone it might be inferred that I was in favor of that bill. I cite not only the fact that I voted against that bill, but that I spoke against it on the floor. I was the only member of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, composed of some seventeen Senators, who filed a report against it. I thus started my opposition to that legislation—which I believed to be and still believe to be a legislative crime, a most vicious measure—in the committee and continued it for many days throughout the debate upon the floor.

I started in on the floor to oppose it, not knowing that I would receive the support of a single Senator, but I made my opposition to it something more than merely voting against the bill. I was on the floor day after day, speaking against it for the better part of the time that it was before the Senate—for some weeks at least. Fortunately, as the debate developed, opposition to the bill developed. I refer, of course, to the bill as reported first by the Senate committee, the bill known as the Cummins bill, and which was made finally a part of the Esch-Cummins law. As a result of that debate, although I could not get the support of any of my colleagues on the committee to join in a minority report against it, a number of members of the committee finally took part in opposing it before the debate was concluded. When the bill was finally put upon its passage there were 30 votes recorded against it.

It is true, as stated by the Senator from Nebraska, that another bill was reported to the Senate from the Committee on Interstate Commerce which did pass this body and passed it without any opposition. I learned of it, as the Senator from Nebraska has stated, within a few minutes after it passed. It passed when there were but seven Senators on the floor. It had been reported out of the Committee on Interstate Commerce during my absence not only from the committee but from the city of Washington, for following the fight on the Esch-Cummins law I went to the city of Rochester, Minn., for an operation which I had been advised to have performed nearly a year before. That bill was put upon the calendar while I was absent under those circumstances and was passed through the Senate when there were but seven Senators present.

But, Mr. President, I think I made my record on that bill pretty clear, for I not only interposed a motion for reconsideration of the measure, but availed myself of the parliamentary situation in such way that the bill failed of passage. I do not care to say anything more about the matter at this time.

THE TARIFF.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7456) to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, 19 days ago the pending tariff bill was reported to the Senate. A number of the members of the minority on the Committee on Finance desired further time in which to examine the bill and file a report thereon. Ten days were given for that further consideration. Nine days ago we began the consideration of the bill, spending most of the first day in reading the bill itself. The next day we proceeded with the first item of the first schedule of the bill—acetic acid, which, in common, homely, plain English, is vinegar. We have had that item before us now for eight days, and we still have not passed the vinegar stage.

This morning the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] asked unanimous consent that the tariff bill might be temporarily laid aside in order that he might have a vote upon his resolution. He made the request in good faith, I am sure, expecting that there would be no debate on the resolution. I consented to his request, with the reservation that if there were no extended debate upon the matter, and we should merely have a vote, the tariff bill might be temporarily laid aside for that purpose. It took five minutes, Mr. President, to pass the resolution; but since the resolution has been passed there have been two hours and five minutes of discussion of a resolution that had already passed the Senate. While the discussion may be interesting and enlightening on a subject that will again come up, possibly, after an investigation of the matter is over, some six months or a year from now, the discussion has not given us a great deal of enlightenment upon the vinegar item of the pending schedule.

Now, I sincerely hope that we may give our attention to the tariff bill for a while and continue giving attention to it, and take up its items and dispose of them without consuming so much time in the discussion of extraneous matters which have no relation whatever to the bill.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I am a little astonished at what the Senator from North Dakota has just said. He complains about the length of time which has been consumed in the discussion, as he said, of the first item of the pending bill, that of acetic acid. I wish to remind the Senator that he himself said the principle upon which the tariff regarding acetic acid had been framed permeated the entire bill; and the Senator knows that during all the time that I have occupied the floor I have been endeavoring to ascertain the principle underlying the bill.

It is true those responsible for the pending bill have shifted from one foundation to another, but that has been done because the first foundation laid down by the Senator from North Dakota did not prove to be firm and sound. That is the reason for this rather extended discussion without voting upon the items in the bill. All Senators should be interested, and I trust are interested, in understanding the basis which underlies the bill. I am sure the country wants to understand it; the people of this Republic want to understand it, because they are the ones who are going to be directly affected by it. I have been trying to develop that thought. We have not proceeded very far. The Senator from North Dakota has on each occasion undertaken to lay down a theory which to the eye is attractive, and which he hopes will be attractive to the people of the country, but I hope to demonstrate—I say hope to demonstrate it, but I rather expect to demonstrate—that this bill is not founded upon the beautiful theory which the Senator from North Dakota has announced to the country. I think I can demonstrate that fact, and I think it is worth while to do so. I do not believe that we should consider amendments to the bill until we can ascertain why the amendments have been proposed.

Mr. President, let us summarize for just a moment. The Senator from North Dakota at first said that this bill was framed for the purpose of equalizing the difference between the cost of production in the United States and in foreign countries. Upon a discussion of that, in the first instance, it was developed that the actual cost of the commodities in this country and abroad was never ascertained. So that theory has been in a way abandoned. But the Senator then followed with the statement that while the committee could not ascertain the cost of the production of commodities abroad, and while they were unable, except in a comparatively few instances, to discover the cost of production in this country, they ascertained the prices abroad and in this country, and assumed that those prices were based upon the cost of production plus a reasonable profit. That is the last statement of the Senator from North Dakota; and I wish to-day to examine that question a little.

As to some of the items in the bill, the Senator has said that the bill was framed in conformity to an agreement between exporters and importers. That eliminates a part of the products covered by this bill from his beautiful theory. When it came to prices, on yesterday it was developed that in many instances the same products covered by the identical paragraph in the bill by the same rate of duty were manufactured in a number of different countries; that the cost of production varied in accordance with the country from which the commodities came; that the commodities themselves varied in an extreme degree as to the cost of production and prices; but yet we find in this bill one rate applicable to this great mass of commodities.

On yesterday I used earthenware as an illustration. Plain earthenware is imported from a number of different countries, and upon all plain earthenware coming from various countries the rate of duty is precisely the same. Mr. President, I should like to know, in view of that condition alone, how it can be said that the rates of duty imposed by the bill are based upon the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad, whether that difference is ascertained by actual investigation or whether the prices alone are used. I say that the statement of the Senator from North Dakota can not be substantiated; it can not be affirmed by the situation as it exists.

The same thing is true regarding decorated earthenware, which comes from various countries of the world. The rates of duty on all decorated earthenware are precisely the same, and so it is with numerous—in fact hundreds of articles in this bill. Moreover, Mr. President, not only the cost of production varies in the different countries from which the goods come, but the cost of transportation from those countries is also a very great item to be taken into consideration.

I may say at this point that the Senator from North Dakota first laid down his proposition that these rates were established to equalize the difference in the cost of production, including the transportation. I wish to remind the Senator of this, which I am sure he knows to be true: Take the case of earthenware, which comes from Germany, which comes from England, which comes from France, which comes from Japan. The difference in the cost of transportation is a very material item. The experts estimate that the cost of transportation of earthenware from Europe is about 10 per cent.

The cost of transportation of earthenware from Japan is 40 per cent. Under one paragraph, including these wares from all these different countries, including these differences in transportation, they lay down one rate and tell us that that rate was framed for the purpose of equalizing the difference in the cost of production and transportation. If that is the theory upon which this bill is founded, if that is what the committee intended to work out, then I say that it has woefully failed. It may develop this beautiful theory; it may try to have the people of this country believe that it has gone into these questions, that it has studied them carefully, and that it has accomplished nothing more than to equalize the difference in cost of production, including transportation. Upon analysis this bill will not stand; and I want to call the Senator's attention now to the fact that yesterday I only dwelt upon the difference in the cost of production in the different countries. There are other elements entering into that question. There are cases where the export price is different from the selling price at home. In such cases as that, when the Senator from North Dakota was taking prices for the purpose of ascertaining the difference in cost of production and transportation, and in fixing this world level of prices as between the different countries, I should like to ask the Senator which price he took—the home selling price or the export price? Will the Senator from North Dakota please enlighten us on that subject?

I may be able to give the Senator some information. Apparently he does not consider that as material, judging from his refusal to make any reply to my interrogatory. I think the country is interested in knowing that, however, and in this document, entitled "Depreciated Exchange and International Trade," prepared by the Tariff Commission, on page 53, I find a table giving the differences between the prices at home and the export prices of products from Germany.

The Senator has taken these prices, including the prices from Germany as well as the other countries. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] yesterday rather referred solely to the situation in Germany as furnishing the reason for the increase of the tariff. The Senator from North Dakota has told us that he has ascertained the cost of production by the prices. Now, I desire to call the attention of the Senator to this statement. The statement is prepared from actual importation prices.

Under the existing law the tariff is imposed upon the price of the foreign commodity, and the price on which the duty is imposed is the home selling price or the exporting price, whichever is higher; so now, under the law, when a shipment of goods is imported, it is necessary for the importer to make a statement under oath as to the home selling price and the export price, and it is from those actual transactions that the Tariff Commission made up this table.

Decorated chinaware: In the case of a shipment of that amounting to 5,141.67 marks at the internal price, the export price was 6,246.5 marks, making a difference of 1,104.83 marks, or a difference of 21 per cent.

Another shipment of chinaware from Germany amounted at the home price to 1,016 marks; the export price was 2,225 marks, a difference of 119 per cent.

In the case of another shipment the home price was 954 marks, the export price 1,414 marks, a difference of 459 marks, or 48 per cent.

Another shipment of china had a price of 448 marks at home, the invoice price was 612 marks, a difference of 164 marks, or 37 per cent.

Another shipment amounted to 263 marks at home, 532 marks for export, a difference of 269 marks, or 102 per cent.

Poreclain: A shipment amounted to 37 marks at home, 84 marks for export, a difference of 46 marks, or 124 per cent.

Another shipment of porcelain: Price at home 802 marks, export price 1,816 marks, a difference of 1,014 marks, or 126 per cent.

A shipment of earthenware: Home price 103 marks, export price 328 marks, a difference of 224 marks, or a difference of 216 per cent.

Another shipment of earthenware: Home price 1,141 marks, export price 3,003 marks, a difference of 1,861 marks, or 163 per cent.

A shipment of locks: Home price 967 marks, export price 1,212 marks, a difference of 245 marks, or 25 per cent.

A shipment of chemicals and laboratory supplies: Home price 79,563 marks, export price 106,364 marks, a difference of 26,801 marks, or 34 per cent.

In sundries, including aluminum ware, pocketknives, dolls, and so forth, there was a difference of 66 per cent.

In one shipment of worsted yarn there was a difference of 174 per cent; in another shipment a difference of 30 per cent; in another shipment a difference of 20 per cent.

Now, I should like to inquire if the Senator from North Dakota can tell us which of these prices was used by the committee as a basis for the tariff upon the items to which I have referred?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the Senator seems to be asking questions without any particular object in view. The Senator says that one set of dishes is sold for one price and another set of dishes is sold for another price and a third set is sold for another price, and then he asks me which one of these prices we took. I certainly can not answer that question.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. No; I will come to that a little later. What I am anxious to know now is this: I have shown that there is a difference between the home selling price and the export price of the same shipment. What I want to know is which set of prices the Senator and his colleagues upon the committee used in ascertaining the difference between the cost of production in Germany and the cost of production in the United States?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, let me answer the Senator again just as I have answered him some three times before when he asked the identical question. The Senator has made practically the same argument almost in the same words that he made twice before, and I have answered each time that he has closed his argument with a question. In answer to that question I have stated that we have tried to ascertain the cost of production where it was possible in the foreign countries, and where that is not possible, of course, we have then taken the next best standard that could be adopted, the selling price of the article, not for exportation particularly, but the selling price of the article for home consumption in wholesale quantities. That is the basis of all of our tariffs that have been levied in all of the years on an ad valorem basis.

Germany may have a provision whereby she will compel her manufacturers to pay a certain amount for the privilege of exporting, which in effect amounts to an export duty upon the things which are made in Germany and exported. That is a regulation that may be taken away entirely, or it may be continued. We shall have to assume, if we are going to have a protective tariff, that it may be taken away at any time; and if the export duty is removed then it is a question of the competition in the markets of the United States between the foreign product without that export duty and the product that is manufactured in the United States. We have based our duties as nearly as we could upon the only thing that would be competitive, and that is the selling price at home, showing how low they can sell the article, and the selling price in the United States with a reasonable return upon the investment.

I can not make that clearer. That is the basis. That was the basis of the emergency tariff bill. It is the basis of all tariffs in which the duties are levied on an ad valorem basis. All of them have provided that the duties shall be assessed upon the wholesale selling price of the foreign commodities in the foreign markets; not the price at which they may be exported, but the price at which they are sold. We have tried to base our duties upon that and to make them as nearly equal as we can.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I thank the Senator for his statement, and I am sure the Senator has answered the question according to his best information, but I am certainly sure that the Senator will not object if I remind him that the duties levied under this bill are to be imposed upon the goods according to the home price or the export price, whichever is the highest.

Mr. McCUMBER. The purpose of that the Senator understands, of course. Where a country does impose an export duty and therefore makes the goods higher priced in the United States, we shall impose a greater duty upon that article. That, I think, is the same also in the case of the emergency tariff law. As I now remember, there is no difference in that respect.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I have drawn attention to that for the purpose of developing the fact that there is no certain relation between these prices abroad and the prices upon which the duties are to be levied under this bill, and that those prices to which I have referred furnish no index to the cost of production, and thus does the beautiful theory dwelt upon by the Senator from North Dakota vanish.

I would like to call the attention of the Senator to another thing. Let us suppose that there come to this country five shipments of decorated chinaware from Germany.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LENROOT in the chair). Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Only two or three Senators are paying any attention to this debate, and we might as well have a little conversation about it. One sure way of overcoming all of this is by the adoption of the American valuation plan, of the Fordney variety; that is to say, that they are all brought to a common level of valuation. Would the Senator agree to that? He is complaining about the situation. Would he agree to that one sure remedy?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I can not accept the Senator's statement that that is "one sure remedy." On the contrary, I can demonstrate that it is not.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Of course, the Senator is entirely mistaken about that, because the American plan of valuation brings them all to one level; but the Senator does not agree to that. He says that is not the remedy. What is his remedy? The Senator has been talking for four or five days about the situation. What is the Senator's remedy for what he says is an evil, which he points out? Will he kindly tell us?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I will be glad to answer the Senator. First, as to his statement about the Fordney American valuation plan, that plan fixes the definite amount of the duty on the article, but the difference in the cost of production abroad in the different countries remains the same, and has the same effect. But I do not care to engage in a discussion of the American valuation plan at this time. I expect to do that at some later stage.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I am not going into a discussion of that proposition, because it is not imminent; it would not be practical, because it is not here. I merely made that statement to find whether the Senator favored that plan. Then would the Senator favor the plan of placing the valuation on the American wholesale selling price of the foreign article in the American market?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. That is a modified form of the Fordney plan.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Whether modified or not modified, does the Senator favor that plan?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. That would not in principle alleviate the situation to any greater extent than what the Senator chooses to denominate the Fordney plan.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Then I understand the Senator is not for the Fordney plan, and he is not for what we ordinarily denominate the Burgess plan. Is that correct?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator is quite right.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. He is not for either plan, nor is he for the plan of fixing the foreign valuation as the basis of our valuation for tariff purposes. What is the Senator's basis of valuation for tariff purposes?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, in the first place, I am not framing this bill. In the second place, I desire to refer to an answer which I made to a similar question of the Senator yesterday. He wanted to know what I would do. I told him then, and I desire to repeat, and I trust that not only he but other Senators will realize the importance of the statement, that this is a new tariff bill. There should not be any new bill until there is first ascertained the necessity for a new bill, and it should not be framed unless the ingenuity of the Congress can devise a plan to meet the situation.

The Senator virtually confesses that this bill, as to these things we have been talking about, does not meet the situation. My reply is: Let us not leave the present law until we can assess the remedy with some degree of certainty of the mischief in existing conditions, and then devise a remedy to meet it which will not be disastrous in its consequences.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, the Senator is attributing language to me that I have not used. He says I make a confession that the measure we propose will not meet the existing situation. No such language has escaped my lips. The Senator wants to continue the existing law. In other words, the Senator is a tariff-for-revenue man, and he is opposed to any bill for protection. That is where he gets in the last analysis. That is true, is it not?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. No; it is not.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. What is the Senator for?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I will develop that later. It is wholly immaterial——

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. No; it is not immaterial.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. What my individual view about this measure may be is wholly immaterial. It is a question as to what this bill means, and how it is going to operate. I do not suppose the Senator from Indiana has brought in this great tariff bill because of my views on the subject.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. No; certainly not. In the first place, I did not know what the Senator's views were, and in the next place I apprehended that, like all members of his party, he was not just quite sure as to what he did believe. Some of them are free traders, some are incidental protectionists, some are for a tariff for revenue only, and some for tariff only for revenue, as two different Democratic platforms have expressed it. While the Democratic platform of 1912 decried protection as a great crime, as unjust, illogical, inequitable, and unconstitutional, it yet stated that because the business of the country was adjusted to it, it should not be at once destroyed, else it might destroy the entire fabric of American industry. Therefore, I would not permit the Senator to frame a tariff bill for me, because I do not know what he believes, and we have never had any way of finding out what he believes.

What I am trying to get at is this: For seven or eight days the Senator has been criticizing the bill because of the system of valuation adopted. I am trying to find out whether he is simply finding fault, pointing out errors, holding up flaws, viewing with alarm, or whether he has something really constructive in his mind as a substitute for what we propose. I am satisfied with this situation. It is precisely the basis that has been used for 150 years of American tariff making. It has not been a perfect system, but it is the best that has yet been devised, and while conditions are now somewhat more chaotic in the industrial and financial world than ever before, nevertheless the principle remains the same, and the basis of valuation is just as fixed as in any previous tariff bill; it is just as fixed as in the one to which my friend from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] has his name attached, the Simmons law, or the Underwood-Simmons law, as we ordinarily call it.

So the basis of valuation is the same in principle that we have always had, and the same objection might have been raised, and I imagine that the Senator has read the same objections made by men in the past, made to the McKinley law, made to the Dingley law, made to the Payne-Aldrich law, since I became a Member of Congress. The same objections were made over and over that we had varying values to deal with, owing to the fluctuation of prices, the difference in wages, and the difference in the cost of production, in the countries that sent their goods to us. They are the same old objections. Yet the appraising officers have gone on in a practical way to administer the law, just as they will this, notwithstanding the vastly varying prices and costs of production in the different countries of the world.

I have told the Senator where I stand on the proposition. Where does he stand on the proposition?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I call attention to the fact that the Senator says that we are framing this bill upon the same principle on which other bills have been framed for 150 years. I have no war to make upon levying the duties upon the importations of a foreign article based upon its price. That has not been the burden of my objection, but I have been trying to call attention to the fact that the world situation has changed, and now I hope the Senator from Indiana will not take offense when I say that his last remark amounts to a confession that he and his colleagues have not learned anything for the last 150 years; that they are doing now, in this great changed world condition, the same old thing which they have been doing all during the life of the Republican Party.

It does seem to me that what the Senator has said amounts to this further confession, that whenever disturbances arise in the economic situation of the world affecting conditions here in the United States, they have only one remedy, and they study nothing else. In all the realm of medicine they apply only one remedy. They know of but one remedy for the ills which this country bears. They at once, like the patent-medicine doctor, prescribe a dose of Peruna whenever they find anything wrong in the economic condition, and now, in this extraordinary situation, they say to the people of the United States, "Do not take one dose only, but take half a dozen doses at once."

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I come back to the old question and ask the Senator what he would do, to which I have had no reply.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, before I get through with this discussion I expect to do so, but evidently the Senator, by insisting upon an answer to that question, admits that he does not know what ought to be done.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Oh, yes; I know.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. He is not trying to defend the bill.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Yes; I am going to defend the bill without any equivocation or reservation, and it is entirely susceptible of defense. But I am trying to find out from the Senator what he would do. He is trying to tear down all that we have done, and he offers no substitute in the world. He is against the Fordney plan of valuation; he is against the Burgess plan of valuation; he is against the foreign plan of valuation. What is he for by way of valuation? Does he want to tear down all the customhouses and have absolute free trade with all the world?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator is evidently seeking to force a digression.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. No; it is not a digression. It is the very thing the Senator has been talking about for four or five days.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Not at all; and I am not going to be led off into that discussion at this time. I again remind the Senator that there is one thing I would not do. I would not change existing conditions until I knew the change would be beneficial to the country.

The Senator from North Dakota has been complaining about the amount of time consumed. I do not want to leave the proposition I have been discussing. Here are two different kinds of prices——

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator from North Dakota has not made any complaint about the time that is consumed in a discussion of the tariff bill. A great many general speeches are being made, which are perfectly proper, and might as well be made now as at any other time. What I complain of is taking up other subjects and spending hours and days on them, as we spent to-day more than two hours in discussing a resolution which had already been passed. I am making no objection to the Senator's discussion of the tariff bill.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am very glad to be advised of that.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator will yield further to me for a moment, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business to-day, it shall take a recess until Monday at 12 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Dakota? There being no objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I think the proposition which I have been discussing is important. The tariff is levied upon the selling price, either export or domestic, whichever is the highest. In Germany the selling price at home is very much less than the export price. The Senator from North Dakota has advised us that the committee used the home selling price. Of course, the duty is not levied upon that price, and therefore the duty can not measure the difference between the cost of production abroad and in the United States. So, it seems to me, that as to the countries where there is a difference between the home selling price and the export price, the bill is not founded upon the general principle of trying to equalize the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad, including transportation.

I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that in the article to which I have referred—and, by the way, all of these transactions occurred in the same month—there were five shipments of decorated chinaware. The difference between the home price and the export price in one shipment was 21 per cent; in another 119 per cent; in another, 48 per cent; in another, 137 per cent; and in another, 102 per cent. I am sure we would all be glad if the Senator from North Dakota would tell how he reconciles those differences during the same month regarding the same commodities coming from the same country at these greatly varied prices. There are those differences in the home prices during the same month, varying from 21 per cent to 137 per cent.

Is that the basis upon which legislation of this sort should be founded, legislation which affects the welfare of every man, woman, and child in the land? It develops from this instance that there is no stable basis upon which legislation can be founded at this time, and so, replying further to the Senator from Indiana, I would not undertake to change existing conditions until there was a reasonable certainty that the change would be better for the country.

Mr. President, I would like to get a little more information from the Senator from North Dakota. Yesterday I gave a statement, coming from officials of our Government, to the effect that in the month of February wages in Germany had advanced 23 per cent, and in the month of March wages advanced another twenty-odd per cent. Now, I should like to inquire of the Senator from North Dakota as of what date did the committee ascertain the prices on which the rates were based? Can the Senator give that information in just a few words, because I do not want to consume time?

Mr. McCUMBER. In three words—the latest obtainable.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Well, Mr. President, that is a short answer. The Senator certainly complied with that part of my request. But I desire to state that what we have hitherto been led to believe was the date when the prices of the great run of articles was ascertained was in August of last year. The so-called Reynolds report, which cost the Government of the United States $100,000, was based upon prices obtained in August of last year. If there has been any ascertainment of prices since that date I am inclined to believe that it was not done in a systematic way. It was done, if done since that time, upon very uncertain conditions. The prices have been varying from time to time, from day to day, and we are now left in the dark as to what time and what date the prices were ascertained. The Senator from North Dakota says the latest available date. We do not yet know what that latest available date was. We do not know whether it was last August or some previous time. The Reynolds report, prepared on prices of last August, covered only comparatively few articles. There has never been, so far as I am advised, any attempt by the majority of the Finance Committee to ascertain all of the prices of the various commodities included in the bill. They have been gathered from time to time, such as were gathered, but I submit that they have not ascertained at any time in any systematic way the prices involving all the commodities in the bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I think the Senator is mistaken in that. I think that we have obtained the prices and the very latest possible prices involved in each one of the items in the bill. The Senator knows that in these fluctuations we not only have our weekly but our monthly summary of foreign commerce of the United States. We have our many trade journals quoting the prices on imports and quoting the prices of the American articles. We have them before us every day, always giving the very latest reports made upon any subject.

I agree with the Senator that the Reynolds report, being based upon the prices of August, 1921, becomes somewhat ancient, but we have not followed that. We could not consult it except to ascertain what the conditions were at that time and then examine the reports which have been made since to get the changes which have been made. Of course, there will be these fluctuations. We are having them to-day under the present tariff law. The duty which will be received to-day upon an importation may be almost doubled to-morrow by reason of the fluctuation in the value of the imported articles, but that is no reason why we should not continue our duties. We shall have to impose duties, no matter whether the price of the commodity goes up or goes down. We have to meet those troubles whether it be upon a tariff for revenue only or whether it be on a tariff for both revenue and protection. I merely wish to say that we did not confine ourselves at all to the statements that were made in the Reynolds tariff report.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The committee went to all sources, and I have no doubt that they did the best they could on the theory that they are supposed to adopt.

Mr. McCUMBER. If we have a report from a trade journal showing what two or three days before were the prices of articles which were being imported into New York, does not the Senator have as late and as reliable data as it would be possible to get? We have the invoices, and we know at what prices the goods were purchased.

I believe that, while there may be some fraud in connection with our importations, as a rule our officials obtain very accurate information as to the foreign cost of any article which is imported. We have such information in the reports that come from the customs service almost daily, in the reports that come from the trade journals, and especially in the governmental report published by the Department of Commerce entitled "The Monthly Summary of the Foreign Commerce of the United States."

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I think the Senator from North Dakota will agree that those prices fluctuate from day to day and from month to month.

Mr. McCUMBER. Of course they fluctuate, and that adds to the difficulty; there is no question about that. I have stated that it was a difficult task on account of the fluctuations; but believing that it is necessary, notwithstanding those fluctuations, to have a protective tariff law upon the statute books, we intend to place one there.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, that, of course, I believe is the real foundation of the pending bill. I am going to examine the facts regarding some of its schedules a little later; but it seems to me that the Senator from North Dakota has now stated the real object in framing the bill, and that is the idea of protection. Under paragraphs (a) and (b) of section 315 will be found the measure of protection which this bill itself states is the basis upon which these rates are constructed, and that section of the bill does not indicate that the bill is framed upon the basis of equalizing the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. Why does the Senator from New Mexico say that the Senator from North Dakota now states that the purpose of the bill is protection to American industry? Did not the Senator from North Dakota in opening the debate upon the bill so state?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Oh, the Senator from North Dakota has always contended for that.

Mr. McCUMBER. Has not the Senator from North Dakota claimed that all along? Can the Senator from New Mexico see any difference between a declaration that the bill is for the purpose of protecting American industries, as well as raising revenue, and a statement that in providing such protection we have sought to secure as just a measurement as we can of the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad? That leaves us protection. If we merely equalized the cost of production, we should still have protection, because the American manufacturer, being in close contact at all times with the American purchaser, will be able to compete, and more than to compete, with the foreigner if he can meet him upon an even basis in the markets of the United States.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I submit that there is a vast difference between protection in order to equalize, and to the extent only of equalizing, the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad and protection as defined in paragraphs (a) and (b) of section 315 of this bill. If the Senator from North Dakota will once admit that the bill does carry protection further than for the purpose of equalizing the difference between the cost of production abroad and at home, including transportation, the discussion of the bill will be very much limited, but so long as he contends that the protection carried in this bill does not extend beyond the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad, it will be incumbent upon us who are at least hoping to advise the people of this country what the bill does mean to continue the discussion, and to develop, if we can, the things which this bill really means.

There is a vast difference, as I have said, between protection undefined and protection limited to the difference in the cost of production. What I am trying to demonstrate is that the protection carried in this bill is quite different from the kind of protection for which the Senator from North Dakota is contending. The Senator from North Dakota knows that it sounds very well to the people of this country to say that the pending bill is framed for the purpose of equalization. If he can ever get the people of the country to believe that he will be happy; but, in my humble judgment, if the people ever do believe that, it will be because they have been deceived.

Mr. President, the Senator says that the duties in this bill are levied in order to equalize the cost of production at home and abroad. I hold in my hand a little summary of the articles in the chemical schedule of the bill only, on which the rates of duty provided in the bill are precisely the same as the rates of duty which were provided under the Payne-Aldrich bill, which was passed in 1909. I will ask the Senator from North Dakota if he believes that there has been any change in the cost of the production of all this array of chemical articles, either in this country or abroad, since 1909?

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator repeat his question?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am sorry to take the time, but I know the Senator from North Dakota must have some light to shed upon this situation. I have here some pages merely giving the items taken from the chemical schedule in the pending bill on which the rates of duty provided in the bill and those provided in the Payne-Aldrich bill of 1909 are identical. If the bill is, as the Senator has said, based upon the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad, I should like to ask him if he and his colleagues on the Committee on Finance ascertained that as to all of this array of items there has been no change in the cost of production, either at home and abroad, since 1909?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly, there has been a big change in the cost of production in the United States. In some instances there has also been a higher cost of production in foreign countries; but as to some foreign countries, I think the cost of production is much less. On the whole, however, the cost of production in the United States has vastly increased over that of 1909.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Then, it is a very peculiar situation that in the pending bill there is a vast array of articles upon which the duties imposed are at precisely the same rates as under the Payne-Aldrich law.

Mr. McCUMBER. Very well. We saw that we could get along with that duty. I think in some instances the rates in the Payne-Aldrich bill were possibly higher even at that time than was absolutely necessary; perhaps I can say that in a great many instances they were higher than was necessary; but I stated when I opened the debate upon the pending measure that the committee paid very little attention to the rates provided by the Payne-Aldrich law, but paid a great deal of attention to the competitive differences between countries at this time. That is what should guide us rather than the Payne-Aldrich bill rates. It may be that in many instances we have practically the same rates as those provided in the Payne-Aldrich bill, while in some instances the rates in the pending bill are less and in some instances more.

The Senator, however, asked me a question which, if I understood him aright, was whether on the whole the cost of production in the United States had increased. I say positively, yes; it has increased. In many foreign countries such as England the cost of production has also increased; in some instances there has been probably about the same ratio of increase, so that the relation between costs is practically the same as at the time the Payne-Aldrich bill was enacted into law. I can not at present refer to any particular article, but on the whole prices have increased almost throughout the world with the exception probably of Germany, Czechoslovakia, southeastern Europe, and possibly to some extent China and to a less extent Japan.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Mexico yield to me?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. If the Senator will pardon me, I should like to know whether the Senator from North Dakota and his colleagues ascertained that the cost of production in the United States and in the various countries from which chemicals are obtained had increased in the same ratio from 1909 to the present time?

Mr. McCUMBER. I think not as a whole. I do not think it has increased in the same ratio. In the case of Great Britain, however, the chances are that the increase has been about in the same ratio, while in the case of Germany, I think it will be found that it has not increased in the same ratio, and that is true of southeastern Europe in general.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, now will the Senator from New Mexico yield to me for a moment?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I believe I would rather not yield just now until I conclude the discussion of this question with the Senator from North Dakota. I think it will be helpful if I should go ahead at this time. I hope the Senator from Utah will pardon me.

Mr. President, I hold in my hand a report of the Tariff Commission entitled "Depreciated Exchange and International Trade." The report was prepared this year, and from it I find that, taking 100 as the index figure for the year 1913, prior to the war, in September, 1921, the index figure has changed not only for the United States but for various countries mentioned. The index figure is made of a certain number, usually a considerable number of commodities produced in a given country, and the average of the prices is taken and compared with a certain date. In the report which I hold in my hand the index price for 1913 was fixed at 100. If in 1913 100 was the index price in the United States for these articles and we follow that down to the present time, we can ascertain the advance or depreciation in prices during the given period. We can also ascertain whether there is a variation in the advance of depreciation in regard to the different countries; and so I find this on an examination of this table:

Taking 100 as the price in 1913—and that is the figure taken for all these countries—I find that in this country in January, 1919, that index price had advanced to 195; in September, 1921, that price had decreased to 143.

In England, taking 100 as the 1913 index price, in January, 1919, that index price was 224; in September of last year it was 176.

In France in January, 1919, the index price was 348; in September, 1921, it was 344.

In Germany in 1913 the index number was 100; in March of 1920 it was 1,615; in September of 1921 it was 1,777.

Mr. President, we know that those prices have varied in the different countries; and notwithstanding that we find in this bill, in this chemical schedule, a vast array of rates of duty which are precisely the same rates which were carried in the Payne-Aldrich bill, framed in 1909. What becomes of the boasted theory, when applied to the facts of this case, that this bill was framed for the purpose of equalizing the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator tell me what he is reading from?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I will give the Senator the page.

Mr. McCUMBER. Is it the pamphlet entitled "Depreciated Exchange and International Trade"?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am reading from "Depreciated Exchange and International Trade."

Mr. McCUMBER. The table on page 14?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I commenced reading on page 14.

Mr. McCUMBER. Why, Mr. President, that table is a table of the purchasing power, parities, and rates of exchange. It has nothing to do with the prices of commodities in the exchange between countries, but simply shows the purchasing power in the case of the different commodities in the same country. I do not know what the Senator quoted it for.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am sorry the Senator has made that statement. I do not want it to appear to the country that this bill was framed by a Senator who did not know during the time the bill was framed, and does not know even now, the index figures of prices in these countries.

I say to the Senator that if he will only read this document, and inform himself, he will find that the index numbers which I read were the index numbers used for the purpose of ascertaining the parity of purchasing power of money in those countries, but that they are a correct statement of the index prices for those years there is no doubt at all; and it is a woeful situation, it is a pitiable situation, when the chairman of the committee tells us that he has based this bill upon the difference in prices, and now confesses that he does not know what those prices were. If the Senator will only read, on the first page here, just exactly how these figures of purchasing power, parity, and rates of exchange were obtained, he will find out that what I have just said is true, that they used these index figures for the purpose of ascertaining through a mathematical calculation what the parity of purchasing power is; so what I have said as to the index figures is verified by this report itself, coming from the Tariff Commission.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I had supposed that the Senator was quoting these figures, and so understood, for the purpose of determining the foreign price and the American price of any commodity upon which we should have based our tariff rates. I can not see even now the relation to this question in the slightest degree of a table designed to show the purchasing power, parities, and rates of exchange on commodities in any other country. The Senator may have quoted the figures for an entirely different purpose than that which I anticipated. My declaration was that in some countries prices had gone up comparatively the same as in our own—the Senator was discussing that subject—that in some countries the prices of commodities had gone down, and that they were not on a comparative basis with the prices in the United States. I assumed that the Senator was discussing that subject, and was attempting to show by this table, when he quoted the German prices, that, as a matter of fact, the prices in Germany had increased rather than decreased. I failed to see the connection, and I fail to see it yet.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I am sorry the Senator did not, in the instance, realize the purpose for which I referred to these index numbers, else I am sure that he would not have been led to make the criticism of my citation which he did make. I quite realize that in the examination of these questions we may all get confused at times; and all I care to say further regarding the matter is that the tables which I have given are tables of the index numbers for those different countries, and they show the variation in prices of the index figures of those countries; and alongside of those tables I offer and ask to have inserted as an appendix to my remarks, without reading, the table I have before me, for the purpose of showing this large number of articles taken from the chemical schedule only which are identical with the duties imposed by the Payne-Aldrich Act of 1909; so that if the Finance Committee undertook to frame a bill based upon the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad at the time this bill is to go into effect, it has woefully and miserably failed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the table referred to will be printed in the RECORD.

(See Appendix A.)

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I understood that the Senator desired to impress the Senate with the index numbers of the different countries as recorded in the report of the Tariff Commission.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. No; if the Senator will pardon me, I offered those simply for the purpose of showing that changes were made between 1909 and now.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; but what I want now to call the attention of the Senate to is what the changes would have been if the value of the mark in 1921 upon the basis of the gold standard had been the same as the value of the mark in 1913. In other words, at 100 per cent in 1913 the mark was worth 24 cents, in round numbers. In 1921 it was worth one-third of 1 cent. The index number in 1921 was seventeen times what it was in 1913; but the mark had decreased seventy-two times in value, and therefore the index number of the cost of producing goods in Germany upon a parity of the gold basis of 1913 would have been 7,200 instead of 1,700.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, at a later date I purpose discussing in detail this question of exchange, including conditions generally in Germany.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator there in reference to the value of the mark?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. While the gold value of the mark in other countries may be as indicated by the Senator from Utah, in Germany it is actually worth more; its purchasing power is some three times more than it would be in this country, for instance. Is not that true?

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, it is worth more than that, I think, Mr. President. When the paper mark was worth 52 cents in Germany, I asked the leading statistician of Germany, whom I know very well, to let me know what the purchasing power of a gold mark was in Germany at that time, and he told me that in comparison it was worth about 3.54 times the amount upon the items that I named, which were rent, wages paid to employees, and clothing. Those were the three items I asked about, and that was the information I got from the leading statistician of Germany.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think that is quite correct; so that in figuring the cost of production in Germany we must figure it upon that basis, and not upon the basis of the paper mark.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, if the paper mark was worth one-third of a cent, the gold mark would be worth three and one-half times that much, which would be a little over a cent purchasing power instead of one-third of a cent. Of course, the Senator knows that the paper mark even went below one-third of a cent, and it is true that the purchasing power of the gold mark within Germany for the commodities that I named is worth three times that of the paper mark; but the difference between the paper mark to-day and what it was in 1913, before the war, is seventy-two times.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, the latter remark made by the Senator from Utah, I am sure, must have been made inadvertently.

Mr. SMOOT. No; it was not.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Unless he confines it to gold in foreign markets.

Mr. SMOOT. That was the basis of my statement, and I made the statement on the basis of a comparison between gold to purchase a mark and a paper mark. In other words, if they go out to purchase gold with marks, they have to give 72 marks in paper to get 1 mark in gold.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator is right about that; but when we come to this question of the parity of purchasing power, we hear quite a different story. We find that the purchasing power of the mark——

Mr. SMOOT. The paper mark.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Of the paper mark, as compared with gold in Germany, has never varied to any such extent as the remarks of the Senator would probably be interpreted to mean. I find on page 16 of this document on "Depreciated Exchange in International Trade" just what this purchasing power parity of German exchange is, and in March, 1920, it was 287.4, compared with 100 in 1913.

Mr. SMOOT. That was in 1920?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. That was in March, 1920. It has not varied as much as some people would believe. In September it was 196. In other words, the prices in Germany have been rising all the time, reaching such a point that the gold will not purchase in Germany any more than about two times the amount of goods it would have purchased prior to the war.

Mr. SMOOT. I recognize the fact that it is not seventy-two times as much, because when the mark was worth 52 cents it had three and fifty-four hundredths times the amount in purchasing power in Germany that the paper mark converted into gold had. That was in the early part of 1921, when we began the consideration of the tariff bill, when I wrote to find out just exactly what the purchasing power of the paper mark in Germany was, not outside, but in Germany. It was 3.54. So the difference in the purchasing power in Germany between the gold mark and the paper mark would be ascertained by dividing whatever the paper mark is worth compared with the gold mark, which is one seventy-second of what it was in 1913, by 3.54.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I do not think it is advisable to consume time upon this subject. The Federal Reserve Board gives us very recent figures upon it.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I would like to relate an incident which occurred in the hearings, illustrating exactly what the Senator is referring to.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Before we pass to that, I would like to make a statement as to what the most recent figures printed by the Federal Reserve Board show, and, by the way, those figures were incorporated in the remarks of the distinguished Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] the other day. I think we had better refer to those figures and see just what it means at this time. I am sure that the country will be interested in knowing just what is disclosed by that table from the Federal Reserve Board. It is a very interesting table.

In this table it is shown how the prices in marks of these commodities have increased. Taking 100 as the basis on the 1st of July, 1914, before the war, we find that the value of the mark, as expressed in foodstuffs and other commodities, varied. Of foods, and so forth, taking 100 as the basis on the 1st of July, 1914, it varied in this way: In April, 1921, it had increased 1,187, and it has been increasing ever since until in April of this year the price had reached 5,707; in other words, 77 times the price, in marks, in the middle of 1914.

Mr. SMOOT. That is more like it. That is about what I said.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Of textiles and leather, the price had increased to 8,907, or eighty-nine times the price in marks in 1914. Measured in gold upon the exchanges of the world to-day, the mark is selling for just about what the Senator from Utah stated, one seventy-second of its value in gold at par, but prices of some commodities have gone up even more than the mark has fallen. Textile and leather prices have gone up eighty-nine times the prices brought in 1914. The prices of minerals have gone up sixty-four times the 1914 prices; the prices of sundries have gone up forty-nine times; the prices of all commodities, on the average, have gone up fifty-nine times. So the purchasing power of the mark in Germany at the present time does not vary very far from its purchasing power prior to the war.

Mr. SMOOT. I could not agree with the Senator on that. I will say this, that it is seventy-two times more to-day, instead of fifty-nine, which he just referred to.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Oh, Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. Just as when it was eight thousand two hundred times the index price, or eighty-two times the amount. It could not be otherwise.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator does not realize just what these figures are.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Utah agrees with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] in his figures.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I want an understanding of these figures. I have just read them, and if the Senator will listen to them he will find that the figures represent the increases in prices, stated in marks, from July, 1914, up to April of this year, and, in marks, textiles and other commodities have increased from 100 to 8,907, or eighty-nine times the price of leather and textile products in Germany in 1914, which shows that textiles and leather products in Germany are not selling at a depreciated price, represented by marks, or in any other way, more than they were in 1914, but the price in marks of leather and textile products is to-day eighty-nine times what it was in July, 1914, but the mark has depreciated only seventy-two times. It is worth one seventy-second of what it was in 1914 in gold, but these commodities have gone up in price eighty-nine times. This shows how they varied from month to month, and all commodities in Germany, measured in marks, have been climbing and climbing, until the last statement in April of this year showed that the price was practically fifty-nine times what it was in 1914.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator should not have said "all" commodities. He should have said "all commodities referred to by the Senator from North Carolina." For instance, as to leather and the products of leather, Germany has to pay gold for her skins, and she has to pay the importation cost, and gold in Germany is very high. But when you take the commodities which are made from the raw products produced in Germany, you have quite a different proposition.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator, of course, is again right, but his remark is a little disconcerting. In using the words "all commodities," I was, of course, referring to the average.

Mr. SMOOT. It is not the average.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. It is, and it is so stated here.

Mr. SMOOT. It is the average of the items referred to by the Senator from North Carolina, not the average of all the goods produced in Germany. It is the average of the articles and the prices thereof to which the Senator from North Carolina called attention in his speech, and I think he is right in that respect.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. All I can do is to read just what this table states. It gives a column of prices of foodstuffs, and so forth, then a column of textiles and leather, then a column of minerals, then a column of sundries, and then a column headed "All commodities."

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. Do we not confuse the real question somewhat by interjecting a consideration of the purchasing power of a medium of exchange in Germany in the purchase of articles produced in Germany? The Government itself, of course, assists the laboring man in many ways. Is not the real question the cost of a commodity, measured by the only standard money there is in the world to-day, the American dollar? The question with us in levying a tariff is what the dollar will buy of products from the manufacturer in Germany, and what that dollar will buy of the same products produced in the United States. Let us be perfectly fair in the matter. As was stated by the Senator from Utah, in those cases in which Germany must import raw material, which has gone up very considerably, in some instances, her costs of production are even more than they were in 1914. In those things generally which she produces in her home country, where the raw material is from the home country, as a rule the production costs are very much lower. There is a little table showing these things upon page 17 of the same pamphlet from which the Senator quoted.

If the Senator will take the German invoice prices in 1914 and 1921, which are reduced to the American dollar standard, he will find aluminum ware tea kettles cost in Germany in 1914 83 cents and in 1921 41 cents, reduced almost one-half. Another style cost 65 cents in 1914 and 37 cents in 1921; another cost 70.9 cents in 1914 and 40.5 cents in 1921. Another one of another class cost 60.8 cents in 1914 and 59.9 cents in 1921, being very close. Then there are two articles here that cost a little more in 1921, such as Berlin kettles, 4 centimeters—I do not know the material, but I suppose they are aluminum—costing 34.5 cents in 1914 and 36.5 cents in 1921. Then we come down to preserving kettles, which were 22.5 cents in 1914 and are now 28.3 cents; another that was 38 cents is now 53 cents, and so on.

On the whole, of course, there has been a considerable reduction, but we must say of the commodities that come into the United States in competition with ours, the price of production there has very materially decreased since 1914, whereas in Great Britain practically all her articles have increased in percentages, I think, comparatively as much, if not more than in the United States.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for making that statement. It illustrates, and I think demonstrates, precisely the thing for which I have been contending. Here we have a vast number of commodities, the larger portion of them coming from Germany, and we find that the rates proposed in the bill are identical with the rates of the Payne-Aldrich schedule prepared in 1909. So I say that if the bill has been framed for the sole purpose of levying duties to equalize the difference in the cost of production in the United States and Germany or the other countries it has miserably failed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if the Senator will take the time to examine the items he has placed in the RECORD, where the rates are the same in the pending bill as they were in the Payne-Aldrich bill affecting the first or chemical schedule of the pending measure, he will find that nearly all those rates are exceedingly low reduced into equivalent ad valorem. In fact, if there was any criticism to be made as to rates, I should have thought the Senator from New Mexico would have taken a different schedule than the chemical schedule. I do not want to take the time now, but if the Senator will take the items that he has put into the RECORD and convert the rates into ad valorem duties he will find they are very low ad valorem duties on the average.

There was a reason for that, Mr. President, and perhaps the Senator from New Mexico knows what it was. When the Payne-Aldrich law was enacted in 1909 there was not much of a chemical industry in the United States. The rates imposed in the Payne-Aldrich law under this schedule were perhaps the lowest rates that were in any schedule in the 1909 act. The reason for that was, I will say to the Senator, that there was no particular effort made in the United States at that time to establish the industry. There was no particular desire on the part of manufacturers in the country to establish it. The rates, therefore, were exceedingly low, taken as a whole, of course. I think, as I said, if the Senator will make the examination which I have suggested, he will find that the lowest rates to be found in the bill are the rates which he is now criticizing.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I am not at this time trying to demonstrate why these rates are high or low. What I do not want Senators to forget is that the chairman of the Finance Committee has said that the bill was carefully framed for the purpose of levying duties which would as nearly as possible equalize the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad, and he has further said that he has ascertained this difference by using the prices. Now we find that the prices have been varying from year to year and from month to month. Here we have a very large percentage of the items in the chemical schedule where the rate of duty is precisely the same as when the Payne-Aldrich bill was framed in 1909, and it will not do for the Senator from Utah to talk about high or low duties, specific or ad valorem. We have both specific and ad valorem rates here, where the rate of duty fixed in the pending bill is precisely the same as it was under the Payne-Aldrich law.

I desire to give it as my honest impression and my honest judgment, from an examination of the bill, that when the Republican Party came into power they thought they had to do something, it did not know what, to make a higher tariff upon products. When they got to studying conditions they either levied the duties under the old Payne-Aldrich law or in the main increased those duties, and whenever they did not know what else to do they accepted the figures placed in the Payne-Aldrich law, that law which was so obnoxious to the people of the country that they put the Republican Party out of power only a few months after its enactment.

I want the people of the country now to understand that the rates fixed in the pending bill are either the Payne-Aldrich rates or in the main are much higher rates, and they have been fixed here without any rhyme or reason, not for the purpose simply of equalizing the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad, but for the purpose of protection, and protection to the extent of creating a practical embargo upon the importation of commodities.

The purpose as stated in section 315 (a) is not that now contended for by the distinguished Senator from North Dakota. It said, "for the purpose of equalizing the difference in competition in trade," and I do not want that to be forgotten. It declares upon its face what is the purpose of the bill, and it is entirely different from that stated by the Senator from North Dakota. Now listen to this language, which I read from the bill itself:

SEC. 315 (a). That in order to regulate the foreign commerce of the United States and to put into force and effect the policy of the Congress by this act intended—

Here is your declared policy, and I submit that it is not that stated by the Senator from North Dakota. Here it is, proceeding with the language of section 315 (a)— whenever the President, upon investigation of the differences in conditions of competition in trade in the markets of the United States of articles wholly or in part the growth or product of the United States and of like or similar articles wholly or in part growth or products of competing foreign countries—

Then he is given authority to increase or diminish rates.

In the next subsection the policy is again stated in still broader language. There the policy is—differences in conditions of competition in trade, in the markets of the United States, or articles wholly or in part the growth or product of the United States and of like or similar articles wholly or in part the growth or product of competing foreign countries, shall find it thereby shown that an industry in the United States is being or likely to be—

is being or likely to be materially injured by reason of the importation—

And so forth. That is language as broad as commercial imagination may conceive. What is an injury in trade? I submit that there are in this country hundreds, yea thousands, of industries which would consider their trade injured if they did not have a monopoly of the American market. That is what they seek. They seek a monopoly, and if we permit them to go to the President of the United States and tell him how their business is going to be injured, they will appeal to him to help them create a monopoly because otherwise, forsooth, their trade might be injured. It is not confined to existing conditions. It leaves the country in its imagination to fix the rate of duty on this trade that may be injured before it is ever done; and what do some of the concerns in the Unitd States want? They want a monopoly, and when the Senator from North Dakota stands up and tells us that the bill is framed only for the purpose of equalizing the difference in the cost of production here and abroad, I say that his statement is contrary to the declared purpose as stated in the bill itself.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. Section 315 (a), which the Senator from New Mexico has just read, authorizes the President under certain circumstances to increase the rates of duty and declares the policy upon which those increases are to be based. The policy declared is what the Senator from New Mexico has stated.

Now, I want to ask the Senator from New Mexico if his argument that that declaration is the policy upon which the bill is framed is not greatly reenforced and strengthened by reason of the fact that it is not to be assumed, it is not thinkable, that the framers of this measure would prescribe one rule by which the President was to be governed in increasing the rates and would prescribe a different rule for fixing the original rates? Does not the Senator catch my point?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I do; and of course the statement of the Senator from North Carolina is very pertinent just at this juncture. I think the country must assume that what the Senator has just said is true, because it is inconceivable that this bill should be framed upon one theory, and that the bill itself should authorize the President to reframe the duties on an absolutely different theory.

Mr. SIMMONS. And to increase those same duties on a different basis.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. And to increase the same duties for a different purpose and in a different way.

Mr. SIMMONS. And especially, Mr. President, the declaration of the rule contained in that section of the bill must necessarily be accepted as the rule which must obtain, and did obtain, in the fixing of the other rates in the bill.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, it is inconceivable that any other conclusion could be reached, because I can not believe that any Senator of the United States, dealing in such troublous times with a subject which affects every man, woman, and child in this land, should deliberately frame a bill upon a theory which he himself felt to be unsound. Here we have the declaration in the bill that it is the policy of the majority that tariff duties should be levied upon one theory, while the Senator from North Dakota says the committee framed the bill upon another theory.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me further, the bill lays down clearly, in the section which the Senator has read, the policy upon which it was framed. The bill tells us what the yardstick was that measured the duties which are imposed in the bill, namely, the difference between the export selling price of foreign merchandise in this market and the domestic selling price of domestic products. That is the rule the framers of the bill have laid down; that is the measure of duty to which they have agreed. Having given us the rule, it is our duty as representatives of the people to see whether the existing facts justify the rates which the committee have proposed under that rule of measurement of the protection which should be accorded a given industry. Having given us, in other words, the rule upon which they measured the rate of duty to which an industry was entitled under the protective principle, we can easily, if we can obtain the facts, determine the question of whether the rate is too high or too low; whether the facts justify the rate; we can test the rate and find out whether it is just to the people and necessary to the industry.

When the Senator from North Dakota says, "We framed some of these duties upon another rule than that laid down in the bill, namely, the difference in the cost of production here and abroad," that prescribes another rule; that applies another yardstick for the purpose of determining the amount of protection to which an industry is entitled in fixing a rate. If that were the rule upon which these rates were based, then we could test the rate by that rule and see whether or not the facts justified the duty imposed upon that rule. Therefore I say that the people are entitled to know and the Senate is entitled to know what the rule is in order that we may by the facts test the rate fixed—measure the rate by that yardstick.

Mr. President, that being so, it becomes exceedingly important, it lies at the very basis of the consideration of these rates, that we should know, and know definitely, right at the outset, what was the rule on which these rates were fixed; what was the measure adopted for determining the protection to which an industry is entitled. Was it the rule stated in the bill, the difference between the export selling cost of foreign merchandise and the selling price of the domestic article in the American market, or was it the difference between the cost of production here and abroad? Until we know according to which one of those measures the rates were ascertained and fixed, we are unable intelligently to discuss the question of the rates; we are unable to apply the facts of the situation to the rule that the committee have laid down and say whether or not the facts justify the rates.

Mr. President, under those circumstances, I think—and I am not saying this in any controversial spirit—that it is absolutely necessary, if we are to get along with this bill, that the majority members of the Finance Committee should advise us definitely, right now, upon which of these two principles for measuring the rate of protection to which an industry is entitled under the protective principle this bill is to be defended and the Senate is to be asked to pass it. If I am told that it is upon the rule which the bill enunciates, then I will say that it is an easy matter for me, if I can secure the facts as to the export selling price of foreign merchandise and the selling price of the domestic article in the American market, to apply the test and ascertain whether the duties which have been imposed are unreasonable, or whether they are necessary in order to accomplish the purpose and carry out the policy of the bill. On the other hand, if I am told that the majority are going to discard the policy defined in the bill, and are going to ask for the adoption of the rates fixed, upon the idea that they measure the rates by the difference between the cost of production here and abroad, then we will have to scramble around and see if we can obtain the facts as to the cost abroad and the cost in this country, so that we may be able to test the rates given us and determine whether or not upon the facts the rates are justified. There is no way in the world by which we can intelligently discuss this matter until we shall have ascertained the basis and the measure of protection which it is proposed to accord to the industries of this country.

The Republican platform has told us heretofore that the basis of protection was to be the difference between the cost of production here and abroad, and protection in this country has been defended upon that basis.

This bill is a departure, as I undertook to show the other day, and proposes to levy tariff rates upon an entirely different rule, namely, the difference between the selling price here and abroad. I think the testimony before the committee, in the hearings, was all directed to the measure of protection proposed in the bill and defined in the particular section referred to; the testimony was all directed to that end. The information furnished in the book which has been given us as a guide to assist us in determining the fairness and the justice and the sufficiency of the rates proposed is addressed and directed to the theory that the rates were fixed upon the basis of the difference between prices here and abroad, and not the difference between the cost of production here and abroad.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. And without any relation to profits.

Mr. SIMMONS. And without any relation to profits of the American producer, of course. The whole question, however, has been drawn into a state of confusion by the suggestion on the other side, for the first time made yesterday by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], which called forth some little controversy in debate between the Senator and myself. The suggestion was that the rates are not based upon that principle at all, but are based upon the principle of the difference between the cost of production here and abroad; and I say if that is to be the basis instead of the basis defined in the bill, we must have other and different facts in order to test the rates. We have not those facts; the committee did not have them; and I think the majority members of the committee owe it to themselves, they owe it to the Senate, and they owe it to the country, to tell us positively and unequivocally whether they are going to defend the rates in the pending bill upon the principle laid down in the bill, or whether they are going to defend it upon the basis of the difference in the cost of production here and abroad. The people of the country are entitled to know that as well as we are, so that they may themselves apply the test and determine whether or not, in their judgment, the rates are justified. At any rate, Mr. President, it is utterly impossible to consider the rates with any degree of intelligence, or with any degree of justice to ourselves and the country, unless we know upon what rule of measuring the rate of protection to which an industry in this country is entitled this bill is written and is proposed here for enactment into law.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, in substantiation of the view taken of this bill as just announced by the Senator from North Carolina, a view which I also have taken of the bill, I think it wise in this connection to refer to a table which the Senator from North Carolina appended to his speech the other day. I refer to Appendix C, which gives a large list of commodities of which the selling price in the United States today is higher than the price of the domestic commodity, and this bill increases the tariff upon those articles. In the name of Heaven, I should like to know how, upon the theory of the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad, ascertained by prices, as the Senator from North Dakota says he has done, he can ever ascertain the necessity for increasing the tariff upon commodities which are now selling in this country at a higher price than comparable commodities manufactured here in the United States.

In this connection, Mr. President, I should like to have appended to my remarks Appendix C, which was printed as a part of the remarks of the Senator from North Carolina the other day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See Appendix B.)

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I think that if the country realizes the purpose for which this bill is framed it will not tolerate that such a bill shall ever become the law. I sincerely hope and pray that the people of the United States may study this bill, and that before it ever comes to a vote in the United States Senate the resentment of the people will roll up in such unmistakable terms that it will compel the recommitment of this bill, so that a bill shall be framed upon at least some known basis. The committee says one thing; the bill says another; and here we have the bill itself increasing duties upon imported articles which are selling to-day in great quantities for more than the comparable domestic article. Notwithstanding that, the duty is increased!

Mr. President, I dislike to consume so much time in talking about these things, and putting them in so many different ways, but I am doing it for the purpose of letting the people of this country know the very objectionable way in which this bill was framed.

Not only that, but this bill increases the duty upon articles which are not imported into this country at all, or where the importations are merely nominal. This bill increases the duty upon a vast number of articles where the importations are absolutely negligible or none; and why upon any theory—the difference in cost of production or the difference in competition in trade—should you increase the duties upon such commodities? It can only be done for one purpose, and that is to insure the perpetuation of existing monopolies in this country. Why increase the duty upon commodities which are not imported at all, or are imported in such infinitesimal quantities as not to amount to a drop in the ocean? Can you imagine any purpose? Upon what theory are those duties laid? It can not be done for the purpose of measuring differences in cost of production. It can not be done for the purpose of measuring difference in competition in trade, because there is no competition in trade; but the committee has raised these duties. I submit that no other reason can be advanced than that the majority of the committee is determined to perpetuate existing monopolies in this country and enable them not only to keep up their present prices but to raise them even higher.

Mr. President, I do not care to pursue this subject further at this time; but before concluding I want to return to a matter which I was discussing yesterday late in the afternoon.

Some Senators on the other side of this Chamber became very much interested in this discussion when I referred to the quantity of exports of manufactured products from the United States. I had published as an appendix to my remarks of yesterday a table which was very carefully prepared by the statistician of the National City Bank of New York giving some very, very interesting as well as important facts; and I desire to refer to that table again and to call attention to the importance to the manufacturing industries of this country of our export trade.

Those Senators who listened to me yesterday will recall that the exports from Germany are now only from one-half to one-third what they were prior to the war. I called attention to the fact that the production of all commodities in Germany now was just about one-half what it was prior to the war. I called attention to the further fact that our exports to Germany since the war were just about double what they were prior to the war; that our export trade as a rule had been declining with great rapidity, but that so far as Germany was concerned our exports there were increasing. They amounted last year to nearly $400,000,000.

The imports from Germany were only $90,000,000, and yet it was suggested that it was advisable to shut out even the $90,000,000. I call attention to the importance of this subject because we can not much longer continue to export anything from this country unless we get our pay in an exchange of commodities, and I want to emphasize the importance of this thing to the manufacturers. I apprehend that it is the common impression throughout the country that only the farmers of this country are interested in exports. They, of course, are vitally interested in exports; but when we realize the enormous quantity and value of manufactured products which are exported, the manufacturers of this country should arise and take notice of where they are going to be driven if this bill becomes law.

I shall refer only to the figures of 1921.

In 1921 the imports of foodstuffs into this country amounted to 16,355,000,000 pounds. The exports of food products in that year were 37,551,000,000 pounds.

Of manufacturing materials imported there were 54,000,000,000 pounds. There were exported 66,000,000,000 pounds.

Of manufactured goods, of all manufactures which could be reduced to pounds, the amount imported last year was only 4,673,000,000 pounds, but the exports were 23,699,000,000 pounds.

Mark those figures. These figures were made up by reducing to pounds all of these commodities which could be reduced to pounds, which comprised about 75 per cent of them; and while the export of all food products was 37,551,000,000 pounds, the export of manufactured products was 23,699,000,000 pounds, and when we come to values the situation becomes more striking.

In 1921 the value of all foodstuffs exported was only $1,263,000,000. The value of manufactured products was practically $900,000,000, three-fourths the value of all the exports of food products. When you talk about competition, when you begin to consider the question of protection of industry, and when you look into this bill and find out the industries which are protected, you will observe that this bill is framed primarily for the purpose of increasing the duty upon manufactured products.

Now, let us see where the competition comes in. In 1921, of food products, there were imported into this country 43½ per cent of the amount exported. Of commodities known as manufacturing commodities, materials to become the base materials for manufacture, we imported into this country in 1921 81.8 per cent of the amount we exported. But when it comes to the manufactured article, the manufactured commodity, we imported only 19.7 per cent of the amount we exported.

What reason is there for increasing the duties, in the main, upon manufactured articles at this time? I wish to state, further, without quoting the figures, that the amounts of all of the imports of all these classes are diminishing most rapidly, and in this unsettled condition, when the majority of the Finance Committee can not find any basis upon which to found a bill at this time; when this country is not being injured by any flood of imports; when these foreign countries, who have been our best customers in the past for these commodities, are still struggling under the effects of the war; when their production is not nearly back to normal; when they can not flood this market with goods, when our imports are diminishing, when you can not find any basis or reason for increasing the tariff, I submit to the judgment of the Senate and of the country whether this is the time to bring in a new tariff bill at all.

Mr. President, I understand it is desired, on the part of some Senators, at least, to close a little earlier this afternoon than we did on yesterday, and if it is agreeable to the chairman of the Finance Committee, I shall be glad to suspend at this time.

APPENDIX B.

Description.	Selling price foreign article.	Payne-Aldrich.	Underwood.	Senate bill.
Pocketknives	13 per cent above price of domestic.	Specific rates equivalent to 80 per cent.	55 per cent	Compound rates equivalent to 160 per cent.
Surgical instruments	4 per cent above price of domestic.	45 per cent	20 per cent	Compound rates equivalent to 74 per cent.
Common linen toweling, 19 inches wide	12 per cent under price of domestic.	50 per cent	30 per cent	60 per cent.

Ten per cent advance over the Payne-Aldrich rates brings the selling price of the imported article slightly above the price of the domestic article.

The following imported articles are selling in the United States at a higher price than the comparable domestic articles, noting that the rates of duty in the Senate bill have been materially increased:

Description.	Payne-Aldrich.	Underwood.	Senate bill.
China	60 per cent	55 per cent	70 per cent.
Decorated earthenware	do	40 per cent	50 per cent.
Antifriction balls for use in ball bearings	45 per cent	20 per cent	10 cents pound and 35 per cent (equals 47 per cent).
Card clothing	45 and 55 cents square foot equals about 28 per cent.	35 per cent	45 per cent.
Fishhooks and fishing tackles	45 per cent	20 per cent	Do.

Blues, such as Berlin, Prussian, Chinese, and all others, containing ferrocyanide of iron, in pulp, dry, or ground in or mixed with oil or water, 8 cents per pound.
Par. 69. Lead pigments: Litharge, 2½ cents per pound; white lead, 2½ cents per pound.	Par. 58. Lead: Litharge, 2½ cents per pound. Par. 53. White lead, 2½ cents per pound.
Par. 70. Ochers, siennas, and umbers, crude or not ground, one-eighth cent per pound.	Par. 47. Ocher and ochery earths, sienna and sienna earths, and umber and umber earths, not specially provided for, when crude or not powdered, washed, pulverized, one-eighth cent per pound.
Par. 71. Satin white and precipitated calcium sulphate, one-half cent per pound.	Par. 44. * * * and satin white, or artificial sulphate of lime, one-half cent per pound.
Par. 72. * * * spirit varnishes containing 5 per cent or more of methyl alcohol, 35 cents per gallon and 35 per cent ad valorem.	Par. 51. * * * spirit varnish containing 5 per cent or more of methyl alcohol, 35 cents per gallon and 35 per cent ad valorem.
Par. 72. * * * and all other varnishes, including so-called gold size or japan, not specially provided for, 25 per cent ad valorem.	Par. 51. Varnishes, including so-called gold size or japan, 25 per cent ad valorem.
Par. 75. Potassium: Cromate and dichromate, 2½ cents per pound.	Par. 60. Bichromate and chromate of potash, 2½ cents per pound.
ferrocyanide or yellow prussiate of potash, 4 cents per pound.	Par. 64. * * * yellow prussiate, 4 cents per pound.
iodide, 25 cents per pound.	Par. 62. Hydriodate, iodide * * * of potash, 25 cents per pound.
nitrate or saltpeter, refined, one-half cent per pound.	Par. 63. Nitrate of potash, or saltpeter, refined, one-half cent per pound.
Provided, That for a period of five years, beginning on the day following the passage of this act, there shall be levied, collected, and paid in addition thereto on all the foregoing a duty of 15 per cent ad valorem.
Par. 77. * * * Perfumed toilet soap, 30 per cent ad valorem.	Par. 69. * * * fancy or perfumed toilet soaps, 50 per cent ad valorem.
Par. 78. Sodium: Arsenate, 1 cent per pound.	Par. 75. * * * arsenate of soda, 1 cent per pound.
monohydrated, one-fourth cent per pound.	Par. 72. * * * monohydrate * * * of soda, one-fourth cent per pound.
chlorate, 1½ cents per pound.	* * * chlorate of soda, 1½ cents per pound.
chromate and dichromate, 1¾ cents per pound.	Par. 71. Bichromate and chromate of soda, 1¾ cents per pound.
ferrocyanide or yellow prussiate of soda, 2 cents per pound.	Par. 73. * * * yellow prussiate of soda, 2 cents per pound.
hydroxide or caustic soda, one-half cent per pound.	Hydrate of, or caustic soda, one-half cent per pound.
sesquicarbonate, one-fourth cent per pound.	Par. 72. * * * sesquicarbonate of soda, one-fourth cent per pound.
sulphate, crystallized, of Glauber salt, $1 per ton.	Par. 77. Sulphate of soda * * * $1 per ton.
sulphide, containing not more than 35 per cent of sodium sulphide, three-eighths cent per pound; containing more than 35 per cent, three-fourths cent per pound.	Par. 73. Sulphide of soda, containing not more than 35 per cent of sulphide of soda * * * three-eighths cent per pound; sulphide of soda, concentrated, or containing more than 35 per cent of sulphide of soda, three-fourths cent per pound.
silicate, three-eighths cent per pound.	Par. 76. Silicate of soda * * * three-eighths cent per pound.
thiosulphate, three-eighths cent per pound.	Par. 73. * * * hyposulphite of soda, three-eighths cent per pound.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, before moving an executive session I desire to take only one moment.

Senators on the other side, with a vehemence closely approaching a state provocative of apoplexy, have been inveighing against the proposition in the bill allowing the President to fix rates within certain circumscribed limits, and it has been asserted, with all the vehemence possible, that that gives the President the authority, and it is the purpose of it, to allow the President to fix a rate that will amount to an embargo; that what these manufacturers want is an embargo, and they expect to get an embargo under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. President, what is the President authorized to investigate? He is authorized to investigate the difference in the matter of competition in the home markets of the United States between an American produced article and a foreign produced article. He is authorized to investigate the condition of this competition. Then what can he do? Can he apply a rate that will amount to an embargo?

Let us glance at the section on page 273, which provides—

That in order to regulate the foreign commerce of the United States and to put into force and effect the policy of the Congress by this act intended whenever the President, upon investigation of the differences in condition of competition in trade—

And so forth. That is what he is to investigate, the differences in the competition in trade, and if he finds that there is a difference in competition, then what does he do? The bill proceeds:

That the ad valorem rate or rates of duty based upon such American selling price shall be the rate found upon said investigation by the President to be shown by the said differences in conditions of competition of trade in the markets of the United States necessary to equalize the differences so found in said conditions of competition.

He can not impose a rate which will more than equalize the conditions of competition, so as to give the American manufacturer an equal opportunity in the American market with the foreign manufacturer. He is not empowered to go one inch beyond the purpose of equalizing those differences.

That is not an embargo. It can not be construed into an embargo. It is just exactly what it says. The rates may be increased or they may be decreased in order to give the foreign importer an equal opportunity in the markets of the United States. There is no embargo in that. It can not be tortured into having any purpose of an embargo.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, in partial response to what the Senator has said and in connection with my previous remarks, I desire to call attention to the fact that the Reynolds Commission, which went out to ascertain the difference in the prices of articles in this country, both domestic and foreign, was unable to find comparable articles in more than about 20 per cent of the cases which they investigated. Where there is no comparable article produced in the United States, I submit you can not levy a tariff based upon the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad, and in only about 20 or 25 per cent of the cases did they find comparable articles, and they were seeking such articles.

Mr. McCUMBER. If there is no instance in which the law can apply, of course the law will not be applied.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate take a recess.

SENATE.

(Legislative day of Thursday, April 20, 1922.)

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	du Pont	Harrison	McCormick
Ball	Edge	Heflin	McKellar
Borah	Fletcher	Hitchcock	McLean
Bursum	Frelinghuysen	Jones, Wash.	McNary
Capper	Gerry	Kendrick	Nelson
Caraway	Glass	Keyes	Newberry
Colt	Gooding	King	Nicholson
Culberson	Hale	La Follette	Norbeck
Cummins	Harreld	Lenroot	Norris
Curtis	Harris	Lodge	Oddie

Overman	Robinson	Sutherland	Warren
Page	Sheppard	Swanson	Watson, Ga.
Phipps	Simmons	Townsend	Watson, Ind.
Poindexter	Smoot	Trammell	Weller
Pomerene	Spencer	Wadsworth	Willis
Rawson	Sterling	Walsh, Mont.

Mr. HEFLIN. My colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is absent on account of illness in his family. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

REPORT OF BOY SCOUTS OF AMERICA.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the chief scout executive, Boy Scouts of America, transmitting, pursuant to law, the annual report of the Boy Scouts of America for the year 1921, which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by a mass meeting of citizens of Washington, D. C., protesting against proposed changes in the fiscal relations of the District of Columbia, particularly increased assessment valuation on real property, as suggested by the conferees on the 1923 District appropriation bill, and praying that before changes are made in the tax system of the District as to any class of property the citizens of said District be granted an opportunity to be heard by Congress through its committees, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the legislative committee of the 23 allied trades organizations, known as the joint conference board, representing employees at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, protesting against the proposed increase of the assessment valuation on real property in the District of Columbia, and praying that the commissioners of the said District be given a hearing on the merits of the proposed legislation, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate a communication, in the nature of a memorial, from Local No. 27, National Organization of Master Mates and Pilots of America, of Balboa, Canal Zone, remonstrating against inclusion in the so-called ship subsidy bill of the provisions relative to the Naval Reserve, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CURTIS presented resolutions adopted by the Progressive Business Club, of Elko County, Nev., favoring the making of an appropriation of $175,000 to establish an Indian school at Elko, Nev., which were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. KING. I present a resolution adopted by the Commercial Club of the City of Nephi, Utah, calling attention to the fact that an appropriation had been made a number of years ago and land purchased for the construction of a public building at that place, and they ask that something be done by Congress toward the construction of a building. I move the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SPENCER presented petitions of the Auxiliary Club of Pullman Porters and of Edgar Wallace and sundry other citizens, all of Kansas City, Mo., praying for the passage of the Dyer antilynching bill, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WILLIS presented a letter in the nature of a petition from the executive board of the Toledo (Ohio) Council of Churches, praying for the passage of the Dyer antilynching bill, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented resolutions of the Ohio Associations of Credit Men, indorsing the Federal reserve system and protesting against the imposition of inequitable taxes on corporations as a detriment to business, and the further issuance of tax-free securities by the Federal Government, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 2753) for the relief of José Louzau, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 679) thereon.

Mr. DU PONT, from the Committee on Education and Labor, to which was referred the bill (S. 3396) creating the positions of Second Assistant Secretary and private secretary in the Department of Labor, reported it with an amendment.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CURTIS:

A bill (S. 3526) for the relief of Sylvester P. Hill; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 3527) granting a pension to John T. Peet;

A bill (S. 3528) granting a pension to Matilda McMurray (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3529) granting a pension to Mary M. Wonsetler (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 3530) granting a pension to Mary J. Davis (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HARRIS:

A bill (S. 3531) to amend section 9 of the Federal reserve act; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. ROBINSON:

A bill (S. 3532) for the protection of persons employed on railway baggage cars and railway express cars; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. WELLER:

A bill (S. 3533) for the relief of the Maryland Casualty Co., the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., of Baltimore, Md., and the National Surety Co.; and

A bill (S. 3534) for the relief of the Maryland Casualty Co., the Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, and the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., of Baltimore, Md.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CUMMINS:

A bill (S. 3535) granting a pension to Clarence W. Failor (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WALSH of Montana:

A bill (S. 3536) for the relief of the heirs of Nels Rudi; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. STERLING:

A bill (S. 3537) granting a pension to Fannie Bonk (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BALL:

A bill (S. 3538) authorizing police matrons to be members of the Metropolitan police force; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

LEO N. LEVI MEMORIAL HOSPITAL ASSOCIATION.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2186) granting certain lands in Hot Springs, Ark., to the Leo N. Levi Memorial Hospital Association, which was, on page 1, line 4, after the word "possession," to insert "for hospital purposes."

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the amendment does not in any respect change the bill as it passed the Senate. As the bill passed this body it provided for the use and occupation of the lands described in the bill for the construction and operation of an addition to a hospital at Hot Springs, Ark. In my view the adoption of the amendment is entirely unnecessary, and is a mere repetition of provisions already in the bill. There can be no objection to it, and I therefore move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

THE TARIFF.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7456) to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have been interrupted a number of times by adjournments of the Senate or by yielding to other Senators in my preliminary discussion of the chemical schedule. I desire this morning to submit a further analysis of that schedule, and call attention to a number of items therein, particularly as they reveal the great increase in the rates above those laid down in the Payne-Aldrich and in the Underwood-Simmons Acts.

In former tariff acts the chemical schedule has been known as Schedule A. In the pending bill I may remark in passing that the schedules are, for the first time, indicated by number instead of by letter; thus the notorious, not to say odious, "Schedule K" has been changed to Schedule 11, which change was doubtless desired to prevent the public generally from ascribing to any of the schedules in the present bill the antipathy which had been engendered against Schedule K and other schedules of the Payne-Aldrich tariff.

Senators will recall that Schedule K was the one against which Senator Dolliver and other able Republicans, as well as Democrats, leveled their most effective attacks when the Payne-Aldrich bill was under consideration. That schedule became odious and it, with the other indefensible provisions of the bill, brought about the undoing of the Republican Party. No wonder the Republicans are now trying to distract attention from Schedule K and others that received the condemnation of the American people. This they are seeking to accomplish by giving the schedules different names and calling them by numerals instead of letters. Schedule I, the chemical schedule, as well as Schedule K, will be just as odious, indeed they are just as odoriferous, as if they had other names.

The chemical schedule is not only the first schedule of the bill in numerical order but in many respects it is the first schedule of the bill in importance. The articles covered by the rates in this schedule are articles of primary necessity to the industries of the country. No schedule of the bill is so comprehensive in its scope and in the diversity of the articles covered and in the complex relations of these articles between themselves and to the other industries of the country as is the schedule on chemicals, oils, and paints. Other schedules of the bill are rather narrow and particular and special in their scope. Thus Schedule 2 of the bill covers earthenware and glassware; Schedule 3, metals; Schedule 4, woods; Schedule 5, sugar; Schedule 6, tobacco; Schedule 7, agriculture; Schedule 8, spirits and beverages; Schedule 9, cotton; Schedule 10, flax, hemp, and jute; Schedule 11, wool; Schedule 12, silk; Schedule 13, pulp and paper; and Schedule 14, the last schedule of the bill, covers miscellaneous articles of merchandise and manufacture not covered by other schedules. But none of these schedules is as comprehensive in its scope or affects commodities of more importance than Schedule 1. It may, of course, be said that every material in the world may be referred to in terms of chemistry, and while this schedule excludes the commodities in the 13 other schedules of the bill as far as the imposition of rates is concerned it must be said that the commodities in this schedule have a direct or an indirect relation to all the other schedules of the tariff and especially to all the industries of the country which are obviously concerned with the manufacture and production of the articles covered in the other schedules.

Mr. President, it is a difficult and, indeed, an impossible task to convince Republican Senators of the unwisdom of imposing, as this bill does, such enormous rates upon the primary and fundamental articles employed in commerce and in the industrial life of the Nation. The chemical schedule deals essentially with these primary and fundamental articles. It is obvious that if by laying heavy duties upon them the prices to the American purchasers are thereby increased the burden will be passed on to those who buy such primary products for manufacturing and other purposes, and they in turn must pass on to the ultimate consumer these additional burdens. The prices are pyramided, and they rest finally upon the great consuming public of our land. The chemical schedule is to this bill, as well as to the industrial and business life of the people, what the foundation is to the mighty superstructure erected thereon.

The majority of the commodities covered by the chemical schedule are imperatively required by manufacturers and producers in substantially all the industrial production of the country. The textile trade must have dyes, and whatever burdens are passed on to the textile trade are added to their products, thus increasing the prices ultimately to be paid by the consumer. If we would increase domestic production so far as possible, the fundamental products should be supplied as cheaply as possible. If unjust and extortionate rates are laid upon these primary articles, such an act constitutes an obstacle to business revival and an impediment to increased activity upon the part of the manufacturers and producers of what may be denominated finished products. Our industrial development, then, is largely dependent upon this chemical schedule. If it raises the price foundation to such heights as to prevent the completion of the building, our whole business life will be affected. It is poor economics and it is crude statesmanship to pass a bill of this character—one which has never been duplicated in its inequitable, unjust, and oppressive features by any modern, progressive, and civilized nation. It finds parallel only in medieval ages and in governments whose chief concerns are the extension of imperialism or the preservation of autocratic and despotic government.

This schedule covers by name more than 340 items, not including a long list of coal-tar intermediates, dyes, and other products, which aggregate at least 120 more, as well as thousands of chemical compounds not specifically named but included in general clauses in this bill.

Most of the other items not found within the comprehensive list of the 340, to which I have referred, are found in paragraphs 25 and 26 of this schedule and relate to dyes and intermediates. In order to indicate generally the comprehensive character of this schedule, I will say that these items may be classified under general designations, to which I shall refer.

I appreciate how uninteresting it is to listen to a speech in which figures and long lists of commodities are presented. Nevertheless, a study of these commodities is important in the consideration of a bill of this character, and to the thinking person each item is pregnant with meaning suggestive of benefits or evils to the entire country. This schedule, as I have indicated, embraces a large number of items, not alone those specifically mentioned but those that are embraced in Schedule 1 but not indicated by name. There are what are denominated basket clauses, within which are comprised, unnamed, a large number of commodities covered by a general rate of taxation. In this way the people do not know the far-reaching effects of tariff schedules and the enormous number of items covered thereby. It is no exaggeration to say that this bill covers practically every article, item, subject, or thing which relates to the lives of the people. It touches the person from the time of his birth until he is laid away in his final resting place. It affects his home, his buildings, his clothing, his medicines, his physical, his intellectual, indeed his spiritual, wants. It is a dark and menacing mantle which covers the entire social structure. It is a tax upon substantially everything that we eat and drink and wear.

I said there are hundreds of items referred to in this schedule by name. There are probably six or seven thousand or more embraced within the provisions of this bill and subject to tariff duties, and in substantially every case the rates will be greatly in excess of those in the Payne-Aldrich law.

When we are seeking to get back to normal conditions and to bring price levels to reasonable and fair and just proportions, this iniquitous bill is projected into our economic life, the result of which will be to disarrange the industries of the country and make more difficult the passing from war conditions to the paths of normal peaceful relations. There is bound to be some revival in business despite this oppressive measure, because with our enormous resources it can not be otherwise. But if we may secure these fundamental and primary products without prices so altitudinous as to be obstacles to industrial development, there will not only be a revival in business but the revival will be much sooner, a remarkable growth and permanent improvement and development. But the selfish and greedy are always the first to interpose obstacles to economic reforms and to the dawn of a better day. The greedy, voracious man is not satisfied with small profits and with quick returns. He must have enormous profits, though he robs the public and disturbs the intricate industrial machinery upon whose successful operation the prosperity of the Nation rests.

I desire now to call attention to some of these items which are covered by this schedule and which are important to the lives and to the industries of our country—items upon which the rates have been raised from 50 to 300, 400, 500, and 600 per cent.

I enumerate as follows:

Baking powder and yeasts, which enter into the bread and general cookery; blackings, stains, and dressings, including shoe polishes, stove polishes, etc.; bluing, which is used for the family laundry and the laundry industry; and bone carbon and lampblack used in the refining of sugar.

Let me pause to mention that any tax upon commodities essential for the production of sugar will be reflected in higher prices for sugar. Under this bill all the sugar manufacturers are compelled to pay tribute to the Chemical Trusts, and they will be required to add this unjust tribute to the price named for their product which the ultimate consumer must meet. Bone carbon and lampblack, used by the sugar refineries, are also employed in the manufacture of ink and as filler for rubber compounds and in the manufacture of paints. The agriculturalists must have paints. All who are building houses require paints of various kinds. This bill gives to the Paint Trust and the paint manufacturers higher prices, which are to be passed on to the farmers and the home owners and to the millions of persons who pay hundreds of millions of dollars to the corporations and favored interests who will be benefited to such a great degree by the unjust provisions of this chemical schedule.

Schedule 1 also includes crude chemicals and acids, which are primary articles of manufacture in many industries, and are used to some extent by every industry in the fabrication of finished products. Think of taxing many of these crude chemicals which become the bases of scores and, indeed, hundreds of manufactured products which are fabricated in our country.

This schedule includes cleansing and polishing preparations; drugs, medicines and medicinal materials, which, of course, are second only in importance to the very food which nourishes the people and are of the widest essential and necessary use. How can the Republican Senators defend a schedule that places these enormous burdens upon the great American people? Medicines and drugs are important for the health of the people. These are controlled by the great corporations and trusts, and they are permitted under this bill to swell their prices to such levels as the most greedy and voracious and conscienceless person or corporation may desire.

It is a favorite saying that corporations have no bodies to be kicked and no soul to be damned. Most of the great industries of the country are owned and controlled by corporations. Certainly some of these trusts in the United States have had no conscience. Those who have demanded these iniquitous schedules furnish convincing proof that their consciences were seared when they asked for the rates found in this bill.

I do not mean that all corporations in the United States are unjust or are oppressive in their dealings with the people. Corporations are necessary in our industrial life and thousands of corporations are controlled by men of the highest character and who seek in their business dealings to apply the principle of the golden rule. Neither do I condemn large corporations or corporations with great capital. Our industrial life seems to lend itself to big enterprises and to corporations with huge capital holdings. It is not bigness that I am criticizing. It is the improper use of authority or power. It is the abuse of privileges of which I complain. If there is any excuse for combinations and trusts—and some people think the steel enterprises of the country are such—there can be no justification for permitting trusts and confederations to control the great chemical industries of our country and particularly those that deal with medicines and drugs and commodities which constitute so important a part in the welfare of the great masses of the people.

This bill compels the poor and the rich alike to pay tribute to the chemical industry for the simplest medicine, for those articles which are necessary to heal our wounds and to cure our bodily ills. This bill, in my judgment, presents hundreds of millions to the chemical trusts and combinations annually. The people must pay this stupendous gratuity and bonus to the beneficiaries under this bill.

Continuing, Schedule 1 embraces:

Perfumery and cosmetics, dyestuffs and extracts, which provide the multiples of colors for the wool, cotton, linen, silk, and other fabrics, for the dyeing of leather and leather goods, wall paper, colored inks, linoleum, carpets, curtains and upholstery, paints and varnishes, and a thousand other articles of necessity or convenience to the people. Explosives used for blasting minerals, coal, and mineral ores from the mines, and natural deposits which furnish the gold and silver, the copper, the iron, the lead, zinc, and metals and minerals, and which blast tunnels for railroads, excavate channels in the rocky beds of rivers for shipways, prepare the bed for the foundations of our great structures, and for hundreds of other uses in the arts and crafts of peace, not to speak of the munitions of war, of ordnance, and projectiles with which wars for the defense of this country are waged and won.

The schedule covers fertilizers, which draw from the riches of the chemical world the mineral salts and organic compounds which vitalize the soil and make it respond in abundant harvests to the toil, the care, of the farmer and husbandman and enable him to supply the food and nourishment of the people and to provide the supply of raw materials of manufacture, as well as to furnish the freight which keep our great railroad systems vibrant with commerce and furnish the cargoes for American ships on the seven seas. Even the flow of money in response to the transactions of trade is a direct result of the stimulus of the fertilizers applied to the fields; in fact, the ultimate income of every man, woman, and child in this country is dependent upon the primary application of fertilizers in agriculture. The chemical schedule also embraces calcium carbide, from which is made illuminating gas and which furnishes the oxy-acetylene flame for the welding of metals, and which will be used for breaking up iron plates, metallic ore, the armor and steel framework of the vessels and battleships which are to be scrapped in the interest of the peace of the world; glue and gelatine, which is the base of all our adhesive materials, from court-plasters to wall papers; grease and tallow, which supply the soap stock, used for the dressing of leather, and for the lubrication of the wheels of commerce and industry; inks for printing and writing, without which the business even of this august body could not proceed; olive oil, for salad dressings, Italian cookery, and medicine; oil cake, for the feeding of dairy cattle; linseed oil, for the making of the paints which cover millions and millions of square yards of painted surfaces on the buildings of the country, and used also in the making of linoleum, patent leather, oilcloth, lithographic inks, soap, and for driers for varnishes; castor oil, used for an essential medicinal material for man and beast and for the lubrication of machinery; cod-liver oil, for the manufacture of medicinal emulsions of particular value to consumptives and sufferers from tuberculosis.

The Republicans who are talking so much about bonuses and about the poor soldiers and the ex-service men would tax the very medicines which the wounded and the disabled are compelled to use and increase the burdens upon the ex-service men and their families, as well as upon the people of the entire country. There is scarcely a medicine for the healing of the wounds or the restoration of health to the sick and the afflicted that is not placed within some category in this bill, and the weak and the sick and the disabled are to be further robbed and plundered by the medicine trust and the other extortionate profiteers under the provisions of this bill. That is the humanity exemplified in the drafting of this bill. Even the poor and the sick and the disabled and the wounded must pay greater tribute to the merciless corporations which manufacture these important commodities.

Included also within this schedule are whale oil and sperm oil, valuable oils for lubrication, soap making, the dressing of leather, and for illumination; wool grease, used for salves, ointments, emulsions, and cosmetics; other fish oils, which have generally the same uses above enumerated and which are valuable articles of commerce; essential oils, which are the essences of fruits, flowers, and herbs, which furnish the natural flavors, perfumes, and medicinal extracts, and oils so essential to the health and pleasure of the people; paints and varnishes; salt, soap, turpentine and resin, and the products of wood distillation, such as acetic acid, acetones, and methyl alcohol, all essential materials for use in the arts and manufactures; cellulose and celluloid compounds, which are used in manufacturing combs, mirrors, toilet articles, toys, artificial leather, and artificial silk.

It is difficult, indeed, to even approximate a complete enumeration of the varied and essential uses to which the materials made dutiable at increased rates in this schedule are put by the industries of the country and the necessities of the people; specifications could be added to specifications respecting the usefulness of these materials, and I have only attempted to indicate in a general way the field of their utility.

I regret, Mr. President, that Senators and the country are unacquainted with this bill and do not know that many hundreds of items found within the schedule, either specifically named or included within general clauses, are assigned higher rates than ever appeared in an American tariff law. I regret that they can not yet appreciate the additional burdens which will be imposed upon the country. May I say by way of parenthesis that after an examination of the hearings before the House and the Senate committees upon this, as well as some other schedules, I discover that in many instances where increases appeared no one is shown to have asked for such increases. I am told that numerous beneficiaries of high tariffs came to Washington and interviewed Senators and did not appear before the committees.

It has already appeared that representatives of corporations went into the committee room, or into the anteroom of the committee room, and made statements which were not taken down, and the nature of which is not known to Senators, other than some Republican Member or members upon the Finance Committee.

But let me inquire, how are we to account for these rates where the record shows that no one appears? Of course, some one asked for these increases. Who were they? Why did they ask? Why did they not appear in the open when Democratic Senators were present in the committee room and were permitted to be present, so that there was opportunity to hear their statements and examine the witnesses? Why were not their statements taken down, so that those who are not members of the committee may be advised as to the reasons, if any there are, for these enormous increases?

Mr. President, the record upon this matter is not clean. We are all familiar with litigation in the courts. When a case is tried, it is tried in the open and the jury decides questions of fact submitted not upon evidence which they hear secretly but upon evidence produced in open court, where both litigants were afforded full opportunity for cross-examination of the witnesses. If a case is tried before the chancellor, he does not receive testimony after the case is closed, except upon motion, with full opportunity for the opposing sides to be heard, nor does he hear arguments unless both contestants are present.

Mr. President, a careful examination of the hearings will not justify the rates laid in this chemical schedule. I challenge any fair-minded man to justify these rates in the light of the facts and in view of the conditions of our country and world conditions. This bill is wrong; it is bad and vicious and harmful to the American people.

Mr. President, in Great Britain there is now a rump organization of the conservatives to which the name is given of the "die hards." The members constituting this organization are the reactionaries, the "standpatters" of the conservative party.

They are opposed to liberal and progressive measures. They are interested more in the House of Lords and in traditions and in the perpetuation of an exploiting capitalistic system than they are in social justice and in liberal and progressive policies. We have "die hards" here. They control the Republican Party. Under the whip and pressure of the trusts and corporations the "die hards" have prepared this bill. This bill will help the trusts, it will profit the great aggregations of wealth. It is a sop to the oppressive and selfish interests who want to run this Government and control the political and industrial life of the American people.

Under this bill, which grants, and in some instances, raises rates so high as to effectively operate as embargoes, our foreign trade will be interrupted and our return to prosperity will be postponed. There seems to be no vision upon the part of the troglodytes, of whom I spoke the other day and who now control the Republican Party. Strabo, Herodotus, Pliny, and other classical historians speak of the troglodytes—cavemen, persons who seek exclusion, isolation, and separation from others. This bill declares for a troglodytian policy. We are to become a nation of troglodytes.

Mr. President, I propose that the name of the Republican Party be changed. As Senators know, at one time the Democrats were known as Republicans, and their party was sometimes known as the Democratic-Republican Party. The Democrats later dropped the name "Republican," and years afterwards it was appropriated by those men who met in Michigan and gathered together the remnants of the Whig and other political organizations. The Republicans under their present leadership are not entitled to the name. They were appropriately dubbed "standpatters" and "reactionaries" in the days of Aldrich and Speaker Reed. The archaic policies then announced have become the present policy of the Republican Party. They are the party of reaction. They are seeking isolation, political and industrial, and, of course, with industrial isolation comes decadence.

So we can with justice and propriety name the party of Harding and Fordney and McCumber "the Troglodyte Party."

It is important at the very outset of this inquiry to get a proper and adequate conception of the magnitude and permanency of the chemical industry of the United States and of allied and cognate industries the products of which are covered by the rates imposed in this schedule. I showed the other day that the chemical industry of the United States had invested in 1914 more than $3,000,000,000, and that now the investment in the chemical industries of the United States, which have been so profitable, exceeds $5,000,000,000. There has been an insidious and widespread propaganda carried on for many months, the purpose of which has been to create the impression that we have had no notable chemical industry in the United States, and that it was necessary to create an industry and to nurse it along with prohibitive tariffs, and some of our protectionist zealots have even advocated and secured an embargo with respect to many items that are found within this schedule.

We all recognize the fact that our country is the wealthiest in the world in its endowment of natural resources, particularly in its endowment of the natural elements and products which come under the head of chemicals and primary chemical materials. There is no country in the world whose natural supply of these materials is comparable to that of the United States. I might add here the fact, with which all Senators are familiar, that with the development of the coal industry in the United States, with the building of our coke ovens and the obtaining of the by-products of the coke ovens, we have placed ourselves in the front rank as the producers of the basic elements of chemical composition and chemical development. No country in the world is comparable to ours. Germany has been deprived of most of her coal by the Versailles treaty. Billions of tons of coal, anthracite and bituminous, are found throughout the United States. It is true that the anthracite coal is limited almost exclusively to the State of Pennsylvania, although Colorado has produced and is capable of producing several millions of tons of anthracite coal, and anthracite coal can also be found in Alaska; but our bituminous measures are inexhaustible. The coal measures found in my State, in Colorado, in Wyoming, in many of the Western States as well as the Eastern States and in the Southern States, can not be paralleled anywhere in the world in extent, in continuity, and in the general average of what might be denominated caloric efficiency. Coal is one of the principal primary products in our chemical production and in our chemical development.

It is to be expected, therefore, that the chemical industry, having as it does an abundance of primary materials of domestic origin to sustain the industry, would have assumed proportions commensurate with the commercial importance of the country; and this, I maintain, is the fact. Every country has its own special industrial methods. The special capacity of the American producer in other branches lies in the field which can be accommodated by a large volume of production of a standardized material, and where the American producer has gone into the production of a particular commodity on a large scale he has not been satisfied merely with acquiring a local market, but has uniformly increased his production to such proportions as have usually required an outlet in foreign markets.

I shall show before I conclude, with respect to scores of the items in this schedule, that we are competing in the markets of the world, that our exports immeasurably exceed our imports; indeed, that in many of these commodities our imports are either 1 per cent or less than 1 per cent.

In Miscellaneous Series No. 82, issued by the Commerce Department, dealing with chemicals and allied products used in the United States, is a list of chemicals imported into the United States in the fiscal year 1913–14 where the imports were less than $100 in value—hundreds of them, literally, Mr. President. I might say that in many of those very items we were exporting to the world large quantities, so that we not only had the domestic market and were suffering no competition from abroad but we were able to export millions of dollars worth of these products in successful competition with the manufacturers of the world; and yet we are now proposing to increase the tariff upon those very articles as to which there was and is no competition.

My distinguished friend, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], Saturday afternoon attempted to elicit from the chairman of the Finance Committee the reasons for these rates, the basis upon which these rates were laid. Reference has been made to the Reynolds report. Why, Mr. President, the Reynolds report touches but an inconsiderable number of the items found in this schedule. Mr. Walker, the expert who is aiding the majority members of the committee and sits with them upon the floor, will correct me if I am in error when I state that there are not more than 20 per cent of the commodities in this bill that have comparative prices set forth in the Reynolds report. Mr. Walker nods affirmatively. Then what is the basis of these rates? The Reynolds report was to be the great source of light and the fountain of inspiration to guide us in fixing the rates in this bill; and yet the expert, one of the ablest men we have here to aid Congress and to aid our Republican friends upon the other side, confesses here that not more than 20 per cent of the products found in this bill are embraced in the Reynolds report.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. KING. I do.

Mr. CURTIS. The Reynolds report was intended to cover only ad valorem rates, which amount to only about 20 per cent.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator is right; but the country has been led to believe—I do not say intentionally—by our Republican friends that the Reynolds report was the basis of these rates. Of course, I do not attribute that idea to the Senator from Kansas, who is uniformly fair in the presentation of every subject; but unfortunately the people have gotten the idea that the Reynolds report furnishes the basis for these rates and justifies them, and yet, as is stated now, 20 per cent only of the products contained in the chemical schedule are referred to in this elaborate report for the purpose of obtaining information relative to rates.

I repeat, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], the distinguished leader upon this side on the tariff question, attempted to have our Republican friends state the basis of these reports. I shall discuss later on acetic anhydride, for instance, and boric acid, and tannic acid, and citrate of magnesia, and various other compounds and products. What is the basis for the rates upon those items? In the case of a number of them no one asked for an increase. Why were they raised? What is the basis of the increase, in some instances, 150 per cent, and from that up to 600 per cent? Why was it done? Who suggested it? Who are the beneficiaries? The people? No. Who pays the tax? The people—the consumers. The beneficiaries are the great chemical industries and the corporations and organizations that exist in this country to-day.

The American manufacturer has not been especially concerned about making a highly specialized, refined, and complex article of limited consumption, and has not specialized oftentimes in lines of that kind. The American business man, as we see him, ordinarily wants to do big things in a big way. He is not content to sit down and do handwork upon an intricate and complex thing where the consumption is limited, particularly in this country. He prefers in a large way to engage in the production of the primary things or of the commodities the consumption of which is exceedingly great. We have been content to permit foreign technicians and artisans to work along these special lines, and, it may possibly be said, to excel in some of these lines. There are some industries of a highly special and technical nature for whose production the market is so limited that nothing left for the world market will warrant the investment of capital in these industries, and the American investor has felt that he had better use for his money than to invest in such undertakings. The American business men, as practical men, have put their money in such enterprises as have promised the quickest and most profitable returns.

I am speaking now in a general way.

To illustrate what I mean with respect to unimportant matters, or less important matters, for years we were content to let the Swiss make watches, but now we have undertaken the quantity production of watches, and America makes the only dollar watch in the world, and in quantities which have gone beyond the conception of the watchmakers of the Old World. The Swiss watchmakers, with their infinite capacity for detail and their great technical skill, for years controlled the world market. But the American manufacturer has entered the field and is beating the world. We have let the Irish and the French and the Dutch and the Swiss make fine laces and embroidery, and so long as this industry is confined to handwork we will doubtless let them occupy a dominant position in that field; but even now the making of lace by machinery is expanding, and we shall doubtless in a short time lead the world in the mechanical making of lace.

In 1914 the Bureau of the Census conducted a survey of the manufactures of the United States and published a census of manufactures, showing the production by quantity and value of the industries of the United States.

The Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce has made a critical examination of this census and a careful allocation of the items which come within the chemical and allied industries of the country, or, to speak with more particularity, of the items which come within this Schedule 1 of the bill. The capitulations which were made appear at page 172 of the publication of the Department of Commerce, Miscellaneous Series No. 82, under the title "Chemicals and allied products used in the United States, imports by quantities, values, and countries of origin during the fiscal year 1913–14, and statistics of domestic production." This official publication reports the products of the chemical and allied industries for the calendar year 1914 as of the value of $2,001,634,000. The capital invested in these industries having this product were reported at $3,034,209,000, which brings out the startling fact that one year's production of these industries was two-thirds of the capital invested. The wages paid were reported at $167,494,000, which amounts to but 8½ per cent of the value of the products of the industry for that year.

I wish Senators would take cognizance of those figures. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, the capital invested in the chemical industry in the United States was $3,024,209,000, and for the same fiscal year the value of the domestic production (chemical) amounted to $2,017,794,065.

The wages paid were reported to be but $167,494,000, which amounts to but 8½ per cent of the value of the products of the industry for that year.

These figures are startling and reveal the magnitude of the chemical industry at a time when it was claimed Germany was supreme in the chemical world, that the United States was producing no chemicals and had no chemical industry.

Another significant fact is revealed in these figures. The beneficiaries of high tariffs have always professed great solicitude for labor and have justified their extortionate demands upon the ground that labor must be cared for. Of course, the history of our industrial life shows that too often labor did not receive a just reward. Eight and one half per cent only was paid for the fiscal year referred to, in the chemical industry, to labor. With more than $2,000,000,000 worth of products, labor received but a little more than one hundred and sixty-seven millions. Who were the beneficiaries of these enormous receipts? Labor in part, it is true, but the great fortunes of which we have indubitable evidence, acquired by persons engaged in the chemical industry, show where the profits went.

The cost of materials was reported at $1,289,348,000, from which we may draw the conclusion that the wages paid or labor cost represented but one-eighth as much as the cost of materials. This all indicates such a relatively low ratio of labor cost to total costs as to preclude any argument of the necessity of laying such high duties as are imposed in this schedule upon the pretense that the protection is the wages of the American labor.

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, which was a full month before the outbreak of the World War, the exports and imports of the chemical and allied products covered by this schedule under the Underwood Tariff Act were: Imports, $267,408,785, and exports for the same period $265,019,278, showing on this schedule a practical balancing of imports and exports. (Misc. Doc. No. 82, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, p. 13.)

At that time Germany was at the height of her industrial development. Her products were being introduced into all lands, and her supremacy in the chemical field seemed to be unchallenged in any country. Yet in that year our exports of chemicals were substantially the same as our imports. We were able to compete with Germany and all other countries in the markets of the world, and exported to a hundred ports more than $265,000,000 worth of these chemical products. Yet Senators and others who are the defenders of these schedules, when Germany is prostrate and Europe is prostrate and unable to compete as they did compete in the chemical world or otherwise, are demanding prohibitive tariffs. In 1913–14, when Germany was militant and puissant, not only as a military nation but as an industrial nation, we were able to compete with her and to ship abroad and sell in competition with her chemical products exceeding in value $265,000,000.

It should be borne in mind that the foregoing statistics represent the condition of affairs prior to the outbreak of the World War, and this condition was therefore unaffected by the events of the war. The war may be regarded in a certain view as having but transitory effect upon our domestic and foreign commerce. I do not mean to minimize the profound effect the war had upon our commerce during the period of actual hostilities. We had a little more than four years of war, and we have now had nearly four years of peace. We should, of course, address our attention to the condition in the chemical industries to-day, and any legislation should be framed for the present and the future by the fullest examination of the available facts and consideration of the experience of the country, particularly as affecting the relation between fiscal legislation and the industries of the country. The war ended in November, 1918, and I desire now to present the salient facts affecting the chemical and allied industries for the year 1919 and subsequent years.

The value of the products comprehending the items in this schedule produced in the United States in the year 1919 were reported by the Bureau of the Census in the census manufactures for the year 1919 as amounting to $4,968,351,195. The wages paid out on account of this production were reported as $396,512,846, representing 8 per cent of the total value of the product.

The significance of that will be apparent to those who think for a moment. Our Republican friends say that wages now are so much higher; that the cost of labor is so much greater than it was prior to June 30, 1914. Yet when we observe the ratio which wages bore to the products in 1914 and in 1919, the peak of the wages, we find that the ratio is a little less than 8 per cent as against 8½ per cent. In other words, 8 per cent only of this prodigious amount of nearly $5,000,000,000 of products, was the labor cost, whereas in 1914, when the wages were lower, the labor cost was 8½ per cent.

It will be observed that the labor ratio in 1919 was a little less than it was in 1914, which indicates that the ratio of labor costs to total value in this industry has been pretty well stabilized and is uniform at about 8 per cent.

Inasmuch as there has at least been no diminution in the amount of wages paid in the industry, it can not be said that the raising of the rates is necessary in order to stabilize or protect the wage ratio in this industry.

It is also a fact worthy of remark that under the operation of the Underwood law between 1914 and 1919 the production of the chemical and allied industries was increased in value two and one-half times, which ought to be a rather satisfactory condition to concerns engaged in this industry. These concerns apparently have had abundance of money to expend in political propaganda and to impress the country that they require a higher rate of duty on their products, and that the chemical industry was only a withering infant which required special pap protection and patronage from the Government at the expense of the public.

For the calendar year 1919 the imports of chemicals and allied products comprehended within the items of this schedule amounted to $298,807,438, and the exports for the same period amounted to $828,281,571, which gave us a balance of exports for 1919 of $523,000,000. The imports only amounted to 6 per cent of the domestic production, while the exports were nearly three times the imports. The imports were hardly of sufficient quantity to even have any effect upon domestic prices.

A healthy state in the trade can best be secured by such a temperate rate in the imports as will stabilize prices in the domestic market and bring the prices in the domestic market into some reasonable relation to the prices in the open world market. Without such stabilization commerce is retarded and exchanges fluctuating and uncertain.

Superficial observers will not concede the correctness of the last statements, but they seem to me to be axiomatic. If inordinately high prices are obtained through embargo or high tariffs, imports will be restricted, if not wholly, then to the vanishing point. Cupidity and greed will then have unlicensed authority, and domestic consumers, forced to pay extortionate prices, will reduce, of necessity, their purchases, which will react upon production, and seriously affect the industries and prosperity of the entire country.

Mr. Blaine, as well as Mr. McCUMBER and other eminent Republicans, have admitted that the object of the tariff is to increase domestic prices and that that object is attained. It is conceded that that purpose of this bill is to put prices up to relieve domestic producers of legitimate and proper competition which might result from importations. This bill is to turn the American people over to the tender mercies of the manufacturers and those whose products will be immune from competition.

We have been fighting for lower prices. Republicans during the closing hours of Mr. Wilson's administration complained of high prices and arraigned the Democratic Party because of the extortionate prices which it was claimed consumers were compelled to pay in the domestic market. Now these same Republicans have joined with the profiteers and the trusts and the greedy monopolists and are determined to prevent prices from reaching proper levels or the laws of supply and demand from having proper application. They have surrendered to the predatory interests. The people now, as in the days of oppressors, are the victims of a conspiracy between the standpatters in the Republican Party and the predatory interests in the Republic. This bill is to perpetuate monopolies—things which are odious in the industrial and economic life of the people.

In old times revolutions grew out of monopolies which were granted. The people of France, suffering from injustices resulting from monopolies granted the favorites of the King, were roused to fury and to a bloody revolution. Monopolies were granted for the control of salt as well as hundreds of commodities affecting the lives of the people. They were denied the right to bake bread except in the oven of the one holding the monopolistic right. There were favorites of the monarch who were permitted by grants of authority to plunder the people. We have no Louis the Grand or feudal monarchs to issue charters and monopolistic grants, but we have Republican Congresses to create monopolies and to care for special interests and the favorites of the Government.

I repeat, this bill creates monopolies and will perpetuate monopolies and will permit the oppression of the people as they always have been oppressed when monopolies existed.

Returning to the subject which I was discussing, I will add that no complete information is available as to domestic production in the calendar years 1920 and 1921. It is known, however, that there has been a depression in the domestic trade of our own country and of other countries, which has, of course, reflected itself in the volume of foreign commerce. In 1920 our imports of the items in this schedule amounted to $414,150,477, and our exports $1,035,250,098, which gives us a clear balance of exports of $621,000,000; and the exports amounted to two and one-half times the imports. And notwithstanding the depressed conditions of trade, our balance of exports over imports in this schedule was greater than in 1919.

Mr. President, if Europe, with its so-called cheap labor, if Germany, with her inflation and alleged cheap labor, and the other nations of the world could buy of us chemical products exceeding $1,000,000,000 in value that are embraced within this schedule and could ship to us products of the value of $414,000,000 only, may I inquire what is the justification for the increase in these schedules?

Remember that these exports and imports were under the Underwood-Simmons law, a law which some of our Republican friends denominate a free-trade law, and yet under that act we were able not only to compete with other nations but to go into many of the markets of the world, and in some instances to undersell the foreigner and to dispose of more than a billion dollars' worth of chemical products. Under the Underwood-Simmons law, where many of these items were upon the free list, foreign nations were able to ship into the United States commodities covered by this schedule of the value of but $414,000,000. That, too, Mr. President, was at a time when Germany, in order to pay her reparations, was compelled to bid in the markets of the world for gold, and she reduced, as I am sure my distinguished friends upon the other side of the Chamber will admit, many of her products to a level so low as to deny any possible profit. She did it because she had to have gold. She had to have gold in order to buy primary articles, in order that she might produce the intermediates or the finished products. Notwithstanding her dire extremity, which drove her to sell at those unprofitable levels, we were able to compete in the world with Germany and other nations with respect to chemical products and to sell more than two and one-half times the amount which they sold to us, though, as I have said, many of the articles were upon the free list.

Mr. President, it is short-sighted policy to enact a bill of this kind and thus cut off our trade with other nations. If the chemical industry is to thrive it must have foreign markets. My colleague [Mr. SMOOT], who knows perhaps more about this bill than any other person, will, I think, admit that with our enormous mineral production and with our inexhaustible primary products, many of which are required in the production of chemicals, we occupy a supreme position and can dominate the chemical industry of the world. No nation possesses the resources and the advantages which this Nation does. Germany has but little gold. Most of her potash has been given to France. A large part of her iron deposits have passed to other nations. Italy's primary and fundamental products are limited. The same is true of Great Britain. It is true Great Britain has coal, but she has no iron or copper or mineral wealth. She has no forests and but little agricultural possibilities. Indeed, she must import her raw materials, her intermediates, her primary products. This Nation stands upon the summit of international power. Our domination of the world in a material way can not be challenged. Perhaps in two or three hundred years, when Russia is developed, we may find a worthy rival or, at least, a competitor of no mean strength. The chemical industry of the United States ought not to be limited by the shores of the oceans or by the Canadian and Mexican boundaries. The world lies at the feet of those men in our land who will take advantage of our great resources and utilize and develop them for the good of America and the benefit of the world. I repeat, we must have foreign markets for our chemical industry as well as for our agricultural products. We must have world markets for our wheat, corn, and cotton, and for our copper and hundreds of commodities, both raw and finished, which the world must have and which the waiting people earnestly desire.

Our foreign trade must not only reach the levels of 1919 and 1920 but must exceed those levels. This can be done, but not under this bill nor under the foolish and restrictive policies of the one-sided Republicans or those who see through a glass darkly.

Upon this side of the Chamber we are pleading for a return of prosperity, for policies which will put men to work, develop our international trade and commerce, and expand our foreign markets. We desire a bill that will bring into the Treasury approximately $300,000,000 annually of revenue from tariff duties, and a measure that will encourage domestic production and foreign trade. We are opposing the suicidal policy of placing the domestic production of the United States in the hands of trusts, and of commissioning them to exploit the American people. Upon this side of the Chamber we advocate a policy that will send American products to every land—a policy that will carry the American flag into every port of the world, a policy that will give us a merchant marine and keep the Stars and Stripes upon the sea. We are pleading for a policy of international comity and fellowship, and believe that when we send our products to the people of the world we are drawing them nearer to America and her ideals and bringing all peoples into better relations.

Trade and commerce batter down the prejudices and antipathies that race and distance erect.

In 1921 our imports of items comprehended in this schedule amounted to $258,739,140, and the exports $589,304,801, giving a balance of exports of $331,000,000. The exports for this year maintain the ratio of two and one-half times the imports.

Attempts have been made to frighten the American people with the bugaboo that our markets were about to be inundated with cheap foreign products and that something must be done to cut off importations. In the face of this specter, which has been presented to affright the people, we had a notable diminution of imports in 1921. Instead of there being an increase in imports, there has been a most remarkable decrease under the so-called free trade Underwood-Simmons law, which is now in operation, modified in respect to some items by the emergency tariff act of 1921. Indeed, the imports for this year were less than they were for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, the last pre-war year. With the diminution of imports there has been a diminution of exports, but the ratio of exports of 2½ to 1 has been maintained since 1919. With all of the so-called cheap labor in the world and the inflated currencies of Poland and Germany, and indeed of most of the nations of Europe, we have been able to maintain the ratio just stated. No doubt if we had been able to extend further credits we would have received more of the products of foreign lands, and our exports would have increased so that many of our mills which are now silent would have been active and our mines which are now closed would have been operating.

It is obvious that exports are dependent upon foreign purchases in the American market. Purchases can only be made with credits in favor of the foreign purchasers, and current credits can only be created in favor of foreign purchasers by our imports from abroad. It is certain that every credit created by importations in favor of the foreign exporter to our markets will be expended by him in the purchase for export of American commodities in our markets. One of the certain ways to increase our imports therefore is not unreasonably to inhibit imports, for trade is reciprocal and purchases for export must be balanced by credits created by imports. This is the course in the national trade and exchange, and the controlling principles can not be set aside by arbitrary laws on the part of one country or the other country. Even though our exports have been diminishing, they have, as above stated, maintained a consistent ratio of about two and one-half times the imports since the war. It is a fact also to be noted that our exports in 1921, somewhat diminished as they were, were more than double our largest pre-war exports. What I say in this regard applies exclusively to items covered by Schedule 1 of the pending tariff bill.

Mr. President, we have heard a great deal about the impending danger of imports from Germany, and the statement has been iterated and reiterated that this bill should be framed to exclude German products. It is time that such tenuous and shadowy claims should be dissipated by a consideration of the facts. What are the facts, Mr. President? For the full year 1921 imports from Germany of items covered by the chemical schedule amounted to only $12,211,733. That is the great menace to American industry! Germany was able to sell to us last year, 1921, only $12,000,000 plus worth of goods, and she took in return commodities which were important in the lives of the people.

During the same year our exports to Germany of items in this schedule amounted in value to $29,975,549 only. If the United States had not purchased from Germany chemical products of the value of $12,000,000, Germany could not have purchased from American producers of chemicals products of the value of nearly $30,000,000. In other words, we found a market for $30,000,000 of chemical products in Germany because we were willing to and did receive in part payment therefor chemical products of the value of $12,000,000. The difference between $12,000,000 and $30,000,000 was paid to us largely in other products and perhaps in some credits which were extended to Germany. If we had not found a market for those $30,000,000 worth of chemical products, perhaps some factories would have been shut down and undoubtedly some who had employment would have been placed in the list of the unemployed. In other words, by our trade with Germany we were able to keep factories at work and furnish employment to American workingmen and derive large profits. America profited by these transactions, as did Germany.

I obtained from the Department of Commerce this morning a complete table classifying the items found in the $12,271,733, the value of the imports from Germany, and the $29,975,549, the value of American chemical exports to Germany, during the period mentioned. The first table, which I ask to be inserted at this point as part of my remarks, shows all chemical imports from Germany for the calendar year 1921, the names of the articles, the unit of quantity, as well as the quantity and the value.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection the table will be inserted in the RECORD.

United States imports of specified articles from Germany for calendar year 1921.

Mr. President, this is the great inundation of German chemicals and allied products comprised within Schedule 1 of this bill which the dye monopoly and the chemical monopolists of the United States are so loudly talking about. They have set on foot a false and intriguing propaganda to deceive the American people as well as Congress and to secure embargoes and prohibitive tariff rates in order that they might be free to continue their exploitation of the American consumers.

Our entire importations from Germany during the calendar year of 1921, as I now recollect, were only $98,000,000. Our domestic production was between fifty-five and sixty-five billions of dollars, and yet this ninety-eight millions of imports from Germany, comprising all merchandise and all commodities, is so enormous, according to this propaganda, as to weigh mightily against our stupendous production of between fifty-five and sixty-five billions of dollars.

Mr. President, I shall not take the time of the Senate to read the next schedule, which shows the exports from the United States to Germany during the calendar year 1921, but it shows the items and their value constituting the table which I heretofore stated of $29,975,549.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There being no objection, the table referred to is ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

The table is as follows:

Exports from the United States to Germany during the calendar year 1921.

Blacking and polishes		$1,194
Chalk, manufactures of		405
Chemicals, etc.:

Mr. KING. Briefly, let me refer to some of the items. We have sold to Germany, from the schedule under consideration, acids and wood alcohol and baking powder and coal-tar distillates and dyes and dyestuffs—indeed, we shipped dyes and dyestuffs to Germany—medical and pharmaceutical preparations, petroleum jelly, sulphur, lime acetate, and various other chemicals; explosives, flavoring extracts, fruit juices, fertilizers—we sold to Germany fertilizers—glue, glucose, grape sugar, grease, ink, mucilage and paste, resin, turpentine, oil cake, mineral oil, vegetable oils, paints, colors, and varnishes, perfumeries, cosmetics, etc., to the amount which I have just stated. Germany was able to sell us $12,000,000 of these products, and we sold her more than $29,000,000.

The balance of trade, as will be observed from these tables, is in favor of the United States to the extent of $17,764,000 with respect to the items included within this schedule. The entire imports of chemicals and allied products and covered by Schedule 1 for the calendar year 1921 amounted to $258,000,000, of which only $12,000,000 worth were imported from Germany, the imports of chemicals from Germany being less than one-twentieth of the total importations for the last calendar year.

The utter lack of any sense of proportion on the part of the Republican majority in dealing with this schedule is demonstrated by the fact that they would permit one-twentieth of our import trade to be the dominating, indeed, the controlling factor in the determination of a national policy respecting this vital and important schedule, and this is the excuse which the Republican majority brings forward in justification for the imposition of rates which are higher than the unprecedented rates of the Payne-Aldrich tariff. This pretense may satisfy the self-sufficiency and self-centered mentality of the Republican majority, but I predict that it will not satisfy the country.

The inevitable conclusion which we must draw from this survey of the domestic commerce and the foreign trade of the United States is that the American producer in the chemical and allied industries has had a production in excess of the domestic consumption and has had a constant market which has been wider and greater than the domestic market or the market afforded by American consumption, from which it follows that the contention that the increased rates imposed in this bill have been imposed to protect the American producer in the home market is a mere pretense, without shadow, warrant, or justification under the facts which should control the policy of the country on this subject. It is a clear demonstration of the incapacity of the Republican Party to bring to the adjustment and accommodation of this great problem the statesmanship which the country demands, and which alone is adequate to a proper solution, and which alone is sufficient to promote the prosperity of the country and the welfare of the people. The Republican majority has shown itself to be merely a creature of habit, with its mind closed to the light and incapable of accepting the truth or interpreting the statistics which have been compiled by the Tariff Commission and the other official agencies of the Government.

An examination of the rates reported by the committee in this schedule, many of which I desire to say have been increased by the Finance Committee considerably over the rates in the schedule as passed by the House, shows that notwithstanding the utter absence of any necessity or, indeed, of any advantage in raising these rates over the rates in the present tariff, they have been raised to unprecedented levels and, indeed, are the highest rates which have ever been imposed upon the items comprised in this schedule. I have analyzed these rates, and of the 340 or more items contained in this schedule I have been able to get comparative data on 310 of them.

Let me add here that in these figures of 340 and 310 I am not including all of the items found in paragraphs 25 and 26, but have called those two paragraphs two items only instead of more than 100, as they actually are. My distinguished colleague [Mr. SMOOT] the other day, when I was speaking, adverted to that fact, and I want to assure him that in the figures which I then gave I treated paragraphs 25 and 26 as two items instead of more than 120 items.

In that statement, when my colleague addressed me, I stated that I had made a comparative analysis of the rates imposed on the items in the chemical schedule by the pending bill and the rates imposed by former laws upon the same items, and that I had found that out of 311 commodities contained in this schedule upon which comparative rate data were available the rates of duty on 225 have been raised above the rates imposed by the present Underwood tariff. My distinguished colleague interrupted me to suggest that many items in Schedule 1 had never before been specified in any tariff act, and later he said what he had in mind in this connection were the coal-tar intermediates specified in paragraph 25. The inference was drawn that the specifications of these additional intermediates by name had been used by myself in obtaining the total of 225 items in the schedule the rates of which have been raised above the rates of the present law. The Senator, out of his rather complete knowledge of the construction of this schedule, ought to have known that the 90 intermediates specified in paragraph 25 had not been counted in making up the 225 items on which the rates had been raised.

The intermediates specified by name in paragraph 25 take one rate of duty. I therefore, in order to be perfectly fair, counted all the ninety-odd items comprised within paragraph 25 as one item under the title of coal-tar intermediates. In the Underwood Act some intermediates are free; others take a duty of 10 per cent ad valorem. In the 1916 dye amendment to the Underwood law intermediates take a duty of 15 per cent ad valorem and 2½ cents per pound. In the pending bill the intermediates are all made dutiable at 50 per cent ad valorem and 7 cents per pound; so I was well within the truth when I included intermediates as a class in the items of the bill upon which the rates had been raised above the rates imposed by the Underwood law. If I had counted all the intermediates separately, and the dyes separately, the coal-tar drugs and medicinals separately, coal-tar photographic chemicals separately, and coal-tar perfumes separately, those upon which the rates of duty had been increased would have swelled my total of 225 commodities to approximately 350 commodities. This would be the result of adding to the 90 coal-tar intermediates, counted as one item in my estimate, the many dyes and medicinals specified in paragraph 26, which were also counted as one item in my estimate. So, Mr. President, in the discussion, in order to be more than fair, I class as two items only these two paragraphs, which include more than 120 items, so that swells the number of items upon which the rates have been increased above, of course, the Underwood tariff and above the Payne-Aldrich tariff. And of course I have not included as I might the hundreds and perhaps thousands of items included within the basket provisions or clauses of the bills.

There were 33 of these items which were carried on the free list in the Payne-Aldrich tariff which have been made dutiable in the pending bill, and I am not including in this number the items in paragraphs 25 and 26, but have counted them only as two items instead of 120, which I think is substantially the total.

There are 36 of those items which were free in the Underwood tariff which have been made dutiable in the pending bill.

There are 135 items in this schedule exclusive of paragraphs 25 and 26, upon which rates have been imposed which are higher than the rates in the Payne-Aldrich tariff. Of course, if I include all the items of paragraphs 25 and 26, upon which the rates have been increased, the number would be very much greater than the figures which I have just given of 135.

There are 233 items in this schedule upon which rates have been imposed which are higher than the rates imposed in the present Underwood law, and in this statement let it be also understood I count the 120 items as 2 in the interest of fairness.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. Possibly the Senator has explained, but I am not certain, as I have been called out repeatedly during his speech. Is the statement which the Senator has just made based upon the foreign-valuation or upon the American-valuation plan which was adopted in the House? The Senator has just stated that the rates to which he referred are higher than they were under certain other legislation. My question is, Does he base that statement upon the foreign-valuation scheme as contained in the Senate committee bill or on the American-valuation scheme as contained in the bill as it passed the House?

Mr. KING. I have taken up the Senate Committee bill.

Mr. SMOOT. The foreign valuation?

Mr. KING. Yes. Undoubtedly there will be some controversy as to the effect of the Senate bill upon the rates fixed in the House bill; that is to say, there will be disagreement as to whether the Senate bill in the aggregate has increased or lowered the rates laid in the House bill. The House bill contains the American-valuation scheme. The Senate bill provides a different plan but contains provision for greatly increasing the rates fixed in the Senate bill. That will be discussed later, and I have briefly referred to it in former remarks during the debate upon this bill. Generally speaking, I think the rates in the Senate bill are somewhat less than those found in the House bill, if in determining rates the American-valuation plan is applied to the House bill and the so-called foreign-valuation plan applied to the Senate bill.

My colleague, I think, is entitled to credit for opposing the provision for American valuation, and I think he has in many instances opposed the demands for rates which in their operation would amount to a prohibition of imports. For this work I desire to accord him full credit.

Mr. POMERENE. Has the Senator made any estimate as to the average increases on the dutiable articles?

Mr. KING. Yes; I have made some estimates, but I am unwilling to state them at this time, because I am not satisfied as to their accuracy. The task of preparing estimates is so enormous that no one but an expert of years standing can attempt it with any reasonable hope of success. Any figures which I may give would be more or less of a guess, and I am not willing to submit a guess upon so important a matter. I am analyzing this bill and the schedules with a view to determining, as far as I can, just what they mean and what burdens they place upon the people.

Senators will recall that there was a rather animated dispute, even after experts had reported as to the increase of the schedules or rates in the Payne-Aldrich law over the Dingley law, and I have no doubt there will be controversies as to the difference in rates between the House and the Senate bills, and when this bill becomes a law there will be controversies as to how much it increases the average rates of the Underwood law. I am satisfied, however, from investigations which I have made, that both the House and the Senate bills increase the rates above the Underwood law very much.

I called attention the other day to a number of items showing increases of 150 to 600 per cent. The more one studies the bill the greater will his astonishment be at the present impudence of those who have demanded these high rates and the complacency with which many of the demands have been made by the framers of the House and the Senate bills.

Returning, let me repeat, there are 135 items, excluding paragraphs 25 and 26 of the bill, which have approximately 120 items, in this schedule upon which rates have been imposed which are higher than the rates in the Payne-Aldrich tariff.

There are 223 items in this schedule upon which rates have been imposed which are higher than the rates imposed in the Underwood law, not including the 120 items in paragraphs 25 and 26, which relate to dyes and intermediates.

There are 67 items in the schedule upon which rates have been imposed which are the same as are in the Payne-Aldrich tariff.

Out of the 311 items upon which I have found data for comparison, I have found that the present bill raises the rates on 259 of them—excluding always paragraphs 25 and 26, which would make it more than 100 more—and but 44 items in the whole schedule are reported out at the same rates which are at present imposed in the Underwood tariff. It is apparent, if I wanted to be critical, that partisan animus and protectionist passion, rather than good, common sense and temperate judgment, have dictated the formulation of the rates in this schedule.

Let me refer to the following commodities which were on the free list in the Payne-Aldrich Tariff Act of 1909 and are made dutiable in this bill. No one claims the Payne-Aldrich law had very much regard for the free list, but the pending bill in just this one schedule takes many commodities which were on the free list in that law and transfers them to the dutiable list. I give the following names: Arsenic acid, arsenious acid, phosphoric acid, aconite, asafetida, cocculus indicus, ipecac, jalap, manna, marshmallow root, and buchu leaves.

Why buchu leaves and many of these other items were taken from the free list and transferred to the dutiable list is to me unfathomable. They are medicines pure and simple, with a limited quantity of production, indeed some not produced in the United States at all. Buchu leaves are produced only in one country in the world, and yet we take it from the free list, where the Payne-Aldrich tariff places it, and put it upon the dutiable list.

Mr. SMOOT. For revenue.

Mr. KING. My friend suggests for revenue. I will grant we may get a little revenue, but I aver that was not the reason. I continue the list of items:

Gentian, licorice root, sarsaparilla root, belladonna, digitalis, henbane, stramonium, ergot, and citrate of lime.

It will be apparent why they transfer citrate of lime from the free list to the dutiable list. It is to enable certain interests in California to charge for the acid which is produced prices which I state now are wholly indefensible. We will discuss that when we reach that item in the bill. The Senate committee raises, as I recall, the House rates inordinately to meet the demands of the producers of certain deciduous fruits in California.

Mr. POMERENE. Has anybody been denied any increase in tariff if he asked for it?

Mr. KING. As the Senator knows, I am not a member of the committee, but a perusal of the bill will convince most persons that those who wanted anything were generously received. I may add, though, that I know that one or more Senators, Republican Senators—I shall not give names—have attempted, and in many instances succeeded, in stemming the tide which seems irresistible for increased rates, thus preventing greater extortion than would otherwise have resulted. I am sorry there were not more Senators who took a temperate and rational view in laying duties found in this bill.

I continue reading the items to which I was referring.

Calcined magnesia (not medicinal), crude camphor.

Just think of crude camphor being transferred from the free to the dutiable list—camphor, so important in every household and for such a multitude of purposes.

The list continues: Calcined magnesia (not medicinal), crude camphor, coconut oil (crude), cottonseed oil, soya-bean oil, lemon oil, ambergris, civet, potassium carbonate, caustic potash, strontium oxide, vanilla beans, and tonka beans.

I presume that one purpose of imposing a duty upon vanilla beans and tonka beans, which are the source of the natural vanilla flavors, is to compel the people to consume the chemical vanilla, produced by about two manufacturers in the United States, which is used for flavoring beverages, ice cream, and so forth, in imitation of the true vanilla flavor.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Perhaps the Senator would like to know, if he does not already know, for he seems to know pretty much all about the subject, that cotton produced in McDuffie County, where I live, within 37 miles of the big mills on the Savannah River, in Augusta, Ga., is manufactured there, shipped to China, and sold in China at a very much less price than they will sell it to us for in the cotton fields where we produce it, almost in sight of the curling smoke that comes from the factory.

Mr. KING. I thank the Senator for that. I did not know it, and I am glad that he made that contribution to my remarks.

Mr. President, what the Senator from Georgia [Mr. WATSON] has just stated illustrates the fact that in the primary production, as well as in finished products, we can surpass the world. American genius, American skill, American knowledge, practical and technical, together with our inexhaustible resources, will enable us to meet and beat the world in practically every field of endeavor and enterprise. I have indicated that as to some articles, of course, which we do not care to go into, like Irish laces and things of hand production that require so much attention and detail without corresponding profit.

The following commodities, which were on the free list in the Underwood Tariff Act of 1913, are made dutiable in this bill:

Acetic acid, arsenic acid, arsenious acid, phosphoric acid, methyl-alcohol, ammonium chloride, ground aconite, ground asafetida, ground cocculus indicus, ground ipecac, ground jalap, ground manna, belladonna, digitalis, henbane, stramonium, potassium cyanide, chestnut extract, hemlock extract, mangrove extract, oak extract, quebracho extract, bromine, calcined magnesia (not medicinal), coconut oil (crude), cotton-seed oil, soya-bean oil, Paris green, London purple, phosphorus, boneblack, blood char, potassium carbonate, caustic potash, santonin, sodium arsenate, soda ash, sodium silicate, sodium chloride (common table salt), and strontium oxide.

The following commodities have been subjected, in the pending bill, to rates of duty which are higher than the rates imposed by the Underwood Tariff Act of 1913. This long list is significant of the character of the bill and the apparent determination of those who drew it to give enormous profits to the chemical producers of the United States:

Acetic anhydride, boric acid, citric acid, lactic acid, tannic acid, tartaric acid, formic acid, gallic acid, oxalic acid, acetone, acetone oil, ethyl-methyletone, amyl alcohol, butol alcohol, fusel oil, chemical salts and compounds n. o. s. p., aluminum hydroxide, potash alum, ammonia alum, aluminum sulphate, ammonium carbonate, ammonium chloride, ammonium phosphate, ammonium sulphate, antimony-oxide, antimony-sulphide, antimony salts, argols, Rochelle salts, cream of tartar, barium carbonate, barium chloride, barium dioxide, barium nitrate, blackings for cleaning and polishing, bleaching powder, caffeine, calcium carbide.

We find calcium carbide appearing in many places, either it or products of the great calcium carbide trust, which manufactures calcium carbide. The list continues:

Calomel, corrosive sublimate, other mercurial preparations, carbon tetrachloride, chloroform, terachloroethane, trichloroethylene, chalk, putty, billiard and tailor chalk, salts and compounds of gold, platinum, rhodium, and silver, salts and compounds of bismuth, chlorohydrate, turpinhydrate, thymol urea, glycerophosphoric acid, salts and compounds of glycerophosphoric acid, coal tar (intermediate), coal-tar dyes, medicinals and other finished coal-tar products, cobalt oxide, cobalt sulphate, cobalt linoleate, cobalt salt and compounds n. s. p. f., collodium cellulose esters, solutions of pyroxylin, compounds of pyroxylin (unfinished), compounds of pyroxylin (finished), licorice root, diethylsulphate, dimethyl sulphate, all other esters and ethers, chestnut extract, cutch extract, chlorophyl, divi-divi, fustic extracts, Persian berry extract, logwood extract, myrobalan extract, sumac extract, saffron extract, saff flour extract, saffron cake, valonia extract, waddle extract, all other extracts, flavoring extracts, fruit esters, oils and essences, formaldehyde, paraformaldehyde, edible gelatine, glue, fish glue, glue size, and agar agar.

Agar agar is a culture which is used for the development of bacteria, and is important in hospitals in determining the nature of the ailments afflicting patients. In our remarkable progress in chemistry and medicine we utilize cultural development for the purpose of isolating germs and for determining the character of diseases, particularly fevers. Agar agar is very important for the culture of bacteria, and yet the tariff on it is increased. Of course, the people have to suffer to help the chemical interests of the United States.

We also find in the schedule: Glycerine (refined), ink and ink powders, lead acetate (white), lead acetate (brown), lead nitrate, licorice extract, citrate of lime, magnesium carbonate, magnesium chloride, Epsom salts, which seemed to afford the Senator from North Dakota so much amusement the other day. He contended that Epsom salts are unimportant; that the duty on a pound of Epsom salts was not great, and upon a dose much less. The Senator's theory was that a high rate could be so small in its effects if the article affected was taken in small doses that no complaint should be made. Mr. President, it is the little burdens and the small taxes which, when multiplied and pyramided, crush the people. Municipal taxes may be small, but when they are added to the school taxes and the district taxes and the State and Federal taxes they constitute a burden which to the people becomes intolerable. So we tax them a little upon Epsom salts, and a little upon licorice, and a little upon chloroform, and a little upon camphor, and a little upon the thousands of drugs and medicines that enter into the lives of the people and into the hospitals and into the sick room; we tax them a little upon their shoes, a little upon their shirts and a little upon other clothing, a little upon their food, and a little upon everything which they are compelled to buy and to use, and when those littles are added together they become monumental in their greatness and they bow the forms of the American people low under the oppressive burdens which they constitute.

Mr. President, the philosophy of those who drew this bill seems to be that, no matter how high the rate levied may be, if the article or commodity upon which it is laid may be divided and subdivided then it is unimportant. Under this theory a tax of 1,000 per cent upon a pound of salt would not matter, because the individual at each meal used but a few grains of salt. Under this view it is unimportant how high the tax may be upon a gallon of olive oil, because the ordinary user of olive oil consumes but a small quantity at a given time or perhaps during a week or a month. A few thousand per cent tax upon calomel, under this view, is unimportant, because when consumed it is divided into small doses and no individual uses a great quantity within a month or a year. And so a few hundred per cent increase in the rates upon shoes and clothes or any of the commodities used is inconsequential in view of the fact that the poor man buys but one or two or three pairs of shoes during the year and but a limited number of suits and but a few dollars' worth of any one commodity or article.

Mr. President, this view to me is not only sophistical but it is absolutely cynical and brutal. We are to justify these extortionate rates, these frightful burdens laid upon the people, by the plea that the articles which they purchase are few and the tax upon any one article is not very large, and therefore they should bear with patience and equanimity the exactions made by Congress to meet the demands of domestic manufacturers.

Mr. President, these rates, regardless of the name or the quantity or the kind purchased by an individual or by a family during the year in the aggregate, will place billions of dollars of burdens upon the American people. When it is comprehended that our domestic production aggregates approximately $60,000,000,000 at current prices and that the greater part of this enormous sum is consumed by the people themselves, it is manifest that billions will be added by this bill to the prices paid by the great consuming public and that these billions so added in the main will constitute the tribute laid upon the masses of the people by the beneficiaries of this tariff bill.

Mr. President, this bill is so bad, so vicious, that those who cried out against the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill will pray for its restoration.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator from Utah will yield to me for that purpose, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Capper	Johnson	Newberry	Simmons
Culberson	Jones, N. Mex.	Norbeck	Smoot
Cummins	Jones, Wash.	Oddie	Spencer
Edge	Kellogg	Overman	Sterling
Ernst	King	Page	Sutherland
Fletcher	La Follette	Phipps	Swanson
Glass	Lenroot	Pittman	Wadsworth
Harris	Lodge	Pomerene	Warren
Harrison	McKellar	Rawson	Watson, Ga.
Heflin	McNary	Robinson	Willis
Hitchcock	Moses	Sheppard

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). Forty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present. The Secretary will call the names of absent Senators.

The reading clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. POINDEXTER answered to his name when called.

The following Senators entered the Chamber and answered to their names:

Colt	Curtis	Nicholson

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Utah that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Is that motion debatable?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. HARRISON. I desire, then, to propound a parliamentary inquiry to the Presiding Officer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. HARRISON. It seems that every day in the consideration of this tariff question, which is a very important one, we fail to develop a quorum and we have to go out and arrest absent Senators. The Republicans have a majority of 24. Is it not their business to keep enough Senators here to transact the public business?

Mr. MOSES. Is the Senator pressing for a vote?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not think the Senator from Mississippi has stated a parliamentary inquiry. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Utah.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant at Arms is directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

Mr. BROUSSARD, Mr. CARAWAY, Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, Mr. HALE, Mr. KEYES, and Mr. WALSH of Montana entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that the order just made be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the order will be rescinded. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

EXTENSION OF WAR FINANCE CORPORATION.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I take this occasion, while the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] has temporarily absented himself from the Chamber in the midst of his speech, to call attention to a matter which is, I think, of great importance—of equal importance, undoubtedly, with the consideration of the tariff bill now before the Senate.

There are pending before the committees of the Senate and of the House several measures that, in my opinion, are emergency measures. They are undoubtedly of vital importance to the maintenance of the agricultural industry of this country. These bills have been pending before the various committees of the Senate and the House for many months, and the only excuse I can conceive of for the failure of these committees to act upon them and report them to the Senate is the excuse that is given by members of the committee, that the Senators on these committees have been so busily engaged on the Finance Committee and other committees that they have not had the time to give these bills consideration.

I am not questioning those excuses. I am, however, calling attention to the fact that those excuses now cease to exist. The Finance Committee has finished its chief duties. Other committees of the Senate have also finished theirs. The Senators do not consider that they are required to be present in the Senate Chamber during the time that this tariff bill is debated, as is evidenced by the fact that it is almost impossible to obtain a quorum in this Chamber. In fact, just a few minutes ago it was necessary to make an order directing the Sergeant at Arms to bring Senators in forcibly, if necessary. In looking around the Senate at the present time we ascertain that there are probably only 10 or 15 Senators present, which is an exceedingly large number by comparison with other times. Therefore I assume that the members of the Committee on Finance, Banking and Currency, and other committees to which these very vital bills have been referred have time now to consider them and act upon them.

I have here a report in the form of a bulletin from the American Farm Bureau Federation with regard to these measures. They include a farm credits bill, a bill to place a farmer on the Federal Reserve Board, a bill for the purpose of enlarging and extending the functions of the War Finance Corporation, bills dealing with Muscle Shoals, a bill for the removal of the $10,000 limitation on farm land bank loans, a bill entitled "truth in fabrics," bills for the appropriation of money for the continuation of Federal road building, and a bill for a standard container.

In this American Farm Bureau bulletin the history of these bills is discussed and their present status is set out. I find from investigation that this statement is substantially correct, that these bills have been pending before the Congress for months. With regard to most of the bills, there has been no action at all. In some cases, however, hearings have been had and published. I am simply urging that at the present time, when the Senate of the United States is doing nothing, Senators might utilize their leisure time in at least considering in committee some of these measures.

Several bills have been introduced, in most cases in regard to each one of these subjects on which the American Farm Bureau Federation reports. Undoubtedly, all of these bills have the same purpose with regard to the particular matter. I do not believe that the agriculturists of the country are so much interested in which particular bill is reported, or whether any of these particular bills are reported, just so that the committees having charge of them proceed either to report one of these bills or to draft legislation that will meet the emergencies.

Bills have been introduced extending the functions of the War Finance Corporation with regard to lending money or advancing money for agricultural purposes all the way from 6 months to 18 months. Some time ago I had occasion to introduce a bill extending the functions of the War Finance Corporation in the particular I have just mentioned until the 1st day of January, 1923. I desire to state that Mr. Eugene Meyer, jr., the managing director of the War Finance Corporation, while not opposing the extension of the time of functioning of the War Finance Corporation with regard to advancement for agricultural loans, has heretofore reported adversely upon any congressional action in the matter, that course being pursued so that he might more carefully investiagte the necessity of the extension of those functions. I have had consultations with him with regard to the matter, and I speak from personal knowledge, and I assume that other Senators have, too. Mr. Meyer, however, has made a complete survey of the agricultural conditions of the country, particularly with regard to the necessity of extending and enlarging the functions of the War Finance Corporation in the matter of advancing money for loans to the agricultural interests.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought the chairman of the Finance Committee had already reported the bill extending for a year the life of the War Finance Corporation. I will say that the very day the Senator introduced his joint resolution the Finance Committee met, and the chairman was authorized to report a bill that had been referred to the committee some time before; but it extended the life of the War Finance Corporation a year, instead of six months, as proposed by the Senator's bill. I really thought the bill was on the calendar, but I suppose the chairman felt that he wanted to hold it so that at some time he could report it here and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. I think that is what he intends to do.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. I understood that the Senate Finance Committee took that action, and that afterwards, at the request of Mr. Meyer, they rescinded that action and held back the bill, and that the bill never has been ordered to be reported since then.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that the bill was ordered reported here, I think, just the very day that the Senator introduced his measure. It is true that the report of the Secretary of the Treasury was not favorable to the bill. While he did not say that he opposed its passage, he did not see that there was any real necessity for its enactment; but, notwithstanding that letter, the Finance Committee instructed the chairman of the committee to report that bill favorably and secure its passage just as soon as possible, and I think I am correct in stating that the chairman is holding the bill with a view of asking for its immediate consideration some morning here in the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. The reason why I made the statement that I did, if the Senator will permit me, was that a bill was introduced and referred to the Finance Committee to extend the life of the War Finance Corporation, and another bill for the same purpose was introduced and referred to the Agricultural Committee. The Agricultural Committee would have taken immediate action had it not been for the fact that they heard that the Finance Committee had ordered a favorable report on the bill. We learned afterwards, however, that Mr. Meyer, from somewhere out West, had telegraphed asking that the committee take no action until he returned to Washington, and consequently the whole matter is now in abeyance. That is the report that came to us.

Mr. SMOOT. I know Mr. Meyer was in the city before we instructed the chairman to report the bill. The action to which I have referred was taken after Mr. Meyer returned to Washington.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. With reference to the bill which has just been referred to by the Senator from Mississippi, with regard to the War Finance Corporation, I can inform the Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from Nevada that a favorable report on a bill to amend the War Finance Corporation act so as to extend the power of that institution to make advances will be made by the Finance Committee to-day.

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not understand the Senator. Did he say the report had been made to-day?

Mr. McNARY. On the 6th day of December, last year, I introduced a bill to amend the War Finance Corporation act so as to extend its power to make advances for one year; that is, from June of this year until June, 1923. The bill was referred to the Finance Committee. That committee has been engaged for several months in the consideration of the tariff bill. To-day that bill which I introduced will be favorably reported to the Senate and go to the calendar for action in a few days.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is very encouraging. On what date does the Senator say he introduced the bill?

Mr. McNARY. On the 6th day of December, the next day after Congress convened in its regular session last December.

Mr. PITTMAN. And the Finance Committee has been so busy that they will report it out to-day. I am glad of that. In fact, that is the reason I rose, to see whether we could not find out what had happened to these bills. The Senator's bill has not been reported out yet, but it is going to be reported out to-day. I am glad to hear that.

Of course, the Finance Committee has not really been engaged very extensively in any kind of work since the tariff bill was reported out by that committee. I do not know how many meetings they have had since they got through with the tariff bill, but the very fact that they are going to report that bill out is encouraging. I hope the Senator from Oregon will see that they do report it out, if he has any influence with the chairman of the Finance Committee.

The Senator from Oregon says the bill will be reported out to-day and go to the calendar. What I am urging is that the bill do not go to the calendar, because it is very difficult to get a bill off of the calendar. I am urging that unanimous consent be asked for the immediate consideration and passage of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. PITTMAN. In just a moment, when I complete this thought. It seems to me to be a very poor rule for a committee to authorize the chairman to report a bill out and then let him put it in his pocket and keep it there as long as he wants to. But I take the assurance of the Senator from Oregon, who I assume is on the Finance Committee, though I do not know——

Mr. SMOOT. No; he is not.

Mr. PITTMAN. I am mistaken. The Senator from Oregon indicates by shaking his head that he is not on that committee. He undoubtedly has some assurance, however, that the chairman is going to report his bill out to-day; so that will settle that question.

Mr. SMOOT. In justice to the chairman of the Finance Committee, I want to say that he is in favor of the bill and voted for it in the committee. I still think that the statement I made before was his thought, namely, that he wishes to secure early consideration of the bill. I know he intends to seek early action, and in my opinion the only thing that kept him from reporting it last week was the fact that he thought he could get early action on it this week by asking unanimous consent for its consideration.

Mr. PITTMAN. I am glad to hear that, too. Several bills have been passed by unanimous consent since the tariff bill has been before the Senate, and I have no doubt that if the chairman of the Finance Committee could be found, if he would come in right now and ask unanimous consent—and I would be glad to yield to him—the bill could be passed. As a matter of fact, we have no trouble in passing a bill whenever the administration is willing to have it passed. Of course, we realize that the administration has not been willing for this bill to pass until the last few days. But now there is no reason why Congress should not act.

I am going to refer to the consent of the War Finance Corporation that this thing should be done, and that is the reason it is going to be reported to-day.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I know the Senator wants the history of this correct. The Finance Committee voted to report that bill out when there was no other report before it than that of the Secretary of the Treasury, in which he did not approve of the bill. It made no difference whether the Secretary of the Treasury reported favorably on it or not, a majority of the Republican members of the committee voted to report that bill out, and it would have been reported out whether Mr. Meyer or the Secretary of the Treasury was in favor of it or not.

Mr. PITTMAN. The committee voted to report it out in spite of the Secretary of the Treasury, but it has never been brought into the Senate; so I do not know that it really makes much difference to the farmer whether the committee voted to report it out or not. I know now, however, we are going to get action. I can see it coming, and that is what we all want.

Mr. Eugene Meyer, jr., managing director of the War Finance Corporation, has just released a report to the President of the United States with regard to his survey of the agricultural conditions of the country, and the necessity for legislation as he sees it. I will read his conclusions first. He states:

In conclusion, I suggest that, pending the enactment of legislation along the lines I have indicated and the establishment of the necessary machinery for its administration, the period during which the War Finance Corporation may make loans be extended until January 1, 1923, and that the corporation be authorized up to that date (1) to make advances upon adequate security to cooperative marketing organizations and live-stock loan companies where it appears that they are unable to obtain adequate financing at reasonable rates through other channels; and (2) to make advances to banking institutions on agricultural and live-stock paper in exceptional cases and where it appears that the public interests will be served by such action.

In submitting these observations and recommendations, I do so in the hope that they may be of some value in considering the question of how best to maintain our agriculture upon a sound basis. This problem lies at the very foundation of our national economic and social policies and every intelligent citizen must have a deep interest in its solution.

So I assume that, with that permission, the chairman of the Committee on Finance can report the bill and ask unanimous consent for its passage, and I know of no opposition in this body sufficiently bold to object.

Mr. Meyer, in his report, in dealing particularly with the live-stock industry, which he seems to think has suffered more than any other agricultural industry, and which needs assistance to a greater extent, has this to say:

The live-stock industry constitutes one of our great basic activities and involves a turnover of an enormous aggregate amount, but, in my opinion, it has never been properly financed from two points of view.

In the first place, the financing has not been timed to the requirements of the turnover. The business of fattening live stock, which involves a turnover of six months, more or less, can easily be taken care of by existing machinery. But the longer-time requirements of the live-stock breeding industry, involving a turnover of about three years, have been financed through loan companies, which, selling their paper for a maximum of six months, have been compelled to limit their loans to a similar period. A six months' loan to the owner of a breeding herd, with no assurance of extension, is a hardship to the industry and can not fail to exercise a discouraging influence.

In the second place, there is need for a radical revision in the methods of handling the supervision and inspection of live-stock loans. The ability of the industry to obtain adequate financing at reasonable rates inevitably must depend upon the elimination of some of the unnecessary hazards which have characterized the conduct of the business in the past.

FURTHER MACHINERY NEEDED FOR LIVE-STOCK FINANCING.

After a careful study of the whole problem, in the light of the experience of the War Finance Corporation, I recommend the enactment of legislation specifically authorizing the organization of institutions to rediscount the paper of live-stock loan companies. These institutions, of course, should be related to the existing financial structure and made an adjunct thereto; and, as a condition precedent to their functioning, a system for the more adequate supervision and inspection of the live stock which furnishes security for the paper should be devised and put into opertaion. The importance of this matter in any plan for live-stock financing can not be overemphasized.

With such institutions and with a satisfactory system of inspection and supervision, I feel that capital in adequate amounts and upon reasonable terms may be looked for by the stockmen of our vast western country. The new live-stock loan companies may constitute the nucleus upon which the proposed rediscounting organizations can be developed on a sound basis and in a way that would reasonably meet the financial needs of the live-stock industry.

COOPERATIVE MARKETING ORGANIZATIONS.

While the War Finance Corporation during the past year has entered into agreements to lend approximately $63,000,000 to cooperative marketing associations in all parts of the country, to assist them in the orderly marketing of their products, in most cases only a small part of the credit authorized has actually been used, because the local banks have been able to take care of the needs to a greater extent than had been anticipated. This indicates that the cooperative marketing associations, when they are properly organized and soundly managed, are able, for the most part, to obtain the necessary funds from local banking sources. But it is generally agreed that a good deal of the willingness of the banks to finance the cooperatives in their sections has been based upon the ability of the cooperatives to obtain funds from the War Finance Corporation. This has involved, in part, the element of confidence and, in part, the funds themselves; for it is obviously easier for a local bank to furnish funds to a cooperative marketing organization when it knows that the funds can be borrowed from another source and repaid to the bank in case of need. There is, therefore, a feeling among the managers of the marketing cooperatives, and also to a great extent among their banks, that there should be a continuation of the assurance of a market for their paper outside of the local banks. It is recognized that, with improving financial and agricultural conditions, it will be easier for them to obtain funds during the coming season, but, on the other hand, their operations perhaps will be conducted on a more extended scale and, therefore, the aggregate of funds required will be correspondingly greater.

You desired me especially to report upon these organizations. While in the West I had the opportunity of meeting the directors and managers of many of them, and in some cases of visiting their working headquarters and their warehouses. California was the first State to take up cooperative marketing on a large scale in this country, and there it has been carried on in its most highly developed form. In San Francisco I met the representatives of 26 of the leading cooperative marketing associations of the State and was enabled to get the benefit of their experience and views. These California associations, for the most part, are so well established that their banking credit is equal to that of the best privately owned and managed corporations, and although they market products aggregating in value $250,000,000 annually, they have had occasion to avail themselves of the funds of the War Finance Corporation to the extent of only $1,500,000 during the past season. Their operations were financed almost entirely through their usual banking connections.

The more recently organized cooperative marketing associations in Oklahoma, Mississipi, Arkansas, Texas, Arizona, and in the Northwestern States, while not so firmly established as the California associations, appear to be organized upon sound principles and to be properly and capably managed.

In this connection I wish to say that a similar association has just been completed in Nevada. It was evident to those who organized the association that if the right of the War Finance Corporation to advance money through these associations to the agricultural interests terminated on the 1st day of July, they would be unable to function within the short period of time left. Therefore, this organization, as well as the live-stock associations of Nevada, have joined, I believe, with nearly all the Western States in urging the necessity of extending the functioning of the War Finance Corporation in these particulars.

As Mr. Meyer said, while considerable money has been advanced through the War Finance Corporation, the organization and construction of the local banks through the western country made it difficult, if not impossible, to advance the money through the existing institutions. That has caused delay in the funds reaching the agricultural interests. This plan of organizing associations was devised only a short time ago, and of course would not have an opportunity to get into general operation prior to the 1st day of July.

Mr. Meyer continues:

Prior to the war the distribution of our agricultural products, in so far as our export trade was concerned, was financed in considerable part by European capital. But fluctuating exchange, added to the fact that European countries are no longer on a gold basis or even on a stabilized exchange basis, has prevented a continuation of this practice. We must, therefore, adjust our own financing machinery to meet the new conditions.

Our financial system has apparently been based on the expectation that the farmer would sell his crops as soon as they matured. And the immediate sale of the season's product by the farmer contemplated its being carried by middlemen until distributed through manufacturers or retailers. As has been stated so often, the farmer's crop is harvested within a short period and consumed throughout the year. The processes of financing should adjust themselves to the natural processes of production and distribution rather than vice versa. We have reached the point where the right of the cooperative marketing organizations to carry the products of their members for orderly marketing, until the consumer is ready to take them, must be recognized and the necessary financing machinery provided.

I therefore recommend that the need for the orderly marketing of our agricultural products in a more gradual way and over a longer period of time be frankly recognized; that existing banking laws and regulations be adjusted with this end in view; and that a rediscount facility be established to make it possible at all times for cooperative marketing organizations to obtain adequate funds for their operations. I recommend also that the powers of the Federal reserve banks be extended to include the purchase in the open markets of eligible paper secured by nonperishable agricultural commodities properly warehoused.

I wish to state in this connection there are several bills pending enlarging the warehouse act, so to speak. I have offered a bill of that kind, which is one among a number, including wool, sugar, sirup, and hides within the definition of agricultural products so that these products of agriculture may also be placed in warehouses, be the subject of loans, and there held until the consumer is ready to purchase them.

Mr. Meyer, continuing, said:

Perhaps I should add here that the need of additional financing, not only for the cooperative marketing organizations but for the live-stock industry as well, was indicated in the report to Congress by the Joint Commission of Agricultural Inquiry.

Then follow his conclusions, which I read previously. Mr. Meyer in the fore part of his report states that the agricultural industry is improving and cites a number of instances. He states that the live-stock industry is improving, slowly of course. He states that the condition of moisture throughout the western country has been of great aid to the live-stock industry. Since he made his survey, however, the amount of moisture that fell throughout the Western States in the form of snow and ice and at such an exceedingly late season of the year, has, according to unofficial reports, resulted in the destruction of fully one-half of the lambs born this year in that intermountain country. It has, in addition to that, resulted in the destruction of a very large percentage of the matured sheep.

The raisers of sheep under ordinary conditions might stand this, but everyone realizes that owing to the abnormal market condition brought on by the war, and particularly affecting wool, the sheep raisers of the intermountain country, where they engage in sheep raising as an exclusive business, have been facing bankruptcy for two years, and in some States, not in Nevada, however, banks have been facing bankruptcy in their attempts to carry the industry.

This statement is only put forward in support of Mr. Meyer's description of the absolute necessity for an additional system of financing of the live-stock industry of the country. I am attempting also to show that there is an emergency for action by the War Finance Corporation. Mr. Meyer's report discloses the fact that an emergency exists for the various kinds of legislation which he recommends in his report and which are embodied in the various bills which are now and for months have been pending in the various committees.

Mr. Meyer in his report refers to the reports made to Congress by the Joint Commission of Agricultural Inquiry as sustaining the position that he is now taking for immediate action on the various legislative matters referred to in his report. That report was made by a very strong representation from this body and from the House of Representatives after a most thorough and careful survey of the agricultural situation in the country. It supports the demand for emergency legislation. It should have induced the Congress to legislate immediately upon the filing of that report with Congress.

But now comes the American Farm Bureau Federation, in its bulletin, to which I have heretofore referred, and deals with the same situation. In its bulletin it is said:

The readjustment in farm prices and values is proceeding so slowly that the need for special financial aid will continue for two or three seasons to come. The aid provided by the War Finance Corporation should not be terminated until a new system of farm credit has been developed sufficiently to take its place. This will require some time even if legislative action is taken immediately. The service rendered by the corporation, while particularly important during the emergency following the war, has, however, met a need which has been growing through a period of years, due to the fact that a general system of financing agriculture has not been properly developed. It would be unfortunate, if not positively disastrous, to remove this aid until permanent aid for this situation has been devised. No great burden would be imposed upon the Government by continuing activities of the corporation for a longer period. In fact, the effect would be the reverse, since the process of readjustment would be more gradual, producers would be reassured, and normal conditions attained with less hardship.

Dealing particularly with the present farm situation, the American Farm Bureau Federation has this to say:

The general condition of agriculture, while showing considerable improvement up to April 1, is still far from satisfactory. As will be seen in the following table, only 1 of the 10 products listed below brings a price that is above the 1913 level in purchasing power.

Then follows a table entitled:

Purchasing power of farm products.
(1913—100 as of February.)

Cotton	$0.84
Corn	.61
Wheat	.99
Hay	.71
Potatoes	1.21
Beef cattle	.57
Swine	.73
Eggs	.87
Butter	.85
Wool	.87

I call particular attention to the item "beef cattle, 57."

The average of all farm products, including the purchasing power of potatoes, which was above par, we find is 83 per cent of their purchasing power in 1913.

The wholesale prices for farm products as compared to other commodity groups for January and February were as follows:

Farm products, January 116, February 126; food, and so forth, 134 in January; in February, 138; cloths and clothing, January 183, February 183; fuel and lighting, January 183, February 283; metals and metal products, January 117, February 115; building materials, January 202, February 202; chemicals, and so forth, January 159, February 159; house-furnishing goods, January 214, February 213; all commodities, January 148, February 151.

PRODUCTION IS BELOW PAR.

The serious depression in agricultural production is obscured by the abnormal price situation. In spite of seasonable conditions justifying a bumper-crop season the last year, we had only two crops up to the average (10-year average, 1910–1919). These were corn and hay. The oat crop was, roughly, 17 per cent below average; cotton, 39 per cent; wheat, about 5 per cent. The January estimate of live stock shows serious shortages, below the 10-year average, in numbers: Horses, 17 per cent below; sheep, 36 per cent; beef cattle, 8 per cent; swine, 11 per cent. At least two of these major industries can be brought back to normal only by unusual extension of credit. These are cotton and sheep.

Mr. President, I have dealt particularly with the report of Mr. Eugene Meyer, jr., and I have quoted from the farm bulletin only with regard to the agricultural situation as bearing upon the passage of the bill, which he urges should be passed immediately; but in the bulletin which I have before me the American Farm Bureau Federation, which, I believe, is the largest association of agriculturists in the country and which is equipped with capable men to survey and report upon and understand the agricultural situation, have gone further and have discussed other measures dealing with farm credits. They have also urged the necessity of the final passage of the legislation insuring the appointment of a farmer on the Federal Reserve Board. They call attention to the fact that the Senate passed a bill so providing months ago, but that it is lying dormant in the committee in the House of Representatives.

The American Farm Bureau Federation also urge the passage of the so-called Dunn bill which is now pending in the House of Representatives providing appropriations to carry out the Federal road act. I wish to say that I am opposed to the Dunn bill, in the first place, because it is unnecessary, and, in the second place, because, in my opinion, it will require amendment.

It is unnecessary because the Senate has already adopted an amendment to the Post Office appropriation bill carrying the necessary appropriations for the maintenance of the Federal road system of the country. That proposed legislation has the advantage of being embodied in a bill which has passed both branches of Congress and now is in conference. The Dunn bill has not even yet been acted on in the House of Representatives. It is evident that there is great doubt as to whether the Dunn bill could ever become law if at this late day it should pass the House of Representatives and come to the Senate.

Again, while the Dunn bill provides the same appropriation for the maintenance of the Federal road system as is provided in the amendment to the Post Office appropriation bill which has passed the Senate, the Dunn bill carries restrictions which are antagonistic to the interests of a large section of the country. In the first place, it limits the amount of Federal participation in the building of roads. That limitation involves such a small expenditure per mile on the part of the Government that it would be practically impossible on a 50-50 basis to build a substantial Government road in this country. Mind you, under the Federal road law after a road is once built through the participation of the Federal Government with the respective States, from that time on the State is required at its own individual and exclusive expense to maintain forever that road. A makeshift road might be built with the amount of money provided in the Dunn bill, but such a road would have to be practically rebuilt every year of its existence; in other words, by limited appropriations the States would be encouraged to construct roads which they would have to rebuild every year, and that they are not individually able to do.

I am satisfied that when the legislative situation comes to the attention of those who prepared this bulletin they will agree with the Senate in the position it has taken with regard to Federal road legislation as set forth in the amendment to which I have referred which was made and adopted by the Senate to the Post Office appropriation bill, which bill is now pending in conference between the two Houses and will urge the immediate adoption of the conference report on that bill with the Senate amendment in it, instead of the Dunn bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, from the Committee on Finance, I ask unanimous consent to report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 2775) to extend for one year the powers of the War Finance Corporation to make advances under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to amend the War Finance Corporation act, approved April 5, 1918, as amended, to provide relief for producers of and dealers in agricultural products, and for other purposes," approved August 24, 1921. I also ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah, out of order, submits a report from the Committee on Finance on Senate bill 2775, and asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I shall not object to the present consideration of the bill; I will agree that the bill may be considered and passed; but when that shall have been done I desire to submit some remarks to the Senate upon the measure.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first sentence of section 23 of the War Finance Corporation act, approved April 5, 1918, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 23. That notwithstanding the limitation of section 1, the advances provided for by section 21 and section 22 of this act may be made until July 1, 1923."

SEC. 2. That the last sentence of section 24 of such act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"Advances or purchases may be made under this section at any time prior to July 1, 1923."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SIMMONS obtained the floor.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I merely wish to congratulate the acting chairman of the Finance Committee for digging up the report and asking for the present consideration of it.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I signed the poll which was made of the members of the Finance Committee upon the question of reporting favorably the bill which has just been passed. I did so with the statement and reservation at the time of signing that I would not agree to the report if I thought the passage of the bill continuing the life of the War Finance Corporation would be considered as adequate legislation for this session to meet the necessities of the agricultural and live-stock situation in the country. I was assured by the Senator who presented the bill to me for my signature that, so far as the friends of agriculture on the other side of the Chamber were concerned, the bill would in no way abate their determination and purpose to press for full and adequate legislation.

Mr. President, it is entirely proper, with this reservation of purpose on the part of the Senate, that the life of the War Finance Corporation shall be extended. At the time we revived, in the interests of agricultural credit, the powers which we gave to the War Finance Corporation there was a situation in the country which would brook no delay, which called for immediate action in order to save agriculture from a debacle, but the measure then passed was of a purely temporary character and to an extent a makeshift, designed merely to meet an urgent situation. It has performed its office admirably. It has relieved that situation measurably. But for it, I think this important part of the industrial enterprises of the country would have been in a most deplorable and unfortunate condition; but, Mr. President, the measure is wholly inadequate. It does not give the farmer what he is entitled to. It does not give him what he must have if he is to contend, without serious handicap and serious consequences to the great industry in which they are engaged, with the economic and financial conditions which exist now. The agricultural industry, of course, lies at the very foundation of our industrial and economic structure.

The farmer must have facilities which will afford to him the same degree of credit in the operation of his business that the manufacturer and the merchant now enjoy under the facilities extended to them by the Federal reserve system. I do not think there has ever been established in this world a finer banking system, a finer financial system, so far as our commerce and our industrial requirements go, than the Federal reserve system, properly applied; but that system is adapted only to the requirements of commerce, trade, and of manufacturing. Its very limitations, the very theory upon which it is based—that of dealing only with liquid assets, assets that can be quickly converted into cash—make it unsuited to the farmers' requirements, and suited only to the requirements of those who make quick turnovers in the operation of their business. The farmer makes but one turnover a year. He must therefore have an entirely different system from that provided in the Federal reserve system. It is therefore necessary that he shall have a system of his own, whether or not he shall secure it through amendments to the Federal reserve act—and I think that would be inadvisable, because that would be establishing two bases of operation under one system—in some way he must have just as good facilities for affording him the credit that he requires and that his situation demands as the other industries of our country. Otherwise, he is at a great disadvantage. Otherwise, he is at the mercy of those who wish to prey upon him. Otherwise, he can not protect his product against the exploitation of those who desire to get it at less than it cost to produce it. He must be financially just as independent as the merchant, just as independent as the manufacturer, just as independent as the man engaged in general commerce; and without that equal independence, that equal ability to protect his product against exploitation, he will always be at a ruinous disadvantage, as he has been in the past.

Realizing that, Mr. President, some days ago I introduced in the Senate a bill known as Senate bill 3390, which at my request was referred to the Finance Committee. That bill establishes a completely independent system for financing agriculture and the live-stock industry in the United States, and puts those two great occupations, in my judgment, upon an absolute parity with reference to banking facilities and credit conditions with the balance of the industries of the country.

I had intended, on some early occasion, to go into a detailed statement of how I propose to accomplish that purpose in my bill, but I will not do that now. Instead of doing that, I will say that I had a large number of additional copies of this bill prepared, and I sent it to many of the farm organizations, farm papers, and so forth, and it has received very general discussion, and, so far as I am now advised, very general approval by those in whose interest it is drawn, as well as by others who are willing to do justice to the farmers of the country.

Recently there met in the city of Washington at the same time three great, separate farm organizations. These conventions were called at the same time as a result of a desire to bring about concert of action with reference to many things of great interest to the farmers and stock raisers of the country. After those organizations adjourned, on the same day that they adjourned, I was visited by 10 or 15 representatives of these several organizations at my rooms in the Capitol, and they stated to me that they came as the representatives of these organizations which had just met here. They stated that the bill which I had introduced, S. 3390, together with other bills pending looking to the same general end, had been thoroughly canvassed in the meetings of these organizations, and that as a result of their discussion and the comparison of their merits as calculated to accomplish the purpose intended and desired by the farmers of the country, practically without exception the bill which I had introduced and had had referred to the Finance Committee had met the enthusiastic approval of those attending the conventions.

I have discussed this bill with quite a number of Senators, and those of them who have taken the trouble to investigate it have expressed their approval. I now have upon my desk an interview which appeared in the News and Observer, of Raleigh, N. C., a daily paper of very large circulation. Its editor is the distinguished ex-Secretary of the Navy, the Hon. Josephus Daniels. Upon the editorial page an interview with Mr. Harvie Jordan, national secretary of the American Cotton Association, appears, and is made the subject of extensive and approving editorial comment. In passing, I may say that for the past 15 or 20 years Mr. Harvie Jordan has been one of the most prominent figures in connection with the subject of agriculture and its promotion and development in the whole South. He has practically given his life to that subject. His judgment is such that he has been by universal assent regarded as a leader in the formulation of legislation and of various and sundry methods of promoting agriculture. His fidelity to the cause can not be called in question. His ability and authority to speak are equally beyond dispute.

I desire now, Mr. President, to ask that the Secretary may read the interview of Mr. Jordan appearing in last Thursday's issue of the Raleigh News and Observer as I have marked it. I want this interview read, because it states more fully than I shall at this time the general purpose and effect of the bill to which I have just referred, S. 3390.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read the article.

The reading clerk read as follows:

[From the Raleigh (N. C.) News and Observer, April 27, 1922.]

Mr. Harvie Jordan, national secretary of the American Cotton Association, discussing the need of such legislation as is contained in the Simmons bill, approves it and says:

"In my opinion the most serious economic problems facing the farmers of the cotton-belt States and the balance of the Nation is that of agricultural finance. Gov. W. P. G. Harding, of the Federal Reserve Board, recently interpreted the law of the Federal reserve banking system to the effect that agricultural loans based on farm products as collateral can not be rediscounted for the purpose of holding such products off the market, the inference being that for farmers to borrow money for the purpose of holding cotton or other staple products of the markets is speculation.

"This interpretation of the Federal reserve law means that when staple farm products are ready for market they must be promptly sold, whether markets are stagnant or not. It means an encouragement or enforcement of the dumping method of marketing, which has always carried the penalty of low prices to the growers. The policy now being generally adopted by farmers to market their products slowly and in an orderly manner to regulate supplies to meet the needs only of legitimate consumption will meet a death blow if the law as interpreted by Governor Harding is enforced.

"As a matter of fact, the Federal reserve system was created by Congress to meet the needs of commercial banking for short-time loans of from 30 to 90 days. The farmer's turnover of his crops can not be made during so short a period of time. It requires practically a year in which to plant, cultivate, and harvest a cotton crop, and eight to nine months in which to sell it in an orderly manner. Neither a 90-day nor 6-month loan will serve the needs of the cotton growers. Live-stock growers need a longer period of loans.

"The agricultural industry of the Nation requires a short-term system of finance covering loans from six months to three years, and to be totally divorced from the operations of the Federal reserve banking system of the commercial loans. Such a system has been in operation for many years in all the leading agricultural countries of the world except in the United States. Senator F. M. SIMMONS, of North Carolina, has recently introduced a bill in the Senate entitled 'The agricultural credits act of 1922,' which is broad and comprehensive. The bill provides the creation of the necessary Federal banking machinery that will meet the needs of short-term agricultural finance in the country. The bill provides for making loans direct to cooperative marketing associations, and individual loans to farmers will be negotiated through local banking institutions, which will become members of the Federal short-term agricultural bank.

"The speedy enactment of the Simmons agricultural credits bill is imperative at this time if the farmers are to be properly financed and the agricultural industry of the Nation brought back to a prosperous basis. Farmers require credits to not only plant, cultivate, and harvest their crops, but also to enable them to market such crops in an orderly manner.

"The dumping of farm products on the market means that prices will be regulated and controlled by speculation and the welfare of the producers left in the hands of distributors. This is the most serious matter confronting the agricultural industry of the South, especially as it relates to the future handling and marketing of cotton. Every possible pressure should be brought to bear on Congress to enact this necessary legislation as speedily as it can be done. The farmers are practically without credits and with no well-defined system of finance to meet their needs. National rehabilitation can not be experienced until the purchasing and debt-paying powers of the farmers have been returned to normal. This can not be done until production is reestablished on a satisfactory basis and the price of farm products so marketed as to meet the cost of production plus a reasonable profit to the growers."

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I have no pride of authorship in connection with this bill. What I want is legislation to meet what I know to be a crying need.

I want to say to the friends of agriculture in this Chamber that I hope that in connection with this effort to get adequate legislation to relieve the agricultural and stock-raising conditions there will be no politics, but that we will act upon every proposition looking to this end upon its merits. So far as the bill I have introduced is concerned, I am perfectly willing to meet with the spokesman of those Senators who especially represent agriculture, or with all of them collectively, and discuss this bill and every other bill which has been introduced looking to the same end and evolve out of them a satisfactory measure to accomplish the purpose which I think we all have in view. I hope that whatever bill we may agree upon as a substitute for these several bills will be introduced as a substitute, and that we will consider and act upon the substitute instead of upon the original bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, it seems to me the bill has been referred to the wrong committee. I have no objection to it going to the Finance Committee, but the Committee on Banking and Currency considered the farm loan act.

Mr. SIMMONS. I was going to discuss that.

Mr. FLETCHER. There are two amendments to that act now before the committee, and there is another bill bearing on this subject, introduced by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], which the committee is now considering. It seems to me the bill should have been referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. SIMMONS. With reference to the proposition I have just made, it does not make any difference what committee the bill has been referred to. If we can agree upon a substitute measure which will be satisfactory and which will stand some chance of being passed during this session in the congested condition we have here, then that substitute can be offered and referred for consideration to whatever committee the Senate thinks should have it.

We ought to follow the practical course, and I know perfectly well that in the conditions we have here we are not going to get enacted legislation, even for this vital purpose, to meet this urgent situation, unless we can come together and agree outside of the open sessions of the Senate upon some measure which will be satisfactory to the friends of the purpose of all these kindred bills.

The Finance Committee has had this bill before it now since April 3, nearly a month, and they have not acted upon it. I am not particularly complaining about that. I know that the majority members of the Finance Committee, at least, have been exceedingly busy in connection with the very important and far-reaching legislation which we now have under consideration—the tariff bill—and for that reason probably they have not had sufficient time to consider and report the agricultural credits bill.

There are bills pending before the Banking and Currency Committee looking to the same end, but not as fully accomplishing that end, I think, as this bill (S. 3390) would. Those bills have not received the consideration to which their importance seems to entitle them, because, I suppose, the members of that committee have been very busy; I do not know how that is.

But my purpose in making this statement is to extend here openly an invitation to every Senator who feels the necessity of this kind of legislation, who recognizes the importance of quick action upon it, who feels that it would be a calamity if we did not act during this session, to meet with other Senators in a nonpartisan spirit and consider these various measures which are proposed, to the end that we may, if possible, reach an agreement as to what is necessary to present that, and by the solid front thus presented make it easy to enact the measure during this session of Congress. It can not be done in any other way, and I feel that I am justified in making that proposition and this appeal, because I say to Senators that the action of the War Finance Corporation, although it has met fairly well the situation which has existed during the last year, having at least greatly relieved it, has been a mere ameliorating process and does not reach the heart of the problem which must be solved if agriculture is to come into its own in this country. If this fundamental industry, upon which is based all of our national prosperity, is to be relieved something more is required than an extension of the life of the War Finance Corporation.

I believe, and I think those who have studied the situation and understand it will agree with me, that it will be extremely unfortunate to the farmers and stock raisers of this country, to say the least, if something is not done at this session which will give them more effective relief than the mere continuance of the War Finance Corporation.

Of course, that continuance is better than nothing; but is there any reason why, in our haste to help the manufacturing interests of this country by imposing additional taxes on the people, we should deny to the farmers the little modicum of time that is necessary to pass this vital legislation?

In my judgment—and I speak out of experience and, I think, knowledge—there is absolutely nothing which can come before this body of greater importance to more people in this country, and which deserves greater consideration from the standpoint of the public welfare, if you please, than legislation to relieve the deplorable and distressful condition of American agriculturists, and while I am not saying it in any spirit of criticism, I believe it would be a crime against this great and deserving portion of our population to neglect, in the interest of any kind of legislation whatsoever—bonus, tariff, or anything, I care not what—this demand coming from 40 per cent of the population of this great country, 40 per cent who are to-day living upon one basis of prices, and that a basis below the cost of production; buying upon another basis of prices, that far above the cost of production, a situation against which they can not relieve themselves or protect themselves unless they are given equally as good banking and credit facilities as are accorded to those who to-day are enjoying, through their ability to protect their prices, prices which are not only compensatory but are upon a high level of profit.

The only way in which we can relieve this situation is by putting the farmer upon a level, a parity, with the others as to his facilities for credit and for financing his business, and as surely as the day follows the night if we will give him that equality of credit and financial facilities he will be able to hold his own in the contest that must go on between the consumer of the product and the producer of the product; between the speculator in the product and the man who creates the product.

There are in the pending tariff bill duties which it is proposed to levy upon agricultural products. They are in large measure a mere counterpart of the emergency tariff rates which were imposed upon the farmer's products. They were imposed upon the ground that he was entitled to an advance and that those duties would enhance the price of the products. Mr. President, that might have been justified, but only justified upon the theory that his prices were below the cost of production; that they were not living prices; that they were bankrupting prices. Legislation might have been justified to raise those prices, but here we are engaged in an effort to raise prices which are now far above the level of the cost of production, the profits upon which at present prices are absolutely fabulous. If we can give time to that sort of legislation, if we can spend weeks and months here for the purpose of increasing the prices of the manufacturers of the country through the tariff, in the name of God why can we not do something here to increase the prices of farm products, now below the cost of production, not by tariff taxes but by giving the farmer the same opportunities under our financial and banking system that we have so graciously extended to the balance of the laborers and producers of the country?

I think that in asking this legislation I am entitled in the name of the farmers to ask it as in the nature of a demand, a demand that they may have justice and equality under the financial system of our Government as well as political equality under the political system of our country.

Mr. President, I hope the importance of this matter will not be overlooked. If the Finance Committee feel that they can not act upon the matter in due time, I am perfectly willing to recall the bill and send it to some other committee, but I do not think that is the way to get results in the matter. I think the way, the only sure and certain way, of getting results, immediate and quick results, is the method I have outlined, and I again ask every friend of agriculture in this body to cooperate, not with me, but to cooperate among themselves in order to frame a bill that will meet the situation. We did that here some time ago. We had a bill introduced to aid agriculture. It met with opposition which might have brought about its defeat, but the friends of the bill got together and agreed upon the substitute, which was speedily passed.

Now, let us do that same thing with reference to this legislation. Let us forget the suggestion that other things are so important that this matter, which is to my mind of paramount importance, shall be overlooked and passed by and the farmer left for perhaps another year to shift as he can under a wholly inadequate system for the relief of the evils which now press upon him and are grinding him and will continue more and more to grind him. Unless he is relieved, we shall witness in the United States in the near future a debacle in our agricultural activities, the disastrous consequences of which can not be measured.

DEFLATION POLICY OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I have been very much interested in what the distinguished Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] has said. I agree with him that it is very important to have legislation along the line suggested by him. I want to tell the Senator that the same power which forced the deflation policy upon the country through the Federal Reserve Board will fight the legislation which he suggests.

This is too fruitful a field, Mr. President, for those people to give up without a struggle. The farmers of the United States have been fleeced by them many times before. When we created the Federal reserve banking system we broke for a time the strangle hold of the Wall Street money power, and all was well for a few years. When that merciless power would undertake to drive the price of agricultural products below the cost of production the Federal reserve banks came to the rescue of the farmer, extended him credits, and enabled him to prevent the sacrifice of his products at destructive prices. Under the old Wall Street banking system the speculators would raid the market at the crop-moving time and beat down the price of farm products. The farmer could get neither currency nor credit with which to fight for living prices, and they forced him to sell at low and unremunerative prices—prices that did not even cover the cost of production. Then when the speculators in that way forced farm products out of the hands of the farmer they put the prices up again, and the consumer was robbed.

They robbed with one hand the farmer, the producer, and then turned and with the other hand robbed the American consumer.

Mr. President, prior to the time that Wall Street got control of the Federal Reserve Board money could be borrowed on farm products. Wheat could be held off of the market when the speculators were beating down the price. The cattlemen of the West borrowed money and were enabled to fight those who undertook to cripple and injure the cattle industry. They could get money; they did get money. The cotton producers of the South also succeeded in doing that under the Federal reserve system before Wall Street got its tentacles wrapped about the Federal Reserve Board and held it hard and fast. We provided in the Federal reserve act that agricultural paper was eligible for rediscount for six months, with the right of renewal.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. I wish to interrupt the Senator just at this point before he proceeds further along the line he has indicated to suggest in connection with what the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] said, that when we framed the farm loan act it provided a financial system to meet the needs of agriculture, especially with reference to long-time credit. At that time the commission reported that the subject of short-time credit would be considered later, but did not then consider that matter was so important as providing the capital needs of the farmers through the farm loan act and through a system of long-term paper.

I agree that we must devise some system of short-term credit. I have not examined the Senator's bill very carefully. I read it over and observed that it was referred to the Committee on Finance. I thought that it ought to go to the Committee on Banking and Currency because that committee has handled such legislation heretofore. However, I am convinced that we do need an extension of the system some way, so as to take care of the short-time needs of the farmer; for six months, or something like that.

I offered an amendment to the farm loan act whereby it would be provided that six months' paper, with farm loan bonds attached as collateral, should be eligible for rediscount in the Federal reserve banks. That would afford an unlimited market for farm loan bonds and in that way supply additional funds needed by the farmers of the country. The Farm Loan Board, however, took the position that there was some question whether the public would absorb any greater quantity or greater volume of farm loan bonds than they had been offering. The amendment I proposed would supply that need of a broader and unlimited market for farm loan bonds.

That matter is pending and, as the Senator from Alabama has indicated, the course of the Federal Reserve Board is to oppose that species of legislation. They consider that a note with a farm loan bond attached as collateral is not liquid security or liquid paper such as is contemplated by the Federal reserve act. I can not see why a farm loan bond at par attached to a six months' note is not just as good as a note taken for the purchase of a horse when before the paper is due the horse may die. That sort of paper is considered perfectly good now and is eligible for rediscount, but the board has said that if it has attached to it a farm loan bond as collateral it is not liquid and therefore not eligible for rediscount.

But there is another feature in connection with this agricultural matter which I draw to the Senator's attention for just a moment, although it is perhaps somewhat foreign to his line of thought. It is having a destructive effect on agriculture and a very discouraging effect. I refer to excessive freight rates, the high freight and express rates obtaining throughout the country, especially the express rates.

I have in my desk here account sales by perhaps a dozen vegetable growers in Florida in which they show conclusively that the producer is taxed on the average about one-half of the gross proceeds of his product in express charges; that is to say, if he ships so many cases of eggplant and his returns are, say, $80, $40 of that amount goes to the express company. That is about the average deducted from the various account sales, nearly one-half of the price paid for the product in the market being taken out by the express company alone. That, of course, is for transportation. That does not include boxing, crating, hauling to the depot, and so forth. That situation ought to be corrected. It is too burdensome. We ship out of Florida over 250,000 carloads of fruit and vegetables, and taxed in this way it is an enormous burden. It is having a more discouraging effect than almost anything that can be imagined.

In that connection I wish to ask permission to insert in the RECORD a clipping from the Washington Star, headlined "Demand for drop in freight rates. Secretary Wallace sees railway concessions or increase in farmers' prices." It is a sort of résumé of an address delivered by the Secretary of Agriculture before the New York Academy of Political Sciences on the 28th of April. It is not very long, and I would like to have it inserted in the RECORD at this point because it stresses some very important features regarding the situation, and especially the need of reduction of freight rates.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article referred to is as follows:

DEMAND FOR DROP IN FREIGHT RATES—SECRETARY WALLACE SEES RAILWAY CONCESSION OR INCREASE IN FARMERS' PRICES.

[By the Associated Press.]

NEW YORK, April 28.—Unless there is a quick reduction in railroad freight rates to "about pre-war levels," or the prices of agricultural products increase sufficiently to equal the rate advance, there will be "profound readjustments" in agricultural production, involving readjustments in industry as well, Secretary Wallace, of the Agricultural Department, declared in an address to-day before the New York Academy of Political Sciences. The "blighting effect" upon agriculture of the present increased level of freight rates, the Secretary said, "can hardly be comprehended."

SUMMARY OF CONCLUSIONS.

What he regarded as the probable effects if present rates were continued "for any length of time" were summarized by Secretary Wallace as follows:

"First, to favor the farmers of South America and Australia at the expense of our own farmers, and all the more so because of the substantial decrease in ocean rates.

"Second, to keep prices of farm products in the large surplus producing States at figures lower than are justified by the investment in land and equipment and cost of production.

"Third, prolong the period of dissatisfaction among farmers and encourage advocates of economic fallacies of all sorts.

"Fourth, improve the position of eastern truck and fruit growers, but add considerably to the cost of milk and dairy products because of the advanced prices of hay and coarse grains necessarily shipped in from the West.

"Fifth, gradually shift industrial enterprises westward, nearer the surplus food-producing territory.

"Sixth, promote sectional rather than national spirit and make more and more difficult large national policies with respect to international affairs."

FREIGHT RATES TAX ON FARMER.

"Present freight rates impose a tax on the farmer of the surplus producing States," Mr. Wallace said, "which must inevitably reduce shipments of coarse grains and hay to the East and which already is causing the fruit and truck growers of the far West and Southwest to turn to water transportation and the wheat growers of the West to use the shorter haul to water for export grains." He cited figures showing that wheat exports passing through Gulf ports had increased from 24 per cent of the total in 1913 to 59 per cent in 1921.

"I am not making a special plea for the farmer as against the railroads. They must work in harmony and understanding. The important point I am trying to make is this, that this Nation has been built up by a system of low railroad rates designed to encourage the movement of our surplus agricultural crops long distances to manufacturing, industrial, and business centers, with a corresponding return haul of manufactured products, and that a sudden reversal of this theory of rate making results in great economic injustice, and if persisted in will keep us in a state of confusion and agricultural and business uncertainty for a long time.

SEES HOPEFUL SIGN.

"The most hopeful sign of the present time is the apparent recognition of the railroad management that our present high rates can not be continued without disaster to the railroads themselves, and that rates must come down to a point not far, if any, above the pre-war levels."

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Florida for the valuable suggestions which he has made. I think it would be a good idea if the Senator from Florida and the Senator from North Carolina were to get together and endeavor to reach an agreement as to what would be the best measure for providing a farm banking system which would answer the needs of the farmer.

As I said a moment ago, before Wall Street secured control of the Federal Reserve Board the farmers borrowed money through the Federal reserve system. There was no complaint in the South in 1918 about getting money to hold cotton against the bear gamblers of Wall Street; we had no trouble about getting money in 1919; neither had the grain growers or the cattlemen of the West. It was not, I repeat, until the deflation policy, which was born in Wall Street, had been adopted by the Federal Reserve Board and took hold of the throats of the farmers of the country that there was hatched up the excuse that the Federal reserve system was not suitable to the needs of the farmer. Well, the law speaks for itself and says that agricultural paper is eligible for rediscount at Federal reserve banks. Mr. President, if I had been in control of the Federal Reserve Board and had wrought the ruin which it has wrought upon the business of two great sections of this country I, too, would say, I suppose, that I had discovered the system was not an adequate one for farm operations. I had rather put the onus on some one else than to confess that I had been responsible for the destruction of property values by the billions of dollars; that I had been responsible for driving men, women, and children penniless from their farms; that I had been responsible, even, for conditions that drove men to take their own lives.

However, Mr. President, if the Federal Reserve Board is to now construe the law to mean that it has not the power and authority to grant accommodations to the farming interests of the United States—which is indeed a late discovery—then we must accept that construction, I presume. I do not know of any power that is going to make the board act to the contrary. This Congress has not—will not do it. The Federal Reserve Board that worked so well and admirably from 1914 to 1920 has fallen under the strange and mystic spell of those who owned and operated the old banking system, hated and despised by honest men and women all over the country.

Mr. President, we were compelled to pass the War Finance Corporation act last year because the Federal Reserve Board failed and refused to meet the credit and currency needs of the agricultural business of the United States. If the Federal Reserve Board had functioned in 1920 and 1921 as it did for four or five years prior to that time, it would have provided every dollar needed for agricultural purposes. We would not have had to pass the War Finance Corporation act. But that board boldly and flatly refused to do as it had done before, perform the functions for which it was created. It permitted the rediscount rate to be raised to 7 per cent, and when we passed the War Finance Corporation bill fixing a lower rate of interest around 5 per cent we forced the Federal reserve rediscount rate down to 4½ or 5 per cent.

What caused them to lower the rate? Walloping them over the head with a club by the War Finance Corporation did it. I helped to pass the War Finance Corporation bill and had a hand in forcing down the rediscount rate of the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. President, I wish now to comment for a moment upon the suggestion made by the Senator from Florida. He reminds us, in the light of Governor Harding's new position, that while cotton and wheat are not now eligible for loans at a Federal reserve bank, a horse is.

Mr. President, the farmers of the West and those who represent them here will agree with me that wheat may be put into an elevator and preserved, and that there is no danger of spoiling if it is properly cared for, while there is danger of the horse dying in an hour, as the Senator from Florida has said.

One may take a bale of cotton and put it in a dry place; he may put it in a bonded warehouse, and it affords the best security in the world. It may be preserved for 1 year, for 10 years, for 50 years, and longer, and it will then be good to spin. No insect pest can harm it after it has been ginned and baled; no insect ever then attacks it; and yet the ruling is that cotton for holding purposes is not good for collateral now at the Federal reserve banks, but that a horse is as good as gold. Those who produce cotton, the wherewithal to clothe the world, are turned down, but the one who owns a horse can get money on his paper with that horse as collateral.

Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina has told the truth to this body about the deplorable condition of the farmers of the country. It may be surprising to some of the Senators from the North and West to learn that the plowmules which our farmers of the South bought from their people and for which they paid $250 and $300 apiece are now selling for $20 and $30 and $50. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. WATSON] called our attention the other day to an instance in Atlanta, Ga., where mules had been sold down there under a forced sale for $12 a head.

This is a serious situation to the farmers of the country, Senators. When I look back the picture comes to my mind of the prosperity that existed in 1919. The farmers of the South were prosperous; the farmers of the West were prosperous; everybody had employment, and the country at large enjoyed a large measure of prosperity, but in three short years all of that prosperity has been swept away, and last year, I believe it was, the State of Texas, the greatest cotton-producing State in the Union, by an act of its legislature suspended the payment of taxes by the farmers of that State.

Mr. President, there is something radically wrong when one group of people under a government has such control over the finances of the country, over the very lifeblood which circulates through the body of business, that they can strike down business and absolutely paralyze industry in a few weeks, as they have done in the instance to which I have referred.

I am heartily in favor of passing whatever law may be necessary to meet the needs of the farmers of the country.

The money changers have gotten hold of the governing board of the great banking system which we created, as the Senator from North Carolina has said, the greatest banking system ever devised by the genius of man. What are we to do? We are to drive them out of control just, as I said before, Christ drove the money changers out of the Temple of Jerusalem. Certain changes must be made in the law.

Mr. President, it is a sad sight to me to see men once prosperous and happy standing about despondent, weary of distressing conditions that exist, and looking in vain for deliverance from such conditions. I know farmers who were getting along fairly well two and a half or three years ago who are now dispossessed of their farms; their property has been swept away under mortgages given when the dollar was inflated. The dollar was deflated and they were compelled to pay with a deflated dollar debts incurred under an inflated dollar. So they are stricken down; they are robbed, and the country is in a deplorable condition.

Mr. President, why not compel the Federal Reserve Board to restore to circulation the money which it has in the vaults of the Federal reserve banks? I had a talk to-day with the governor of the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta, Mr. Wellborn. He said to me, "We have more money than we know what to do with." Yet, Mr. President, distress prevailing within 30 miles of Atlanta, and not only in Georgia but in my State and in the other Southern States, as it is all through the West.

Money is piled up in the Federal reserve banks; those banks gathered it in under the deflation policy when agriculture fell down; when industry was tied up and 7,000,000 men were driven out of employment. They now say, "We have more money than we have ever had; we have more than we know what to do with." I asked the gentleman to whom I have referred, "Why do you not loan it out?" He replied, "Nobody seems to want it." Think of that! Nobody wants it! Mr. President, if I had control of the purse strings of these banks for a while I could lend in ten or fifteen days a billion dollars and more to the farmers of the South and West on good security, better security, in fact, than is back of a great deal of the money which is loaned in New York on speculative collateral.

If a farmer produces grain to feed the world and you tell him at the bank that you will not help him to get a good price when he comes to the market place and he tells you he will quit raising grain, what is the proposition that confronts you? You are confronted with the proposition that the people are going to starve because you have such a financial system that he who produces the wherewith to feed the world must starve in the process; and no just government will stand for such a policy.

What happened when this deflation policy came on? You tied up cotton and the price commenced to go down, and we came to this board and asked if they were going to let us have money with which to fight this battle against the speculator, and they said they could not let us have it for speculative purposes. What is a speculative purpose? If I have cotton and the price of it is 30 cents a pound, and they beat it down to 25, and I say: "I have got to get 30 cents in order to get the cost of production plus a profit," and I want to borrow money in order to fight the man who is trying to take it away from me, they say it is for speculative purposes; and that board turned its back upon the farmers of the South and refused to let them have money during that trying and terrible ordeal, and what happened?

They drove this cotton out of the hands of the producers, and the foreigners bought it at a low price, and the producers here were impoverished. That is what happened.

Mr. President, I want now to bring to the attention of the Senate another thing—the article read by the Secretary from the newspaper in North Carolina from W. P. G. Harding, stating that he had construed the law to mean that you could not borrow money for the purpose of holding farm products. I know that we used to borrow it, as I said, but he has placed a new construction upon the law. Mr. President, he can not escape, nor can the board escape, the fact that there was a conspiracy to rob the South, to drive this cotton out of the hands of the producers of the South; and I want to invite the attention of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] and others to this statement: The progressive interest or rediscount rate was employed only at the Atlanta bank, the Dallas bank, the Kansas City bank, and the St. Louis bank. Did you know that, Senators? Does not this fact clearly show that there was a distinct understanding that money was not to be furnished to the cotton producers to enable them to hold their cotton for a profitable price?

The progressive rate was not invoked against a single bank outside of the agricultural South and a part of the West.

Why was it that right in the midst of the battle, at the height of the cotton-moving season, the South had the progressive rate applied to her when she was fighting the gamblers of Wall Street, trying to hold cotton so that she could obtain the cost of production plus a profit? Why was it that Gov. W. P. G. Harding and his board applied the progressive interest rate to the Atlanta Bank, the Dallas Bank, the Kansas City Bank, and the St. Louis Bank, the banks located in the heart of the farming section of the country? Why was that? Those are the only 4 banks out of the 12 to which they applied the progressive rediscount rate; and I assert again that they charged one little bank in my State the progressive rate from 7 up to 87½ per cent. The bank was crying out: "Give us a little more. We will come out if you will help us to fight through. We have got to have it." The board said: "All right; you can have it. You pay 35 per cent," and on up to 50, 60, 70, 85, 87½ per cent.

It reminded me of the struggling swimmer in the ocean who swam up to a lifeboat, and a vicious pirate had a sharp ax in his hand, and when the swimmer reached up and caught his hand on the lifeboat in the effort to save his life, the pirate, with only three others in the boat, chopped off his four fingers. Then he held on with his thumb, and the pirate chopped off his thumb.

Then the swimmer reached up the other hand and the pirate chopped the four fingers off that hand, and then he chopped off the thumb, and down the swimmer went and drowned in the sea. That is what the Federal Reserve Board did to us in the South.

Farmers who obtained 40 cents a pound for cotton in 1919 were coming into the market place in 1920 with cotton that cost 30 cents a pound to produce. The speculators beat the price down below the cost of production, and the farmer reached up his hand and said, "Let us get on the lifeboat; save us; we are sinking; you can do it"; and they commenced the chopping process and chopped off their hands, and the cotton producers drowned in the sea of financial disaster.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the Senator has just described one of the organized financial drives against one of the great staple products of this country. It is not an unusual performance. Those drives are common. Their objective is to get the crop for less than it is worth.

Mr. HEFLIN. And then to sell it at a high price.

Mr. SIMMONS. The success of such a drive is made possible by the fact that the farmer, having no adequate facilities of credit and finance, is not able to protect himself against the wolves who make it.

Mr. HEFLIN. Absolutely. I am agreeing with the Senator. Since the Federal Reserve Board has ruled that it has no authority to grant these loans, we must legislate to meet that condition; but I have been showing that they did meet it before, and the Senator from North Carolina has been compelled by subsequent developments to meet a condition that is deplorable, indeed. There is no difference between us, Mr. President. The Senator is right. They make these drives every time the farmer gets ready to sell his crop, whether it is grain or cotton, and when he starts to the market they commence to beat down the price. Why? So that they can buy it at a low figure; and then, when they get it and he has parted with it, they put up the price. Why? So that they can make money by the millions. That is why. It is wrong for a government to permit such a thing to be done. That is where my complaint lies.

Mr. President, I was just about to say that the best way to prevent crime by the wholesale in this Government is to denounce both the crime and the criminal. If you let a man get away with a big deal and steal like that which they perpetrated against the South and West in 1920 and 1921, they will do it again, and trust to their shrewd ingenuity to get away with it.

The condemnation of the deflation crime of '20 must be made so often and so strong that such a crime will never be undertaken again.

BUREAU OF ENGRAVING AND PRINTING.

Mr. STERLING. From the Committee on Civil Service I report adversely Senate Resolution 269, authorizing the appointment of a committee to report the facts and reasons relative to the removal by order of the President of responsible officials of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and I submit a report (No. 680) thereon. I ask that the resolution be placed on the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be placed on the calendar.

DISCHARGE OF EX-SERVICE MEN FROM CIVIL SERVICE.

Mr. STERLING. I also report back adversely from the Committee on Civil Service the resolution (S. Res. 271) requesting the President to inform Congress as to alleged demotion, dropping, and discharge of honorably discharged sailors and soldiers from the service since March 1, 1921, and I submit a report (No. 681) thereon. I ask that the resolution be placed on the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be placed on the calendar.

THE TARIFF.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7456) to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the first amendment of the Committee on Finance.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 2, line 6, after the word "containing," insert the words "by weight," so as to read:

Acetic acid containing by weight not more than 65 per cent of acetic acid, three-fourths of 1 cent per pound.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask unanimous consent at this time that when the Senate closes to-day's session it recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. McCUMBER. I desire to say that probably after to-morrow I shall ask that we recess over until 11 o'clock, but I felt that inasmuch as Senators probably had made different arrangements for to-morrow morning I would not make the request to apply to to-morrow.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator how long he desires to have the session continue this afternoon? I think I shall conclude my general observations in perhaps half an hour, and then we will be ready to proceed with the first item, acetic acid, followed by acetic anhydride, and take up the items consecutively, as the Senator desires.

Mr. McCUMBER. Does the Senator think he can get through in about half an hour?

Mr. KING. I prefer to proceed to-morrow morning, and I shall get through in half an hour with the general statement.

Mr. McCUMBER. Could not the Senator finish to-night?

Mr. KING. I will do whatever the Senator from North Dakota desires.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not want to impose on the Senator, but——

Mr. McNARY. If the Senator from Utah does not desire to go forward to-night, I hope to get unanimous consent to bring up the conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. KING. May I suggest to the Senator from North Dakota that it will facilitate matters if that is done, although I am ready to proceed to-night if the Senator desires.

Mr. McCUMBER. I want again to call attention to the fact that this is the eleventh day we have had the bill under discussion, and I was in hopes at least to be able to indicate to the country that we had made some progress; that we could probably adopt the first amendment, simply adding the two words "by weight." I would be glad if the Senator would allow us to vote upon that amendment at the present time.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would be very glad to gratify the Senator, but I can not, because I am going to discuss acetic acid, and I intend to move that it be put upon the free list. I think I can offer an amendment to the amendment of the committee which adds the words "by weight," the effect of which amendment to the amendment would be to restore acetic acid to the free list.

Mr. McCUMBER. Does the Senator think he can have that ready so that we can have a vote to-morrow on the acetic acid item?

Mr. KING. I shall be ready to proceed with the discussion of it as soon as I complete my general statement. My discussion, I hope, will not be long, and then we can take a vote.

Mr. WILLIS. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] advises me that he does not look for any extended discussion of the conference report. Why not let the Senator from Utah finish his general statement to-night, and we shall gain half an hour.

Mr. KING. Why not permit the Senator from Oregon to present the conference report?

Mr. WILLIS. We can do both. I want to hear the Senator's speech. I have heard much of it to-day, and I would like to hear the rest of it this evening.

Mr. KING. Of course, the Senator from Ohio does not mean what he says.

Mr. WILLIS. The Senator from Ohio does mean what he says. He has listened with great delight to the Senator to-day, and he is in the mood now, and would like to hear the rest of the Senator's speech.

Mr. McCUMBER. I shall not object to taking a recess as soon as the Senator from Oregon gets action on his conference report. I ask that the tariff bill be temporarily laid aside for the purpose of taking up the conference report mentioned by the Senator from Oregon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. McNARY. I ask unanimous consent that the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on House bill 10730, the Agriculture Department appropriation bill, be taken from the table.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report, which was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10730) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 9, 12, 17, 19, 27, 28, 29, 43, 44, 46, 47, and 55.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 7, 13, 14, 18, 20, 23, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 48, 52, and 54, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$5,425,246"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$6,968,076"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 8: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$200,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$582,505"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$350,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,030,350"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 16: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,527,910"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 21: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$4,097,282"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 22: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$6,562,302"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 24: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$15,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 25: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$954,561"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 26: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,277,631"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 37: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 37, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,300,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 38: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$4,381,300"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 39: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 39, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$4,585,960"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 45: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$390,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 49: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 49, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,769,180"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 53: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 53, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$450,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 56: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 56, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "three persons at a rate not to exceed $6,500 each per annum"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed on Senate amendments numbered 40, 41, 42, 50, 51, 57, and 58.

CHAS L. MCNARY,
W. L. JONES,
LEE S. OVERMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

SYDNEY ANDERSON,
WALTER W. MAGEE,
EDWARD H. WASON,
J. P. BUCHANAN,
GORDON LEE,
Managers on the part of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether that is a final disposition of the conference report?

Mr. MCNARY. I may state that the conferees of the House and Senate agreed on every item, particularly those with reference to appropriations. The disagreements are only where there was language employed which went out in the House on a point of order but was reinserted in the Senate, and it has to go back for confirmation to the floor of the House. That is required by reason of the House rules. It does not involve any disputed question so far as the conferees are concerned; it is only a matter of form in order to comply with the rule of the House.

I move that the Senate still further insist upon its amendments still in disagreement, request a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice President appointed Mr. MCNARY, Mr. JONES of Washington, and Mr. OVERMAN conferees on the part of the Senate at the further conference.

THE TARIFF.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I ask that the tariff bill be again laid before the Senate as the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7456) to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes.

RECESS.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I move that the Senate take a recess.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the Senate took a recess, the recess being, under the order previously made, until to-morrow, Tuesday, May 2, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, May 1, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, for a day so rare which gives us to feel that we are of the household of God, we give Thee thanks. Vouchsafe unto us the interpreting light of Thy spirit, from which spring the best things in human thought and conduct. Strengthen us in the exercise of all noble aspirations. Grant Thy peace to all hearts and give relief to any who may be weary. Give guidance to the study of all things that make for happiness and prosperity and continue to look with divine favor upon our fair land. Through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. APPLEBY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD, in 8-point type, some remarks I made at the dinner of the Ocean County Republican Club, at Lakewood, N. J., on April 27, 1922.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD, in 8-point type, his remarks made at the Ocean County Republican Club, Lakewood, N. J. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

REMARKS OF HON. T. FRANK APPLEBY AT THE DINNER OF THE OCEAN COUNTY REPUBLICAN CLUB AT LAKEWOOD, N. J., APRIL 27, 1922.

The Republican Party has always been recognized as the constructive political party of this country. It has ever been on the offensive, seldom on the defensive. But at the present time so many attacks on Congress are being broadcasted by the Democratic Party that I, as your Representative in Congress, feel constrained to accept the challenge of our opponents who claim that the present Congress has done nothing. The representatives of the Republican Party this fall will present to the voters of this and other congressional districts a record of achievements not only of constructive legislation but rehabilitation of economic and financial conditions that can be measured only by the magnitude of the obstacles it was necessary to surmount before a return to national normality could be brought about.

TWELVE MONTHS OF REBUILDING.

President Harding was inducted into office a little over one year ago, and the Sixty-seventh Congress took up its duties about the same time. Since the signing of the armistice, a little more than two years previous, the former administration had been drifting in the midst of war problems. These problems were hard enough when the war ended, but they became worse and worse as time passed and neglect continued. The Republican Party was confronted with the responsibility of adjusting matters. This Congress took up the work and set itself to the task of not only reducing the enormous governmental expenditures but bringing about a business rehabilitation through the conducting of the Government business in a businesslike manner. Even in this short time it has paid off billions of dollars of debts that were piled up during the war period, provided for other obligations of a short-term character, arranged for the refunding of other debts, and at the same time reduced taxes to as great an extent as possible in accordance with promises made.

PROMISES TO TAXPAYERS REDEEMED.

As an evidence of this reconstruction we may note the rapid rise in the value of Liberty bonds during the past year, which is one of the many indications of returning prosperity.

The rise in these securities in the last 12 months amounts to approximately $2,000,000,000. Among the benefits accruing to the people from the revision of the income tax law by this Congress may be mentioned the increased exemption for married men from $2,000 to $2,500, which affects favorably 60 per cent of the income taxpayers; nuisance taxes have been remitted as well as taxes on athletic goods of all kinds, being a direct benefit to all of our schools and educational institutions; transportation taxes, both freight and passenger, removed; excess-profits taxes removed; surtaxes have been reduced; and small exemption granted on matured building and loan stock.

The enactment of the Budget system, which was vetoed by President Wilson, has exercised a wholesome influence in the limitation of public expenditure, and was a necessary step in the policy of putting more business into Government to which our party is pledged.

VITAL LEGISLATION ENACTED.

Congress very quickly passed the emergency tariff act, which is acting as a stay against the flood of cheaply manufactured European products.

A permanent tariff bill, with the American valuation plan, has passed the House and is now pending in the Senate. Extreme care has been taken in the framing of the measure, and when the bill becomes a law Republican capacity and statesmanship will again vindicate itself and justify the people's verdict.

The soldier's compensation act, commonly called the bonus bill, recently passed the House and will shortly be acted upon by the Senate.

The Veterans' Bureau act, creating the bureau for the care of wounded and disabled veterans of the World War, and which is now being operated at a cost of some $400,000,000 annually, is affording relief to these deserving veterans.

The immigration restriction act amending the immigration laws was passed limiting the annual immigration to 3 per cent in any one year as applied to the various foreign populations as represented in the United States.

The Volstead Act has been amended, which should bring about a better enforcement of the prohibition laws. Regardless of what one may think of national prohibition, there should be no serious difference of opinion among patriotic people as to the importance of enforcing laws, especially laws imbedded in the Constitution. And just here I want to call the attention of the so-called "wets" to the fact that prohibition is not the only issue in the coming campaign.

The Army and Navy appropriation bills have both passed the House, and in each branch the appropriation has been materially reduced. The Navy bill in particular carries out the ideas and thought of the Limitation of Armament Conference called by President Harding. And I might add that the United States Senate has the distinction of being the first interested body to ratify the seven treaties of the armament conference. The Army and Navy bills as vetoed by President Wilson were enacted into law this year and carried appropriations of $600,000,000 less than the amount recommended by Secretaries Baker and Daniels. Secretary Weeks reports a saving of $40,000,000 in one year in his department.

The War Finance Corporation has been revived, and has proven a great assistance to the agriculture interests of the country.

The Federal highways act has been passed, carrying with it an appropriation of $65,000,000 for the coming fiscal year.

The maternity bill, pledged by the Republican Party in the last campaign and advocated almost unanimously by the recently enfranchised women of the land, has been enacted into law.

The antilynching bill has passed the House and is now pending in the Senate.

NEW LEGISLATION OF INTEREST TO NEW JERSEY.

The rivers and harbors bill has been reported to the House and is now on the House Calendar for action. One of the most important items of this bill authorized by the Rivers and Harbors Committee calls for a 30-foot channel starting from Sandy Hook and extending to South and Perth Amboy via Arthur Kill, and thence to upper New York Bay. The bill also authorizes surveys for Double Creek and West Creek, Ocean County.

You will pardon my mentioning some of the bills which I have introduced, which when enacted into law should be of the greatest benefit to this district, such as the oil-pollution bill, of which Senator FRELINGHUYSEN has introduced a similar bill in the Senate, making illegal this evil which is destroying the bathing and fishing; and the joint resolution calling for an international conference on the oil-pollution evil, which was favorably reported to the House by the Committee on Foreign Affairs yesterday, which agreement, if entered into, would stop the dumping of this refuse oil on the high seas. The Barnegat Light legislation has not been completed, but Senator FRELINGHUYSEN is cooperating with me in this matter and we are using our best efforts to secure relief for this historic light. I have secured an appropriation for additional aids to navigation in Raritan River and Bay, which when the new lights are installed will give these waters a 24-hour transportation service. My latest bill, introduced this week, provides for Federal aid to supplement State and municipal aid in the protection of the beaches of the New Jersey coast.

APPROPRIATIONS CUT BY BILLIONS.

With this summary of new legislation, one naturally inquires as to its relation to the promised reduction of the operating expenses of the Government. In reply I would say that I am reliably informed that the cost of running this Government for the current fiscal year will be approximately $3,947,000,000, which will be $1,600,000,000 less than the current expenses of last year. I also want to call your attention to the fact that the rates of discount of the Federal reserve banks are now 4½ per cent for commercial loans, very considerably less than one year ago.

BUSINESS GAINS IN EVERY DEPARTMENT.

Business generally shows an improvement. The building permits of 154 cities of the United States for the month of March, 1922, as compared with this same date last year, shows a gain of 96 per cent. Both freight tonnage and industrial employment is on the increase. What is particularly needed at this time is a little more confidence in our ability to carry on enterprises. We must remember that for the present, at least, our international trade, while important, must of necessity be curtailed until conditions in European countries become more stable. We should remember that legislation, neither State nor National, will cure all the ills of business and commerce. We may not and probably will not be able to complete the program laid out by the administration at this session of Congress, but we have already done much of it, and we will present such a record of real achievement to the people this fall that they will confirm the verdict of the last election.

Thus I have given you in part the constructive program of the Republican Party in Congress for the past year. Personally I have endeavored to give to the high office to which you elected me my best efforts, not only in constant attendance but in offering bills to the House providing for constructive legislation. Our party will go before the voters of the country upon the record of the entire Congress, both Senate and House. Our endeavors have been to cooperate with President Harding in carrying out a program of national reconstruction. You and I have abiding faith in the future of America, and believe in the restoration of and the continuation of prosperity. The achievements of the first year of the Harding administration have been partially enumerated and with which we gladly go to the country for the people's verdict. The American people are fundamentaly just, and in their aggregate and ultimate decision they are right, and upon their verdict we rest our case.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN PERSONS EMPLOYED IN POSTAL SERVICE.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to strike from the Union Calendar House Joint Resolution 113, for the relief of certain persons employed in the Postal Service. It does not belong there; it is a part of a law that was passed last year.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to strike from the Union Calendar House Joint Resolution 113, to relieve certain persons employed in the Postal Service, and that the bill be laid on the table. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 10007) for the relief of certain persons to whom, or their predecessors, patents were issued to public lands in the State of Minnesota under an erroneous survey made in 1876.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 10240. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Savannah River near Haileys Ferry and between the counties of Anderson, S. C., and Hart, Ga.; and

H. R. 10407. An act authorizing the counties of Jasper, S. C., and Chatham, Ga., to construct a bridge across the Savannah River at or near Savannah, Ga.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that April 26 they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 10740. An act authorizing the use of special canceling stamps in certain post offices;

H. R. 7415. An act to correct and amend the service and military record of Herbert Langley, United States Marine Corps;

H. R. 8690. An act to add a certain tract of land on the island of Hawaii to the Hawaii National Park;

H. R. 9671. An act to amend section 87 of the Judicial Code;

H. R. 1009. An act for the relief of H. C. Mullins, his wife, and minor children;

H. R. 6686. An act for the relief of George Ciszek and Anna Ciszek;

H. J. Res. 57. Joint resolution making the provisions of section 2296 of the United States Revised Statutes applicable to all entries made under the homestead laws and laws supplemental and amendatory thereof;

H. R. 5588. An act to repeal section 5 of an act entitled "An act to establish the Lassen Volcanic National Park in the Sierra Nevada Mountains, in the State of California, and for other purposes," approved August 9, 1916;

H. R. 5820. An act to place Albert Hamilton on the retired list of the United States Marine Corps;

H. R. 3346. An act for the relief of the heirs of Oscar Chrysler; and

H. R. 7272. An act for the relief of Monroe B. Shealy.

CALENDAR FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT.

The SPEAKER. To-day the Calendar for Unanimous Consent is in order, and the Clerk will report the first bill.

LAKE GEORGE, YAZOO COUNTY, MISS.

The first bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the the bill (S. 1162) declaring Lake George, Yazoo County, Miss., to be a nonnavigable stream.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed without prejudice and remain on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice and remain on the calendar. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

INDIANS OF THE MESCALERO RESERVATION, N. MEX.

The next bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 6294) promoting civilization and self-support among the Indians of the Mescalero Reservation in New Mexico.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I wish to inquire of the gentleman having the bill in charge whether this sum of $250,000 should be available for all time, or whether there should not be some time limit placed on its expenditure?

Mr. MONTOYA. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROACH] has charge of the bill. He is not here, and I ask that it be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Mexico asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

AMENDING SECTIONS 5549 AND 5550 OF THE REVISED STATUTES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 1010) to amend sections 5549 and 5550 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed without prejudice.

Mr. CRISP. I was about to ask that, Mr. Speaker; my colleague, Judge BRAND, is very much interested in it, and he is in the hospital.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

TO VALIDATE CERTAIN DEEDS EXECUTED BY THE FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES.

The next bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11054) to validate certain deeds executed by members of the Five Civilized Tribes, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I think some explanation should be given to the House before the objection stage is passed as to the need of this measure.

Mr. McCORMICK. I did not understand the gentleman's objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is rather an important bill, and I think some explanation should be made as to the need of it before the objection stage is passed.

Mr. McCORMICK. I am glad to give the gentleman a short statement. It is made necessary because under several acts of Congress the Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma were authorized to alienate their land under certain conditions, and they have in a good many instances done it by specific authorization of the Secretary of the Interior, as provided by law. A part of the land they have alienated is located in Tulsa, Okla., and some cloud has been cast on the title of valuable real estate in Tulsa and other parts of Oklahoma by virtue of the fact that certain of the Indians who heretofore alienated their land, with the consent of the Secretary of the Interior, are now seeking to have the conveyance set aside. It is provided in the bill that wherever the conveyances have been made through fraud or duress this bill shall not apply to defeat the purposes of such litigation. This bill is for the purpose of quieting title and preventing litigation, which, in the opinion of the committee and the Secretary of the Interior, would be useless and unjust at this time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Do I understand the gentleman to hold that the claimants who are seeking to set aside the conveyances of this land have already received full compensation by reason of a prior conveyance?

Mr. McCORMICK. It is the opinion of the committee after hearings that full compensation has been received by all these claimants who are now seeking to recover. I may say that among these claimants are two or three who are endeavoring to disturb settled rights in the city of Tulsa, to the disadvantage of that city and all the people of that region, and in an inequitable manner.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the reason for seeking congressional aid when the claimants have the courts to resort to for protection, like any other owner of land?

Mr. McCORMICK. The purpose of seeking congressional aid in that where full value has been given Congress ought not to permit litigation to come in after a series of years where the rights have been vested under certain acts of Congress and with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior—Congress should not sit by and allow such rights to be litigated in the courts for years.

Mr. STAFFORD. The claimants are seeking to take advantage of technicalities which are really not in good faith?

Mr. McCORMICK. In so far as these claimants can set up that they alienated their property under duress or fraud of any character the present act does not apply. Congress allows them to go ahead and litigate their cases, but if nothing of that character is set up the Congress absolutely forecloses the bringing of these apparently inequitable suits after this lapse of time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the reservation of objection.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman another question. Will this act affect the question of heirship, where there is disputed heirship? To make myself clear, when the act was first passed the rules under which heirs were declared were very liberal. Since then, many times cases where there has been a declaration of heirship have been set aside and subsequent heirs have been discovered who were lawful heirs. Will a case of that kind be affected by this act?

Mr. McCORMICK. Of course, the gentleman will understand that where there is an alienation in the first place, the right of the heirs is foreclosed so far as holding under the one who alienates is concerned. This bill does not affect the right of any heir who can prove that the land was originally alienated through fraud or duress.

Mr. EVANS. Suppose a case of mistake.

Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma. This will not affect that.

Mr. McCORMICK. In cases of mistake there is the usual equitable remedy. If it can be proved that a substantial mistake has been made I am certain that heirs can come in.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is not the purpose of this bill really curative legislation to take care of cases where the courts had decided some deeds to be invalid?

Mr. McCORMICK. The only litigation I know of that would be affected by this bill, that is now pending, is litigation that has gone to the Supreme Court of Oklahoma, where certain claimants received a favorable verdict in the lower court, but which verdict has been reversed by the Supreme Court of Oklahoma. One or two of them now propose carrying their cases to the Supreme Court of the United States to the entire unsettling of realty and business conditions in the city of Tulsa, Okla.

Mr. CARTER. Let us take, for instance, this case. Prior to April 26, 1906, the Secretary of the Interior was authorized to remove restrictions on Indians whom he thought competent, or to grant what is known as a qualified removal of restriction, authorizing the sale of these allotted lands under supervision of the department. That proceeded for a while, and the Secretary found that in some cases advantage was being taken of the allottee, because the purchaser of this particular tract of land or the prospective purchasers had an agent here in Washington who immediately wired them when the restrictions were removed. As they were the only men who knew the restrictions had been removed, they would be the only purchasers. Because of no competition the land would naturally bring less. In order to prevent that the Secretary inaugurated a plan of removing restrictions 30 days in advance; that is to say, he would issue an order to take effect 30 days after its issue. If Johnny Jones applied for a removal of restrictions and they were removed on April 10, 1905, say, the removal did not become valid until May 10, 1905.

On April 26, 1906, an act was passed which prevented the Secretary from removing these restrictions and left that power solely in the hands of Congress. Prior to April 26, 1906, within 30 days of that time, the Secretary had issued several of these orders which made the actual removal of restrictions take place after the passage of the act of April 26, 1906. Those cases have gone to the court, and the court has decided that since the actual removal of restrictions was to take place after the act of April 26, 1906, was passed, although the order was issued before, the deeds did not come within the act and were invalid. It is true that the purchasers paid, perhaps, the full price for all those lands, and they ought to be protected, but it is furthermore true that in some cases since that time valid deeds have been given for these same lands by allottees to other innocent purchasers. There ought to be some protection, it seems to me, afforded those later purchasers, who are bona fide purchasers.

Mr. McCORMICK. Of course, the gentleman will not contend that any of these lands have been alienated without the consent of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. CARTER. Perhaps I did not make myself clear.

Mr. McCORMICK. All of these alienations have taken place with the consent of the Secretary.

Mr. CARTER. No; the Secretary had nothing to do with it. By the act of May 27, 1908, Congress removed the restrictions on about 9,000,000 acres of these lands, and allottees have since that time transferred these lands without consulting the Secretary.

Mr. McCORMICK. The gentleman does not contend that these Indians have not received full price for the value of the land as it was sold at that time, for the purpose of this objection.

Mr. CARTER. I know of no case where the Indian did not. The only fault I find with the bill is this, that in a case where one of those deeds was held invalid, if some innocent purchaser has since come in and bought the land and procured a valid deed for it, there ought to be some protection given to him.

Mr. McCORMICK. On the other hand, the gentleman will understand that there have been several transfers of property that were in the first place alienated by the Indian allottee. There has been a variety of transactions, extending to transfers, perhaps, to the third and fourth degree in the city of Tulsa, Okla.

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. McCORMICK. And these transactions will likewise be seriously disturbed. It was the opinion of the committee that it would serve public interest and operate to the quieting of business conditions in the city of Tulsa, and other parts of Oklahoma, if this remedial legislation were enacted, especially as it never has been contended that the Secretary of the Interior did not give his consent to the original alienation.

Mr. CARTER. There is no doubt about the Secretary's action. The difficulty is that the courts have held the Secretary's action unauthorized by law. The gentleman has one thing in mind, and he is not discussing the matter I brought up. The matter he has in mind is the town-site cases, and the matter I have in mind, which comes under the same act, is the case where a man sold his land and that deed has been declared invalid by the Supreme Court of the United States. The man received an adequate price for his land; I do not contend that he did not. The purchaser at that time gave an adequate price, but he did not receive a valid deed. The courts held it to be invalid, and that allottee, the Indian, has since sold that land and given a valid deed to the land to some other purchaser. Where does he come in?

Mr. McCORMICK. Of course this legislation, the gentleman will understand, operates to validate the first alienation. In other words——

Mr. CARTER. That is what I am speaking of. Suppose——

Mr. McCORMICK. Is not that the transfer which we would seek to validate rather than a subsequent one?

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman means validate?

Mr. McCORMICK. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. That is true; but suppose the court held that the transfer was invalid, and after the courts had already passed upon it and it had become res adjudicata, then along comes another man and in good faith purchases that land—pays as much or more—is not he entitled to some protection?

Mr. McCORMICK. The gentleman has not in mind any specific cases passed on by the Supreme Court——

Mr. CARTER. Yes, I have. Where the Indian received adequate pay for his land, and where there was no fraud or duress, that deed ought to be declared valid unless subsequent to that time a valid deed has been given to some other purchaser.

Mr. McCORMICK. The gentleman has not in mind any subsequent deed, has he, that has been made after the first alienation?

Mr. CARTER. I know it would be possible.

Mr. McCORMICK. It would not be possible if this legislation were enacted.

Mr. CARTER. Not hereafter.

Mr. McCORMICK. We are trying to remedy that situation by this legislation.

Mr. CARTER. I am speaking of deeds already executed under subsequent acts, such as the act of May 27, 1908.

Mr. McCORMICK. Of course, the gentleman understands deeds are recorded, and this would not permit of the practice of a man alienating his land twice.

Mr. CARTER. If the court holds the old deed is invalid, not on the vendor's account but on the account of the fellow who purchased the land innocently and who purchased it after the court had held the other deed was invalid, I think that ought to be taken into consideration.

Mr. McCORMICK. If there are any cases where the Supreme Court or the court of last resort has finally held the deeds invalid and the property rights existing by virtue of the subsequent deeds have been adjudicated by the court, this bill has not for its purpose the disturbing of any adjudication by such court of last resort.

Mr. CARTER. Let me read what it says:

That any conveyance of allotted or inherited Indian lands by any member of the Five Civilized Tribes, or his or her heirs, which may have been heretofore approved by the Secretary of the Interior, or any order heretofore issued by the Secretary of the Interior authorizing the removal of restrictions from lands belonging to such Indians under and in accordance with or purporting to be under and in accordance with the acts which are named.

Mr. McCORMICK. Of course, the gentleman has raised a very nice legal point. It is my contention that where the question of alienation has been decided by the court of last resort that establishes a vested interest which could not be possibly affected by an act of Congress.

Mr. CARTER. I think the gentleman is correct about that; but still it would appear that this bill undertakes to do that very thing.

Mr. McCORMICK. The bill, in so far as it undertakes to do that, and certainly such language could not be read into the bill, would be absolutely unconstitutional. It would not be operative at all.

Mr. CARTER. Perhaps the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CHANDLER] can give us some light on this. He is familiar with it. What I wanted to know is, what becomes of the fellow who makes the second purchase under this bill, a valid purchase of lands in cases where the courts have declared the first deeds invalid?

Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma. Since talking with the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] this morning I had a talk by phone with the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Mr. Meritt, and he advises me that the bill takes care of that very situation; that it does not affect those already adjudicated by the court; that they have gone over this bill very thoroughly, and the matter which the gentleman complains of is taken care of in this bill. For your information I wish to say that I drew a bill which I introduced, and it was referred to the Department of the Interior. They objected to it because they claimed it did not take care of the situation that the gentleman speaks of.

I wrote another bill, and I introduced that, and they still complained of it. I went to the Interior Department, and after a number of conferences they corrected the bill and drew this particular one, so as to take care of the situation complained of, and they say that this will not apply to the cases the gentleman mentions.

Mr. CARTER. I am glad to have that assurance. I shall not object to it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11054) to validate certain deeds executed by members of the Five Civilized Tribes, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That any conveyance of allotted or inherited Indian lands by any member of the Five Civilized Tribes, or his or her heirs, which may have been heretofore approved by the Secretary of the Interior, or any order heretofore issued by the Secretary of the Interior authorizing the removal of restrictions from lands belonging to such Indians under and in accordance with, or purporting to be under and in accordance with, the acts of March 1, 1901 (31 Stat. L. p. 863), June 30, 1902 (32 Stat. L. p. 503), March 3, 1903 (32 Stat. L. p. 996), April 21, 1904 (33 Stat. L. p. 204), April 26, 1906 (34 Stat. L. p. 145), June 21, 1906 (34 Stat. L. p. 373), and May 27, 1908 (35 Stat. L. p. 312), or under any of said acts be, and the same are hereby, confirmed, approved, and declared valid from the date of such conveyance or order: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to confirm, approve, validate, or affect any conveyance, order, or action procured through fraud or duress.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

HOMESTEAD ENTRIES ON DIMINISHED COLVILLE INDIAN RESERVATION.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2440) extending the period for homestead entries on the south half of the Diminished Colville Indian Reservation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 2440) extending the period for homestead entries on the south half of the Diminished Colville Indian Reservation.

Be it enacted, etc., That the period provided by law for the filing of homestead entries upon the lands of the south half of the Diminished Colville Indian Reservation in the State of Washington, as provided in the act of Congress approved March 22, 1906, be, and is hereby, extended for a period of five years from and after the 4th day of September, 1921.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SUMMERS of Washington, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

REPORT OF CONDITION OF NATIONAL BANKS.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 8996) to amend paragraph 440, section 5211, act June 3, 1864.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask what has occurred that seemed to make it necessary to lessen the number of examinations of banking institutions under the jurisdiction of the Comptroller of the Currency?

Mr. LAWRENCE. Mr. Speaker, so far as I know, nothing in particular has occurred, but the call for five examinations a year we consider absolutely unnecessary, and so does the comptroller. Most of the State banks and trust companies have only two statements a year to make, and the national banks also have two examinations a year, and three statements are provided for in this bill; also as many additional statements as the Comptroller of the Currency may see fit to call for.

Mr. WALSH. Well, they have been operating under this law for a great many years, and it has worked satisfactorily, has it not?

Mr. LAWRENCE. Yes.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. LAWRENCE. Yes.

Mr. McFADDEN. To further elucidate what the gentleman has already said in regard to that, I would say that under the present system of examination of the banks there has been a considerable charge. The directors of the banks are now directed to appoint committees to audit their books semiannually, and certified accountants are called in to do this work. And the two examinations called for by the comptroller are continuing, and the additional work which the compilation of these various reports, now that there are so many minute details to be cared for in the officer of the Comptroller of the Currency, requires an unusual amount of labor and work to continue, work which is practically useless.

Mr. WALSH. That excuse might serve for eliminating all examinations. Because somebody gets tired going over columns of figures and poring over reports down here in the comptroller's office it should not be very persuasive as to why we should reduce or eliminate the examinations. This is for the protection of the public interests, as I understand it.

Mr. McFADDEN. I will say to the gentleman in that connection that the public interests are being cared for when you consider first that two examinations by national-bank examiners are made annually, and under the present procedure of the past administration, when six annual reports were made out by banks and published, and in addition the examination and reports by directors twice a year, certainly cares in an elaborate way for the public interests.

There is no reason why a bank should continue to make those elaborate reports every two months in addition to all the other examinations which are made. It is a burden not only on the bank itself but is an additional expense to the banks as well, as in the work of the comptroller's office.

Mr. LAWRENCE. And perhaps will result in an increase in the comptroller's office unless something is done along this line.

Mr. WALSH. If we lessen their duties, they will need more help. That is the experience in most departments. However, I withdraw my reservation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I renew the reservation. I have always considered that the published reports that are issued from time to time are valuable to the public. I remember that when Comptroller of the Currency John Skelton Williams was in office he did burden the banks with requirements for additional information. Whether or not it was of value I do not know. It is not obligatory upon the present comptroller to continue the call for the varied information if it is not desired. I have read the report very carefully, and there is nothing in it that convinces me that this is for the benefit of the public. It may result in not requiring so many clerks here in the comptroller's office, but what of the public? The public should know from time to time as to the condition of their banks. The public does not survey these compiled returns from the Comptroller of the Currency. What objection is there to calling upon the banks at least five times a year for a report of the condition of their financial affairs?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will say to the gentleman that this was very carefully considered by the Federal Reserve Board and the Comptroller of the Currency. And there is nothing in this law to prevent the comptroller from asking for additional reports.

Mr. STAFFORD. Nothing to prevent the comptroller from asking a bank for additional reports, but as soon as the comptroller should ask a bank for a special report, as under existing law, and which is continued in this bill, it would cast suspicion as to the safety of the bank.

Mr. LAWRENCE. The comptroller can call for five of these regular statements per annum, if he wants to, under this act.

Mr. STAFFORD. But the practice has been that he has called for only five.

Mr. LAWRENCE. The practice has been that he is calling——

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not see wherein there can be any objection from sound banks making a full disclosure as to their financial stability, and have it advertised in the papers, so that the citizens of the community may know the condition of the banks.

Mr. McFADDEN. There is no attempt, I will say to the gentleman, on the part of the banks to avoid giving the public all the information it should have concerning the condition of the banks. The banks outside of this do furnish the public with the results of examinations by committees frequently and by the reports of certified accountants.

Mr. STAFFORD. The only reports that the banks furnish to the public are those which from time to time are furnished to the Comptroller of the Currency. They are posted in the banks and given broadcast circulation.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. I think the gentleman has possibly overlooked this, that very rarely has there ever been anything in the way of the general reports that all banks make that disclosed any fraud in banks that subsequently failed. Generally what has been discovered has been from special examinations and special reports. Now, if you have three general reports for all the banks of the United States in a year, which are published in the papers of the communities where the banks are located, that apprises the depositors in a general way and in a specific and detailed way as to what the bank officials claim is their condition. But the real protection to the depositor and the stockholder is that examination which is conducted in the nature of a special examination, when the examiner drops in without the bookkeepers knowing anything about it, and takes charge of the books. My observation has been that the public reports are not worth a continental, except to gum up the files of the comptroller's office and possibly to advertise the banks.

Mr. STAFFORD. That argument should have been made to the last Comptroller of the Currency, who increased the number of reports from five to six.

Mr. WINGO. This does not cover that proposition. The practice that you refer to ought to cause you to support this bill. The real objection is that the banks are put to the expense and trouble of making so many unnecessary reports. I do not think that we ought to compel the banks to make any reports except such as are really necessary to the office of the Comptroller of the Currency and the public concerning their affairs, and if there is anything in the published report showing that that published report is false or colored in any way, then the comptroller may call for a special report in detail, or he will put a bank examiner on the train without the bank having any notice and have him walk into the bank in the morning and take charge and make an investigation. They frequently do that. My observation as a bank director and as a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency is that the minute examination that is entered upon and conducted without notice is the only real protection that the stockholders and the depositors have, and these other examinations just lead to a lot of useless piling up of records. I think two reports would be sufficient, with authority to the comptroller's office to go in at all times and make a special examination.

Mr. McFADDEN. I hope the gentleman from Wisconsin will not object to the present consideration of this bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. The burden of the gentleman's argument for passing this bill is to relieve the Comptroller of the Currency of the clerical burden of compiling all these reports.

Mr. McFADDEN. They are clearly unnecessary, as has been stated.

Mr. STAFFORD. What burden is it upon the local banks to prepare two more reports in a year? I know from actual experience and observation that these reports are of value to the depositor. They wish to know the condition of the banks. They wish to know how much money they have received as an aid from the Federal Reserve Board and the like, and a sound bank has no objection to raise against the publication of these reports. The public is entitled to know. Now, you propose to cut them down from six to three. That is going pretty fast.

Mr. APPLEBY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. APPLEBY. The real argument in favor of this bill is, the greater the time allowed the greater the probability of safety; that is, if you have three instead of five examinations, the bank officials will not know when the examiners are coming.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is in the discretion of the comptroller to call for these reports at any time, and he calls for them so that the banks may be taken unawares, when the banks have not the opportunity to cover up their affairs. Cutting down the number of examinations from six to three is going altogether too fast if you are going to consider the interests of the public. Of course, if you consider only the banks you can do away with examinations entirely, and rest upon the examination of the special examiners. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the next one.

SUCCESSION TO CORPORATE POWERS OF BANKING ASSOCIATIONS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 9527) to amend section 5136, Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to corporate powers of associations, so as to provide succession thereof until dissolved, and to apply said section as so amended to all national banking associations.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LONDON. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the next bill.

EXTENSION OF UNITED STATES BOTANIC GARDEN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the resolution (H. J. Res. 298) authorizing the transfer to the jurisdiction of the Joint Committee on the Library of certain reservations in the District of Columbia for use in connection with the Botanic Garden.

The title of the resolution was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, in the absence of my colleague, Mr. LUCE, I will say he is very much interested in this matter, and he is unavoidably detained. I ask unanimous consent that this resolution be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that this resolution be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this resolution is a matter of some importance, for this reason: The Botanic Garden is crowded for room, not only on account of the removal of the hothouses but——

Mr. WALSH. If the gentleman does not care to have it passed over without prejudice——

Mr. LANGLEY. I wanted to ask the gentleman if he felt compelled to object to this?

Mr. WALSH. I would, for this reason: I know that this matter is rather important, but my colleague particularly asked me if I would do this, and asked to have it passed without prejudice.

Mr. LANGLEY. And he is absent.

Mr. WALSH. He has one or two matters with reference to this, and it is going to the committee of which he is a member, and I feel that perhaps it is a reasonable request for him to make.

Mr. LANGLEY. I understand the gentleman's position; but this matter has been pending a month. It was passed over two weeks ago. The plants from the Botanic Garden are being moved out of the grounds where they are constructing the Gallinger Hospital, and there is no room to locate these plants permanently. There is no objection to this proposition so far as I know. Colonel Sherrill, who is in charge of public buildings and grounds, and the Senate Library Committee and the House Library Committee, the District Commissioners, the District engineer, and everybody concerned, as far as I know, have agreed that this is a proper measure to be enacted. The Senate passed it unanimously more than a month ago, and there is that urgency existing. I can say to the gentleman that personally I have remained over here and changed some engagements that I had in order to be here to-day with the understanding that it would be taken up. I spoke to the Speaker about it, and understand his embarrassment in the matter. Of course, if the Speaker can not recognize me to move to suspend the rules, and if the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] makes the objection which he promised his colleague to make, I am helpless in the matter.

Mr. WALSH. I stated to my colleague that I would ask to have the matter passed without prejudice.

Mr. LANGLEY. The trouble is I am afraid I can not be here two weeks from now, and I am very anxious to be here when the matter is considered.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, what is the urgency of considering this matter to-day or even a month hence? Twelve years ago the transfer of the Botanic Garden from its present site out to Rock Creek Park was favored. The bill passed the House, but it met with the violent opposition of one Senator, who was more responsible than anyone else for blocking its transfer.

Mr. LANGLEY. That involved the purchase of private property, did it not?

Mr. STAFFORD. No; it did not, as I recall.

Mr. LANGLEY. It involved the removal of the Botanic Garden from its present site.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] has given very careful consideration to the proposed change of the site of the Botanic Garden. Everyone who has studied the question realizes that this is not the proper site for a permanent Botanic Garden if we are to have a real Botanic Garden.

Mr. LANGLEY. I do not think the gentleman is correct. I for one do not agree with his statement.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am accepting the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] as a member of the Committee on the Library, which has had hearings on the question of the proposed location of the new Botanic Garden. I understand the gentleman from Massachusetts is only asking that the bill be passed over without prejudice. What is the urgent need of taking the bill up to-day?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I think it is rather urgent, because, among other things, the folks in charge of the Botanic Garden now have some pecan trees that have been presented to them which they desire to transplant. They desire to do some work on this ground, and it is rather important that we should transfer the jurisdiction. My own thought is that this does not settle the question of a botanic garden. If we are to have a botanic garden really worthy of the name, it must be transferred eventually to some very considerable area of land, because a proper botanic garden can not very well be maintained within the boundaries of the city.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. In just a moment. In the meantime these lands are now an eyesore. They are covered with débris. They are a storage and dumping ground. Nothing can be done to improve the existing conditions there until some legislation is had. I think Congress is under obligations to make some small expenditure there, and the only expenditure made will be such as is provided for by the Committee on Appropriations, of which the gentleman is a member, and I am sure he will see to it there are no improper or extravagant expenditures made.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have heard that persuasive appeal in times past when authorizations were asked here, but after the authorizations were made the Committee on Appropriations came in with the full amount, because I am a very minor and feeble member of the committee.

Mr. MONDELL. Personally I do not look upon this as the settlement of the question of a permanent Botanic Garden. It is a question of whether or no we shall somewhat improve and render tolerable the appearance and conditions of some areas adjacent to the Capitol, between the Capitol and the river, or whether we shall allow them to remain in their present state indefinitely, without any purpose as to their improvement or beautification. Whatever may ultimately be done with these areas, whatever the ultimate disposition may be, it occurs to me that for the time being they should be under the supervision of the Superintendent of the Botanic Garden, with the idea of cleaning them up somewhat, removing some of the rubbish at least, grassing them, planting some trees, doing those things and only those things which the Committee on Appropriations may provide for. That is all that can be done. It is wholly under the jurisdiction of the committee, and these lands ought not to be allowed to continue as an eyesore and nuisance right here under the shadow of the dome of the Capitol. This is the only present disposition we can make of them.

Mr. LANGLEY. The location of the Meade Memorial and the room taken by the Grant Memorial necessitates the removal of a lot of valuable plants and trees and things of that sort. The construction of the Gallinger Hospital necessitates the immediate removal of a number of plants and trees that the director has in those grounds. He is terribly crowded for space, and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the War Department, Colonel Sherrill, in charge of public buildings and grounds, are in favor of it, and also the Senate Committee on the Library; I did not know but what the entire House Committee on the Library was in favor of it until the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] indicated through his colleague [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. WALSH. Would the gentleman have any objection if I asked that this be passed over and return to it later?

Mr. LANGLEY. No.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I understand my colleague is expected to be here later, and I ask unanimous consent that it be temporarily passed over and return to it later.

Mr. LANGLEY. That arrangement is satisfactory to me.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH GOVERNMENT PROPERTY.

The next bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 6313) authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to grant a right of way for a public highway to the county of Skagit, Wash.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce is authorized to convey to the county of Skagit, Wash., a right of way for a public highway, not more than 50 feet wide, through the property of the United States in Skagit County, Wash., used as a fish-cultural station and hatchery: Provided, That such conveyance of right of way shall not be construed as affecting the right or title of the United States in said property or as in violation of any stipulation or condition in the conveyance of the same to the United States, and on the further condition that the land or right of way authorized to be conveyed hereunder shall be constructed and maintained as a highway free of any expense to the United States, and all work thereon shall be such as not to interfere with the operations and efficiency of said fish-cultural station, and in a manner satisfactory to the Secretary of Commerce: Provided further, That the right is hereby reserved to alter, amend, or repeal the provisions of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 1, line 7, after the word "hatchery," insert the following: "Such right of way being more particularly described as follows: All that portion of the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 15, township 35 north, range 7 east of the Willamette meridian, lying and being within lines 25 feet on each side of the following described center line, to wit: Beginning at a point on the east and west center line of said section 15, south 88° 59′ west, 730 feet, more or less, west of the east quarter corner of the above-said section 15, township 35 north, range 7 east, Willamette meridian; thence south 88° 59′ west along the east and west center line of the above said section 15, 75 feet; thence south 57° 49′ west, 340 feet; thence south 88° 0.07′ west, 250 feet, more or less, to the west line of the northwest quarter of the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of said section 15, township 35 north, range 7 east, Willamette meridian, containing seventy-one one-hundredths acres, more or less.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I notice that there is a clause providing that it shall not be construed as affecting the right of the United States in said property if it is in violation of any stipulation or condition in the conveyance of the same to the United States. When the Government received the deed to this property, was it of a restrictive character, so that it was limited to a certain use?

Mr. HADLEY. I will say that I never investigated the title of the United States. The text of this bill, barring the amendment and excepting the local designation, is that of a bill passed by Congress several years ago, I think in 1917. It was submitted to me by the Bureau of Fisheries when I took the matter up with them as to the necessity for the legislation as a form by way of precedent which had been employed in the State of Tennessee. I merely adopted that text and applied it to the local situation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HADLEY, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

TOMBIGBEE RIVER.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill H. R. 4898, a bill to declare the Tombigbee River nonnavigable from its source to its intersection with the boundary line between the counties of Itawamba and Monroe.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, I notice that the gentleman who reported the bill is not here, and I notice also that the War Department reports unfavorably on the bill. I wonder if the gentleman would object to having the matter passed over without prejudice?

Mr. RANKIN. I have no particular objection. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. JOHNSON], who reported the bill, is not here at present, but I think I can explain away all the objections that the War Department has offered.

Mr. WALSH. Possibly. The War Department states that it does not know why the legislation is necessary unless it is to dispense with the necessity of coming to the Chief of Engineers and having the plans approved by him. It would seem that this stream, of which we have heard considerable in the past of its great beauty—and I think it is an important stream in that section of the country—ought not to be made an exception of as far as construction is concerned.

Mr. RANKIN. The object of this legislation is to enable the people who own the land along this stream to organize a drainage district, float bonds, and cut a canal so as to drain their lands and put them in cultivation. The War Department seems to be under the impression that we want to build bridges across the river. Nothing of the kind; we could get permission to build the bridges, but it is practically impossible to organize a drainage district, float bonds, and do this drainage work as long as the river is technically navigable. That is all it is now, that part near its source.

Mr. WALSH. If the gentleman will permit, if legislation was secured permitting this contemplated work to be done with the approval of the Chief of Engineers, that would still preserve the navigability of the river for other purposes, and it would seem to me to be of sufficient indication of Federal approval to assist in the flotation of the bonds and other securities.

Mr. RANKIN. Evidently the gentleman is not familiar with the routine that is necessary to go through in order to organize a drainage district.

Mr. WALSH. No; I am not.

Mr. RANKIN. If that were practical, we would be more than glad to do it, but if this legislation, or some similar legislation, is not put into effect the river will never be drained in that way.

In the first place, it is a very hard matter to get all of the people who own land along a stream to go into one of these drainage districts, and after you have gone through that and have thrashed it all out and have got them in the notion of going through with it you have still to sell the bonds, and they must be sent to a bonding house and examined and approved by an attorney, who must be assured from the record that there will be no hitch whatever in completing the project. Now, you can not have that assurance so long as an Army engineer has the right to come in and dictate or control the construction of the canal. The gentleman will see from the report there that the river is at low water from three-tenths of a foot to a foot and a half deep, and that there are 79 gravel bars along that part of the stream covered by this bill.

Mr. WALSH. Will this in any way affect or interfere with the use of that part of the river for which we have heretofore made appropriations in the river and harbor act?

Mr. RANKIN. The only use that has been made of that part of the river in recent years is to float timber down it. This will not interfere with that.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement of the gentleman and the information that he has given, he being very familiar with the project, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk reported the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Tombigbee River from its source to its intersection with the boundary line between the counties of Itawamba and Monroe, in the State of Mississippi, is hereby declared to be not a navigable water of the United States within the meaning of the laws enacted by the Congress for the preservation and protection of such waters.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. With reference to the phraseology of the bill in line 6 I notice the language "not a navigable water." Is that the language used in the act relating to navigable waters?

Mr. RANKIN. I am not sure as to that. I think my original bill stated it "not a nivigable stream." Possibly that amendment was made by the committee.

Mr. WALSH. I think if it read "is not navigable water of the United States" it would be preferable. Has the gentleman any objection to striking out the article "a" before the word "navigable."

Mr. RANKIN. I have not.

Mr. WALSH. Then, Mr. Speaker, I offer that as an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. WALSH: Page 1, line 6, before the word "navigable," strike out the article "a."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RANKIN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CONSTRUCTION OF RURAL POST ROADS.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 11131) to authorize the appropriation of additional sums for Federal aid in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes, which I send to the desk.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were closed and the Sergeant at Arms directed to notify absentees.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved June 11, 1916, and all acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the following additional sums, all such sums to be expended in accordance with the provisions of such act:

The sum of $65,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923.

The sum of $75,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924.

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of section 23 of the Federal highway act, approved November 9, 1921, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for forest roads and trails, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the following additional sum, to be available until expended, in accordance with the provisions of said section 23: The sum of $6,500,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924.

SEC. 3. That for the purposes of this act and of the acts heretofore making appropriations to aid the States in the construction of rural post roads the term "bridges" includes railroad grade separations, whether by means of overhead or underpass crossings.

SEC. 4. That if any State, for a period of one year from the date the Secretary of Agriculture approves or has heretofore approved a road project, shall fail to put under contract such road project, the Secretary of Agriculture may require the said State to submit one or more projects to replace the said project; and if the said State shall fail to submit such other projects within the time set by the Secretary of Agriculture for the State to act, the Secretary of Agriculture may order the sum of money allotted to the said road project returned to the general road fund, and he shall then reapportion said sum of money among all the States as provided by the Federal highway act and all amendments thereto.

SEC. 5. That section 5 of the act entitled "An act to provide appropriations for the Post Office Department, and for other purposes," approved February 28, 1919, is hereby amended to read as follows: "That the act entitled 'An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes,' approved July 11, 1916, is hereby amended to provide that the term 'rural post roads,' as used in section 2 of said act, shall be construed to mean any public road, a major portion of which is now used, or can be used, or forms a connecting link not to exceed 10 miles in length of any road or roads now or hereafter used for the transportation of United States mails, excluding every street and road in a place having a population, as shown by the latest available Federal census, of 2,500 or more, except that portion of any such street or road along which the houses average more than 200 feet apart: Provided, That section 6 of said act be further amended so that payments which the Secretary of Agriculture shall make from sums appropriated under the provisions of this act or any act amendatory thereof or supplemental thereto for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, shall not exceed $12,500 per mile, exclusive of the cost of bridges of more than 20 feet of clear span: Provided further, That the payments which the Secretary shall make from sums appropriated under the provisions of this act or any act amendatory thereof or supplemental thereto, after the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, shall not exceed $10,000 per mile, exclusive of the cost of bridges of more than 20 feet of clear span: Provided further, That the limitation of payments herein provided shall apply to the public-land States, except that the same is hereby increased in proportion to the increased percentage of Federal aid authorized by section 11 of the act entitled 'An act to amend the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes,"' approved November 9, 1921."

SEC. 6. That section 24 of the act entitled "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes,'" approved November 9, 1921, is amended to read as follows: "That in any State where the existing constitution or laws will not permit the State to provide revenues for the construction, reconstruction, or maintenance of highways, the Secretary of Agriculture shall continue to approve projects for said State until five years after November 9, 1921, if he shall find that said State has complied with the provisions of this act in so far as its existing constitution and laws will permit."

SEC. 7. That if any officer, agent, or employee of the United States, or any officer, agent, or employee of any State or Territory, or any person, association, firm, or corporation or any officer or agent of any person, association, firm, or corporation shall knowingly make any false statement, false representation, or false report as to the character, quality, quantity, or cost of the material used or to be used, or the quantity or quality of the work performed or to be performed, or the cost thereof in connection with the submission of plans, maps, specifications, contracts, or costs of construction of any project submitted for approval to the Secretary of Agriculture under the provisions of the Federal highway act, or shall knowingly make any false statement, false representation, or false report or claim for work or materials for the construction of any project approved by the Secretary of Agriculture under said Federal highway act and all amendments thereto, or shall knowingly make any false statement or false representation in any report required to be made under said Federal highway act or acts supplementary thereto with the intent to defraud the United States shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by imprisonment not to exceed five years or by a fine not to exceed $10,000, or by both fine and imprisonment within said limits.

SEC. 8. That if any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, shall be held invalid, the validity of the remainder of the act and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 9. That all acts or parts of acts in any way inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Ohio opposed to the bill?

Mr. BEGG. I am.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has conferred with both gentlemen. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Ohio is opposed to the whole bill in principle, and that the gentleman from Arizona is opposed to a portion of the bill. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from Ohio to 20 minutes.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, since about last December there have been introduced in the Good Roads Committee about 29 bills carrying different amounts on account of proposed road appropriation. Those bills carried amounts from $500,000,000 to $250,000,000, varying in amounts as written. Finally, after a conference with the committee and with several others who were much interested in the road question, it was finally decided to hold a series of meetings and hearings, and on March 3 we commenced a series of hearings which lasted until March 30. In the meantime there was a variety of amendments offered to the bill, and finally we decided that it was impossible to pass a five-year program with $100,000,000 a year for each year, and after considerable debate it was decided to lower the limit to three years' appropriation, if possible, and not to exceed a gross amount of $150,000,000 for the three years. I will say that in all of the bills which were introduced and referred to the Roads Committee there was no question of reducing the Government participation. There was found to be quite an insistent demand that the proposed amount of Federal aid appropriation be liberally cut and reduced to the former amount carried in the organic bill, which was $10,000 per mile. For quite a time we considered putting the amount at $15,000 per mile and again to $12,500 per mile for the three years. Then we decided that a two-year program was all that we should pass at this time, and we sought to make the amount $12,500 per mile for the two years' program. We finally decided on $12,500 per mile for the first year of the two-year program and $10,000 per mile thereafter. Now, as a matter of fact, with the reduction of expense in road construction and the fact that $12,500 per mile, if met with 50 per cent from the States, or rather 100 per cent of that amount from the States, it would provide a total of $25,000 per mile for completed construction. This bill does not seek to interfere with the money already in the hands of the Agricultural Department, some $180,000,000, and for 1923 and 1924 these rates would remain in force if this bill is passed by the House.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DUNN. I will.

Mr. BARKLEY. As to this $180,000,000, which the gentleman says is now available, that is not in such condition that it can be distributed and apportioned among the States, is it?

Mr. DUNN. No; it has been allotted, as it is called.

Mr. BARKLEY. But some of the States have not used their allotment, and it is still available for those States?

Mr. DUNN. I suppose they can use that on the $20,000 a mile basis.

Mr. BARKLEY. Can the gentleman inform the House what average amount has been expended during the last two or three years per mile in building Federal-aided roads?

Mr. DUNN. I understand the average is $20,000 per mile.

Mr. BARKLEY. What is the average per mile of expenditure to build hard-surface roads?

Mr. DUNN. It varies in different States. The gentleman means cement roads?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; concrete and cement outside the ordinary gravel road that is built.

Mr. DUNN. I have heard some have been reconstructed at $27,000 a mile, and that others reach as high as $62,000 a mile for entirely new construction.

Mr. LAYTON. And some as high as $80,000 a mile.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the average of $20,000 consist of all the roads that are built by Federal aid in the United States, including those built of gravel or loose stone and those built with cement or concrete?

Mr. DUNN. No; I think not. I do not understand that is the case. I think it is a better class of roads, or certain percentage of the roads, which are called Federal-aid roads.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does this limitation which the committee has made in this bill for per mile of road construction meet with the approval of the Road Department here in the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. DUNN. I can not say definitely, but I think it does.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DUNN. I have not much time at my disposal.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. The bituminous concrete is $31,400, and for the Portland cement concrete it is $36,075 on an average all over the country.

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman yield just for a moment?

Mr. DUNN. Just for one question.

Mr. PADGETT. Section 1, page 1, line 6, you will notice the act is referred to as approved June 11, 1916, and in section 5 the same act is quoted as being approved July 11, 1916, in line 11, page 3. I want to ask if that is not a misprint, and if the gentleman should not correct it by unanimous consent before putting the bill on its passage?

And June 11, 1916, I understand, is the correct date. And in line 11, section 5, page 3, it says the same act "approved July 11, 1916."

Mr. DUNN. "July" should be "June"?

Mr. PADGETT. Had you not better ask unanimous consent to make that June 11, 1916, before you put the bill on its passage?

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make the correction. The word "July," in line 11, page 3, should be changed to "June."

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WALSH in the chair). Pending the motion for suspending the rules and passing the bill, the gentleman from New York [Mr. DUNN] asks unanimous consent that, on page 3, the word "July," in line 11, be changed to "June." Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I understood the gentleman to say that the hearings developed that the average cost in the construction of these roads has been about $20,000 a mile. What I wanted to ask the gentleman is, Was it the judgment of the committee after the hearings that material and labor had so decreased now that the same character of roads could be built at an average of $12,500 per mile for the year 1923?

Mr. DUNN. I merely wish to say in presenting this bill that we handled that matter very thoroughly, and, of course, the remedy and responsibility rests with the House. This is the only bill we thought it was wise to offer at this time.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I was wondering how the committee arrived at this amount.

Mr. DENISON. May I ask one question in respect to the bill?

Mr. DUNN. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. This limitation of $10,000 a mile will result in the Government contributing different amounts in the different States for the construction of roads, will it not? In other words, in one State the Government will contribute, perhaps, half the cost of the roads, whereas in other States it will not contribute more than one-third?

Mr. DUNN. According to the character of the roads.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I want to say that in my judgment this bill is at least 100 per cent better than the previous bill that permitted the Federal Government to give $20,000 a mile for highway construction. If the bill were to cut from $12,500 and $10,000 for the years 1923 and 1924 to about $5,000 and $4,000 for Federal assistance for highway construction it would not be nearly so obnoxious as it is at the present time.

Mr. LANGLEY. Obnoxious to whom?

Mr. BEGG. The gentleman asks, obnoxious to whom? I will say obnoxious to the people who are required to pay the Federal taxes, and that is almost everyone in the gentleman's State as well as all other States. [Applause.]

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. I can not yield until I get through, and then I will yield to anybody who wants to ask me a question.

In other words, I can not refrain from calling attention to the direction and tendency of legislation at the present time. You are asking the Federal Government to assume control and responsibility for everything, and then howling about the autocracy of government. Under the present road law you have made the Secretary of Agriculture an autocrat. He decides where you build a road, how wide it is to be, of what kind of material, and unless you subvert the wishes of the State to the autocracy of the Federal highway department, he has the authority under this bill to tax your State and take your money and build roads in other States. There never was a more autocratic power conferred on a Federal official; not even the President has the same power to nullify and stultify the wishes of a State. You talk of home rule and the right of the people to decide whether or not they are to be taxed. This bill nullifies that guaranty of the Constitution. The constitution of my State—Ohio—says that not even the State legislative body—which is certainly nearer to the people than the United States Congress—not even they can levy a tax for the purpose of building roads without first submitting the proposition to the people to be taxed. Yet by this law you tax the people of my State, already overburdened, and then say to them that unless they turn around and tax themselves twice as much more for their own help and twice as much more than that for some other State they will not even get the taxes collected by you for the purpose of building roads.

I hope I am wrong in my conclusions, but the only ultimate end I can see to that principle of government, if established in the national legislative body, is that there will be a revolt of the taxpayers in this country against the terrible burdens you are laying on them, always under some deceptive guise. You have already asked the Federal Government to assume the responsibility for the health of the American people, and the most ardent advocates of that program have gone so far as to state in printed matter that it was the duty of the United States to provide every one of its citizens with a hospital bed and doctor. This I deny. I not only deny it but call your attention to the fact that that is removing from the individual the responsibility for his own welfare, and such an act is on a par with the doctrine of Lenin and Trotski. It is paternalistic to the nth degree. It is revolting to the doctrines of the Constitution of the United States.

We have already surrendered 90 per cent of the police powers of the State to the Federal Government, and have nationalized our local police force. We have nationalized our transportation system. There are those—and the members are legion—who would have us nationalize our educational system. Now, according to the power of reasoning given me, if we are to nationalize the highways, the railroads, the education, the health, and the police, it is only a very short step to nationalize industry, and the sad part about the whole story is that every time the Federal Government has undertaken to nationalize any of these their usefulness has been curtailed, their efficiency lessened, and the cost to the consumer increased, and if we continue to go in the same direction in a legislative way as we have in the past 10 years for the next 10 or 20 years, I warn you men in this House that you will have destroyed the principles of a representative government and established an autocracy in every department.

Every activity of the human being will be supervised and controlled and regulated by some functionary in the Government called a bureau chief. As it is to-day it is hard to find a group or a community relying on their own ingenuity and inventive genius for solving the problems affecting their locality; but on the contrary, they are all getting up petitions and appealing to Congress to pass some law to do for them that which they should do for themselves.

This tendency breeds unrest, dissatisfaction, agitation, and discontent. And let me say that no nation ever existed after a majority of its people became dissatisfied with its workings. A few serious debates by men unafraid might have a sobering influence. Mob psychology seems to be the controlling factor in much of our legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to be classed as a pessimist, because I am not. I believe in our form of government and in the American people and their good sense, but I fear the price we will ultimately have to pay for our thoughtless folly. In the early days when a political unit like the State or county wanted a road, how did they get it? They taxed themselves and built it. If the neighboring State or neighboring county chose to ride in mud, that was their own business, but to-day the people in a county or State have no control over the kind of a road to be built, or where it will be built under Federal construction, but must abide by the decision of some politician appointed to the position by whomsoever happens to be the President.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. I am sorry that I can not yield now.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. I can not yield. I would like to yield to the floor leader, but I can not.

Time will not permit a discussion of that particular trend of affairs, and I want to get down to the fundamental principles. The only difference between the United States of America and other Governments of civilized people in the past thousand years has been that the people everywhere lived for the Government, while in the United States, a country which has produced progress, the Government existed for the benefit of the people, and responsibility has rested squarely on the shoulders of every man as to his own welfare. When men began to live in groups, the responsibility rested upon the group. But we have been getting away from that every time we have passed a law. And I want to say again that unless we begin to vote our convictions in this House and buck up our courage, I hate to think of what will happen in the next 25 years.

There has never been a government fall since the dawn of history that did not fall because of oppressive taxation. I read in the New York Times last week an excoriation of the Senate in its consideration of the bonus bill, and they pointed their finger to Rome and to Greece and to other ancient countries, and then added, "Remember, men, there was a Boston tea party once held over the question of taxation."

I want to ask you men if you have any notion of the amount of taxes now on the American people? When you figure your Federal tax, your State tax, your municipal and city tax, you find that about half of the income of a man has gone into the support of his Government, and the worst part is he does not get his money's worth. If I had my way, if I were powerful enough to do it, I would pass an amendment to the Constitution taking away the right of Congress to levy a direct tax on the States in all times save war times. That would stop some of this wild stampede to spend money raised by taxation to pay the salaries of the great army of Government supervisors and regulators of human activities, which are none of the Government's responsibility or business.

The Treasury Department says that the United States Government under Republican administration faces a deficit of half a billion or more dollars. This bill will carry, directly and indirectly, an appropriation of almost half a billion dollars more, because the fact that we do not appropriate it here does not keep the States from being compelled to appropriate it, because we put a penalty clause in here to compel them to do it, and the States now, the farms in this country, are bonded for nearly a billion dollars for highways that you have already built. I want to ask you again, where are you going to stop?

Now, I want to give you a few figures of what it is going to cost my State under this bill. I put some figures in the RECORD a while ago on the other bill, which I think will furnish interesting reading. Of course, if you come from a State that gets its road taxes from outside its soil or its industries, you may form one opinion, but if a man comes from a great tax-paying State I surmise he would be in the same position that I am.

I question the statement that Federal roads can be built for $20,000 a mile in face of the bids submitted for Ohio roads up to May 27, 1921. I find that the average cost of the mono-brick road per mile was $58,238; that the average cost per mile of the bituminous slag was $74,354; of the sheet asphalt, $21,115; and of the bituminous concrete, $47,223. It is my judgment that there has not been a mile of brick or concrete road built in Ohio under Federal jurisdiction since the year 1914 for any such figure as $20,000 per mile. The following table will show the average cost per mile of the different kinds of roads in Ohio for 1919 and 1920:

Kind of road.	Average cost in 1919.	Average cost in 1920.
Waterbound macadam	$13,241.20	$20,728.75
Bituminous macadam	20,313.92	33,130.90
Concrete	32,194.83	47,450.90
Brick	41,835.05	59,012.16

Now, inasmuch as most of the Federal highways in Ohio are built of brick and concrete, one can readily see that if the same were true throughout the United States this $140,000,000 would amount to an additional tax burden of about $400,000,000 that would have to be assessed by the States in order to get the $140,000,000 of Federal money, making a total of over half a billion dollars this bill really levies in taxation either directly or indirectly.

Mr. LAYTON. What width are the roads?

Mr. BEGG. I do not know what width. I think it is a 16-foot road.

Mr. LAYTON. It will cost $80,000 a mile in my State.

Mr. BEGG. Right now in Ohio the whole road-building program has been suspended waiting for Washington to act, to determine whether the highway commissioner, who is the Secretary of Agriculture, shall refuse to O. K. the roads they want to build in Ohio. I ask you, Is there anything in the Constitution of the United States that says it is according to republican principles laid by those men who framed this Constitution that says we ought to take the right away from the people back home to decide whether or not they will have a brick highway of 14 or 18 or 20 foot width, or whatever it may be?

Now, I want to came back to the figures. Supposing we could build a mile of Federal highway for $25,000. That is the contract price. I do not care what the material is. I am going to show you what it will cost Ohio and the other big tax-paying States in the Union; that is, under the supposition that every State will get a mile of road. If every State gets a mile and the contractors bid $25,000 a mile, here is what it will cost Ohio: The contract price is $25,000. The amount that the State government will receive under this bill from the Federal Government is $12,500, one-fourteenth of which came from the State itself; one-fourteenth is $900. How do I figure that? Why, I subtract the amount that Ohio pays herself into that Federal-aid fund, or $900, that comes back to her, and that makes the Ohio State aid per mile $11,600, but all the other 47 States each get $12,500 per mile, or a total of forty-seven times $12,500, which is $587,500. Ohio pays one-fourteenth of that, or $41,968, which must be added to her cost of $25,000 contract price, less $11,600 Federal aid, which makes Ohio's $25,000 road cost $55,368, but the taxpayers only get a $25,000 road.

Suppose we take the actual figures of road cost in Ohio instead of theoretical figures of $25,000 per mile. Let us take $40,000, which is a fair average, and suppose that Ohio would pay to the contractors $40,000 for a mile of Federal highway. The State of Ohio would receive $11,600 from the Federal Government, none of which comes from the taxpayers; but in order to get that $11,600 Federal aid the State is compelled to levy a tax of $41,968 on its citizens in order to assist the various other States in their road-building program. Now, if you will subtract the $11,600 from the $40,000 supposed cost, the road would cost Ohio $28,400; but in order to be fair you must add to that $28,400 the $41,968 which must be given away in order to get the $11,600, and you will find that every mile of $40,000 Federal highway built in Ohio costs the taxpayers of that State $70,368, or almost twice as much as it should.

If my colleagues in Congress believe in that kind of a principle, and unjust discrimination and taxation should be fastened on the American people at this time, when everybody is crying out against the enormous Federal taxes, of course they will indicate that belief by voting for a continuation of this proposition. I want some of my colleagues who vote to tax the Ohio citizen $70,368 for a $40,000 road to explain to me their mathematics. It is no justification to say that Ohio gets five or six million dollars a year for harbor facilities, and it is no justification to say that Ohio has to pay her share of the Army and Navy, and that Ohio has her share of the soldiers, because every State in the Union has its soldier pensions; and to those States which do not get any appropriation for harbor facilities it can be said that almost every one of them have had some kind of a reclamation scheme that has cost the Government more money than all the harbor development in Ohio. The statement made on the floor that Ohio got back all the money she paid into the Federal Treasury only serves to illustrate the carelessness with which some men make statements, as the actual figures compiled will show that the citizenship of Ohio does not get back 20 cents on the dollar. I would have no complaint to make if every State in the Union bore the same burden of taxation, but I do think it unfair to tax the citizenship of my State to build roads that are not needed for a military necessity or an economic development in some other Commonwealth than Ohio. You may call that position provincial if you will, but so long as reduction of the taxes is the prime interest of everybody and the aim of every man in public life I shall continue to try to get a dollar's worth of service for my people for every dollar I vote to put on them in the way of taxation.

Now let us look at New York and see what it costs her to build a $25,000 per mile road under Federal construction. By the same process of reasoning as was used in the case of Ohio, New York would get $9,400 from the Federal Government for her $25,000 mile of road, leaving the amount to be raised by local taxation at $15,600; but to get the $9,400 New York would have to tax her people $146,875 to give away to the other States in the Union for their $25,000 road, making New York's mile of road actually cost her taxpayers $162,475.

Suppose that the mile of road that New York builds costs $40,000 instead of $25,000. From $40,000 subtract the $9,400 Federal aid; that leaves $30,600. Add that to the amount she has to give away, $146,875, and you have the cost of the $40,000 mile of highway in New York at $177,475. I do not believe the taxpayers of the State of New York are willing to have their citizenship taxed at the rate of $177,475 per mile for a $40,000 mile of road in the face of the strenuous efforts that Governor Miller has made in the past two years to relieve the tax burden of the already oppressed people. I say again, of course, if there were any military or economic necessity for this the citizens of New York would respond without a murmur, but in times of peace and under the burdens resulting from a great war, I think they are justified in crying out against this added burden. The United States now has a debt of approximately $25,000,000,000. New York's share alone is around $6,000,000,000, which must be raised by taxation.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. I am sorry I can not.

Mr. DUNN. Has the gentleman considered how much they will save in the expense of the 47 different States by paying a less proportion?

Mr. BEGG. I have done that. I congratulate the chairman of the committee on this bill. It is 100 per cent better than the $20,000 a mile.

Let us take up the State of Pennsylvania. I do not know whether there are any Pennsylvanians here or not. I do not see them at this moment, although there are some scattered around.

Mr. ROSE. Here is one.

Mr. BEGG. Yes; you, Mr. ROSE, under this bill will pay $79,160 a mile for every mile of highway you build under Federal aid in this bill, and you will get only a $25,000 a mile road, but if you build a $40,000 per mile road it will cost your taxpayers $94,160 per mile.

Take Illinois. Every mile of $25,000 road you build in your State will cost your taxpayers $66,910 a mile, and if you build a $40,000 per mile road it will cost your taxpayers $81,910 per mile.

In Michigan a $25,000 mile road will cost the taxpayers $48,529, but if they build a $40,000 per mile road it will cost them $63,529 per mile.

In Massachusetts a $25,000 mile road costs the people of that State under Federal control $45,840, and a $40,000 mile road will cost $60,940.

How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has consumed 15 minutes.

Mr. BEGG. Just one minute more and then I will close. I simply call your attention to the fact that the Navy this year is going to cost practically the same as last year. The Army is putting out a propaganda to make it cost as much as it did last year. The soldiers will cost more next year and for the next five years than they have in the past, and that runs to half a billion dollars, and there is not a man in Congress who can make it any less. All these funds are on the constant increase. And yet we have the courage to come in here and put, directly and indirectly, another taxation of nearly half a billion dollars on the already overburdened taxpayers. [Applause.]

Mr. DUNN. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CABLE]. [Applause.]

Mr. CABLE. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the improvement of highways is for the general good of all. Federal aid not only stimulates the construction of the system of highways upon which it can be apportioned—that is, upon not to exceed 7 per cent of the total highway mileage of the State—but also causes and induces construction of good roads on the other 93 per cent of the highway mileage of each State. My good friend and colleague from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] voted against the last road bill. He, no doubt, intends to vote against this one. The Federal act of June 11, 1916, determines the method of apportioning Federal-aid money among the various States, yet since I have been here in the House my colleague has never offered one constructive suggestion on this feature of the law so as to change the method of apportionment. The Federal aid road act became a law on June 11, 1916. As a direct result 17 States, that had not established sufficiently equipped and adequate highway departments to obtain the benefits of the act, promptly did so. One year after the passage of the Federal act more constructive legislation was placed upon the State statute books than had ever before been enacted in a similar period in the history of the country. It is estimated that during the present fiscal year almost three times as much money will be expended in the construction and repair of public highways than was expended the year the Federal law was enacted, chiefly by reason of the impetus given to road construction under the Federal act.

The road-building business in the United States is the greatest construction enterprise in the whole world. During the present fiscal year it is estimated that $600,000,000 will be expended in the construction and repair of public roads. Of this amount 14 per cent will constitute the Federal Government's portion, while the balance will be raised by State and local taxes and assessments. The size of this great enterprise is best illustrated by the fact that in the years 1879 to 1883, inclusive, occurred the greatest development of our railway systems, when 40,000 miles of system were built, at a cost of $800,000,000.

The method of apportioning Federal aid money among the States is provided by law. My friend, so far as I know, has never suggested the introduction of a bill or an amendment offered on the floor of this House any different method of procedure. Not only is the expenditure of this money limited to the 7 per cent of the total highway mileage of the State, but under the present bill not more than $12,500 may be expended on any one mile of construction, exclusive of the cost of bridges, of not more than 20 feet of clear span, for the next fiscal year, and thereafter the amount is limited to $10,000 per mile, exclusive of such bridges. The money is apportioned by law in the following manner:

One-third in the ratio which the area of the State bears to the total area of all the States;

One-third in the ratio which the population of the State bears to the total population of all States, as shown by the last available Federal census; and

One-third in the ratio which the mileage of rural delivery routes and star routes in each State bear to the total mileage of rural delivery routes and star routes in all States at the close of the next proceeding fiscal year, as shown by the certificate of the Postmaster General.

The percentage of allotment, together with the amount of Federal aid apportioned to the various States from the year 1917 to the year 1922, is as follows:

The State, through its highway department, selects or designates the system of not more than 7 per cent of its highway mileage upon which Federal aid is apportioned, not to exceed three-sevenths of which shall be known as a primary system, and the balance—four-sevenths of the 7 per cent—what I might call "farm-to-market" roads.

The money that will be appropriated in this road bill for the next fiscal year would equal a tax of not to exceed 62 cents for each person in the United States for the entire fiscal year, beginning July 1, 1922, and ending June 30, 1923. Efficient rural mail service, better and quicker transportation of farm products to market, schools of easy access to the pupils, all are expedited by good roads. Progress and prosperity are found where transportation is best and easiest. It is worth the 62 cents a year to the people in Ohio and the other States to have the best of transportation facilities in the country.

However, it is not necessary to levy such a tax for the purpose of obtaining Federal aid for good roads. The manufacturers' excise tax, levied and collected this last year upon automobiles, trucks, motor cycles, tires, parts, and accessories is sufficient to take care of next year's Federal aid appropriation and have $50,000,000 to spare. This does not include the Federal tax upon passenger automobiles for hire.

The Federal aid money being expended this fiscal year amounts to 14 per cent of the total sum used in the construction and repair of highways. The expenditure of the other 86 per cent is stimulated and encouraged by the 14 per cent. Many good roads would not otherwise be built or repaired but for this Federal encouragement.

My colleague [Mr. BEGG] contends that the States having the heavy taxpayers do not receive their just proportion of Federal aid money. To the wealthy and to those who are raising the issue in their behalf, I would remind them that a good road improvement may be of a local nature, and at the same time be an integral part of a national system of highways that benefit all. In the great debate of 1830 in the United States Senate, Daniel Webster replied to Senator Hayne, of South Carolina, on the question, "What interest has South Carolina in a canal in Ohio?"

"If a canal appears to me to be of national importance or national magnitude," said Webster, "the power of the Government extends to the encouragement of works of that description.

"I look upon a road over the Allegheny, a canal around the falls of the Ohio, or a canal or railway from the Atlantic to the western waters as being objects large and extensive enough to be fairly said to be for the common benefit."

I also direct your attention to that great leader, Abraham Lincoln, when he rose in the House of Representatives in reply to the President's veto message against internal improvement by Federal aid:

If the Nation refuses to make improvements of the more general kind because their benefits may be somewhat local, a State may for the same reason refuse to make any improvement of a local nature because its benefits may be somewhat general. A State may well say to the Nation, "If you will do nothing for me, I will do nothing for you."

The State of Ohio receives the same percentage of Federal-aid money for roads as her basic products from the farm, forest, and mine compare to the entire production of all the States. My friend, who has just spoken against Federal aid for good roads, has failed to cite the source of the figures he used. The Secretary of Agriculture has prepared two statements showing the Federal revenues for the last fiscal year ended June 30, 1921, from the various States and the Federal expenditures so far as can be allocated to these various States. The money allotted to the various States does not equal the amount received, for the reason that our appropriation bills for the executive department of our Government, including huge Army and Navy appropriations, as well as the appropriations for the judicial and legislative branches of our Government, can not be said to be expended in any one State but throughout the United States for the benefit of all, and therefore the allocation being for all must be on a basis of population. The State of Ohio is only exceeded in population by New York, Pennsylvania, and Illinois, and therefore it must stand fourth in the benefits received from these various appropriations. These two charts or records show that the taxpayers of Ohio pay into the Federal Treasury 5.815 percentage of the total revenues of the Government, and in return received from such tax money 5.563 of the money allotted to the various States. It should be noted that Ohio stands first in the amount of pension money paid out by the Federal Government and expended within the State, even exceeding the State of New York, with twice the population, by more than $4,000,000. She stands fourth in the amount of money expended by the Post Office Department within the State, and sixth in the amount of money expended for rivers and harbors; and also sixth in the total amount of money that is specifically allocated and expended within the State. These two charts are as follows:

In order to determine whether a State receives its just proportion of money from the Federal Government, it is necessary to consider all the benefits that it receives, not only money for Federal aid of roads but also for pensions, internal improvements, waterways, as well as the benefits per capita of those national activities that are paid for by the Federal Government and used for the benefit of all. Ohio stands fourth in population. The citizens of Ohio can, therefore, be said to receive the fourth greatest benefits of any State of the Union in the expenditure of all money that can not be allocated to the various States.

The farmers of our country favor Federal appropriation to aid and stimulate the construction of good roads. At the national agricultural conference held in this city a resolution was passed on January 27, 1922, approving appropriation of Federal aid for road building, which said resolution is, in part, as follows:

> We approve the action of Congress in continuing Federal aid for the building of interstate, postal, and farm to market highways under the Department of Agriculture, and making appropriations therefor. We believe this policy to be equitable and constructive. We urge Congress to continue this policy for a definite period so that the States may plan adequate cooperation.

The American Farm Bureau Federation at its third annual meeting, held at Atlanta November 21 to 23 last year, went on record as favoring the principles of Federal aid in highway construction and the cooperation between the States and the Federal Government. The American Association of State Highway Officials at their meeting held December 28, 1921, at Omaha, Nebr., passed a resolution highly indorsing the action of Congress in adopting a policy of Federal aid for highways to be applied to a different system of highways as provided in the Federal highway act.

Transportation aids civilization. The country with the best system is the most prosperous and successful. Good highways are a means of better schools and higher standards of living; they are the lanes of commerce. Industry and development abound where transportation is the best. It is not only the production of goods that has made our Nation great, but the facility in the exchange between the various parts of the country.

Mr. DUNN. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Speaker, I strongly favor this bill carrying $140,000,000 for Federal aid in the construction of roads.

Some days ago the Senate passed a bill carrying $115,000,000 of Federal aid for roads for the next two years, beginning July 1, 1922. Some of the members of our Road Committee in the House and others urged our committee to agree to the Senate bill, but a number of the members of the Road Committee, including myself, felt that $115,000,000 for the next two years was not enough. We made a fight for $140,000,000, and a majority of our committee agreed to this increase, and we were able to get a favorable report to the House for this amount, so the bill now under consideration carries $140,000,000 for road aid instead of $115,000,000, as provided in the Senate bill. The Department of Roads here, as well as the representatives of the various road departments of the various States of the Union, advised us that $140,000,000 will take care of the road program for the next two years.

HEAVY PENALTIES FOR FRAUD.

If this bill becomes a law, the Federal Government will have provided something like $500,000,000 altogether to aid in the construction of roads. The States, counties, and other taxing districts have put up, and will put up, even a larger sum to match this Federal aid. Road building is one of the very great enterprises of the Nation, and it will continue to increase, both in importance and in the amount of money spent. Our people everywhere want good roads. They do not object to paying taxes for good roads if the money is honestly expended and they get a dollar's worth of value for every dollar of tax money expended.

There has been a great deal of fraud in connection with the building of public roads. Millions of dollars have been wasted or stolen. Frauds have been committed in many ways, in the making of false statements as to the character and quantity of material used, or as to the amount of labor and cost thereof. Up to this time the Federal Government has provided no law to punish grafters and other rogues for frauds committed in connection with the expenditure of Federal funds in the construction of roads. This bill provides a penalty in the way of a fine not to exceed $10,000, or imprisonment not to exceed five years, or for both fine and imprisonment in the discretion of the court and jury for any fraud committed by any officer or agent of the Federal Government, any officer or agent of the State or county government, or any officer or agent of any person, firm, or corporation in connection with the construction of any road where Federal funds are used. If any of these officers or agents make any false statement in the submission of maps, plans, or specifications or contracts, or in any claim or claims or charges for work, or in the kind or quality of materials used, or in the quantity of materials, or labor, or the cost thereof, they will be subject to indictment and prosecution in the Federal court. I consider this an important and forward step in our great road-building program. The taxpayers' money must be protected. The road money must go into roads and not into the pockets of grafters.

UNDERPASS AND OVERPASS CROSSINGS.

The Federal road department has adopted a rule, as I understand, that they will not approve for Federal aid any main-line road to cross a main-line railroad at grade; that is, hereafter all of the main-line public roads built with Federal aid must either cross under or cross above main-line railroads. Travel has become so great on these main-line roads that this is necessary for the protection of human life, so they say.

Too many people are being killed at railroad crossings where the road crosses at grade. Under the present Federal-aid road law the Federal Government can contribute to the building of bridges on Federal-aid roads, but it can not contribute to building the underpasses at railroad crossings. In our own State of Kentucky there will be a great number of underpasses and overpasses on these Federal-aid roads. This is true as to every other State. These underpasses or overpasses will cost as much as a bridge in many instances. If this bill becomes a law it will permit the Federal Government to put up one-half of the cost of these underpasses and overpasses on Federal-aid roads, just the same as it does now for the construction of bridges on a Federal-aid road. I think this a very important provision of this bill and should be adopted.

LESS WAR, BETTER HOMES AND SCHOOLS.

The World War cost in money and in destruction of property $338,000,000,000. About 9,000,000 men were killed and over 18,000,000 were wounded. Of these 1,000,000 or more have died since the war ended. Other millions were so badly wounded as to take them from the productive industries of the world and make them a charge upon their respective governments and the public. We lost hundreds of thousands of men on the battle field and by disease. The war cost us about $40,000,000,000. We still owe about $24,000,000,000 of this sum. We must pay every year about $1,000,000,000 interest on this debt. We are paying about $500,000,000 annually for compensation and insurance for the World War soldiers and their dependents. Perhaps we have not reached the peak in this expense, and it will continue at this sum or more for the next 20 years, and we will not see the end of it for the next 50 years.

The Civil War has been over nearly 60 years, but we paid last year something like $250,000,000 for pensions to the Civil War veterans and their dependents, and we did not have half as many men in the Civil War as we did in the World War. There are quite a number of Mexican War veterans and their dependents who are still on the pension roll, and quite a number of the widows and dependent children of the War of 1812 are still on the pension rolls. I am not complaining because we are paying pensions to these veterans and their dependents, but on the other hand, I have always supported measures for their relief and benefit. I am merely calling attention to these matters to show some of the evil effects and far-reaching effects of war.

Nearly ninety cents out of every dollar of the people's tax money is used to pay for wars that we have already had and making preparation for future wars. We use a little more than ten cents of every dollar of taxes to pay the great army of civil employees of the Government, pay for roads, education, agriculture, home economics, industrial training, and public health. The American people are wanting less of preparation for war and more preparation for peace. They want more good roads, good schools, good health, good farms, better industrial conditions, and better homes.

This body and the Senate passed a resolution concurring in the calling of the disarmament conference. It was held. The leading nations met with us, and we agreed to greatly reduce our naval armaments and agree to declare "A naval building holiday" for 10 years. The Senate has adopted the treaties made by the disarmament conference, and we feel confident that the other nations represented at this conference will likewise approve these treaties. All of the leading countries of the world are bankrupt. We have made these treaties of peace. There certainly now is no danger of war for many years to come. Anyhow, we have about 4,000,000 trained men in the United States who are veterans of the World War. We have a well trained and well organized National Guard of over 150,000 men.

I am one of those who voted to reduce our standing Army to about 122,000 men. In this way we can save the American taxpayers nearly $100,000,000 each year on the Army. I am one who also voted to reduce the Navy as provided in the disarmament treaty. I voted to provide every dollar to maintain the Navy as set forth in that treaty, but not a dollar more. This would save to the American taxpayers something like $200,000,000 per year. There is no reason why we should not save something like $250,000,000 to $300,000,000 per year on the Army and Navy, as compared with our expenditures heretofore on the Army and Navy. I know that some urge that we are in danger of being destroyed by some other nation. The history of the world is that no great nation was ever destroyed by forces without. A great nation is always destroyed by the forces within. This Republic will never be destroyed except through evil and sinister forces within our own borders. It means more for the real defense and perpetuity of this Nation to use more of our money in the development of a great system of highways; in the building up of our schools, farms, homes, and in making a righteous and patriotic citizenship, than it does to impose heavy taxes on our people for the construction of a great Navy and maintaining a large standing Army.

GREAT SYSTEM OF FEDERAL HIGHWAYS.

Under the bill that the Congress passed last year, and which I had the honor to have charge of in the House, and which became a law in November, 1921, there is provided a great system of interstate and intercounty highways embracing nearly 200,000 miles of Federal-aid roads. This system will penetrate every county of the Nation. Nearly 70,000 miles of this system has been built or is now under construction. When it is completed it will be one of the greatest factors in national defense that this country has ever provided. A first-class battleship now costs about $40,000,000. This sum put up for Federal aid and matched by a like sum from State aid would build 4,000 miles of pike road, at $20,000 per mile.

Four thousand miles of pike road would cover the system of highways laid out for the whole State of Kentucky by the Kentucky Legislature in March, 1920. These 4,000 miles of pike road would last for many years and would be of incalculable benefit, while the $40,000,000 battleship becomes obsolete, out of date, and worthless within a few years. We are astounded when we stop to consider the fact that if we had spent the $40,000,000,000 for roads instead of war, the Federal Government could have built 1,000,000 miles of pike road and paid $40,000 per mile. Kentucky would have received more than 20,000 miles of pike road at $40,000 per mile. This sum would have built a $40,000 per mile pike road on every main line and every crossroad in the United States. While I favor an adequate Navy and an adequate Army, yet I am insisting to-day and shall continue to insist upon building more roads, more schools, and less battleships. It is time for men to begin to think of the time spoken of by Isaiah the prophet, when swords shall be beaten into plowshares and spears into pruning hooks and nation shall not make war against nation any more. I am not a pacifist, but I do contend that all thoughtful men must realize the futility of war, and we must begin to think in terms of peace. President Harding has well said that great problems can be settled more justly and equitably around the conference table than in the hate and strife of the battle field.

PEACE AND PROGRESS POLICY.

At the beginning of this year there were more than 10,000,000 motor vehicles in this country and about 1,500,000 of these were motor trucks. About half of these motor vehicles are in the hands of the farmers of this country. The motor-truck transportation business is growing by leaps and bounds. In the year 1921 more than 6,000,000 head of cattle, hogs, sheep, and so forth, were transferred by trucks. Every other commodity is being transported by trucks. These are bringing the farmer and other producers of the country in quick connection with the consumer. This means progress and prosperity. I know of nothing we can do to promote the general prosperity of the country more than by encouraging the construction of good roads. Good roads must penetrate every section of the Union. Federal aid for roads must be considered an accepted policy of our Government. While there may be some few people in this country like the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] who still project themselves in the way of progress, yet this great country of ours is marching on in the direction of a great highway system. [Applause.] I do not insist upon great width for the highways through the rural sections. It is of more interest to the people of this country to have a good, hard-surfaced road of moderate width all the way than to have a road 18 or 20 feet wide only half of the way. I think this is a good bill, and we should pass it and carry forward the road policy of this country. [Applause.]

Mr. HAWES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. HAWES. Is this bill in this form approved by the Federal highway department or State highway department of any State in the Union?

Mr. ROBSION. I certainly think it is.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN].

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arizona asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, it may be ungracious to say, but I had made up my mind to vote against the passage of this bill until I heard the speech of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG], who has just yielded the remainder of his time to me. [Laughter.] If his State has been as badly imposed upon by the rest of the country as the gentleman would have us believe, it is a great wonder that Ohio has not seceded from the Union.

I totally disagree with the gentleman from Ohio on principle. In 1916 I voted for the original act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of roads. I have voted for all appropriations to carry out that act, each one of which the gentleman has opposed since he became a Member of this body. I have supported the various bills that have been passed amending and improving the original law, but I hesitated about voting for this measure which, I am convinced, has some reactionary and dangerous features, but I do not want to be recorded as opposed to any and all appropriations for Federal aid as is the gentleman from Ohio.

My first objection is to section 1 of the bill, in that it does not authorize appropriations for more than two years, and that the limit of $65,000,000 for the next fiscal year and $75,000,000 for the following fiscal year are too low. The State highway departments should know for at least three years in advance just what may be expected in the way of Federal aid, so that they may make their plans accordingly. In many instances the funds to match the sums allotted from the Federal Treasury must be raised by State or county bond issues, and before such bonds are voted the citizens and taxpayers interested should be fully advised as to the contribution which will be made on behalf of the United States. Most of the State legislatures meet but once every two years, and the same information should be available in order that the State road appropriations may be intelligently made. It is for these reasons that the American Association of State Highway Officials have indorsed the bill introduced by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF] providing for a five-year program of Federal aid to the extent of $100,000,000 each year.

It has been generally understood that Congress would appropriate $100,000,000 each year to aid the States in the construction of roads. That is a modest sum for a Government all the activities and expenditures of which will require at least three billions annually for many years to come. It represents less than a dollar per capita, which can not be considered a heavy Federal tax in support of better means of transportation. At the rate of $100,000,000 a year it will take 10 years to complete the 7 per cent system of primary highways provided for in the Federal highway act approved last November. To reduce the annual appropriations to $75,000,000 and less, as provided in this bill, simply means that the American people must wait at least 15 years before the interstate and intercounty system of highways is completed. Do you believe that those who sent you here to represent them are willing to wait 15 years for the completion of a road system which proposes nothing more than to connect the county seats in each State? And remember also that when this work is done that not more than one-third of this road mileage will consist of paved roadway.

In 1910 there were about 500,000 automobiles in the entire United States. To-day there are over 10,000,000 registered motor vehicles in this country, valued at $8,790,000,000. In 1910 the expenditures for all highway purposes were only $120,000,000. Last year the total road expenditure was $600,000,000, of which the Federal Government contributed but 14 per cent. These figures clearly demonstrate why there is such a tremendous demand for good roads, and conclusively prove that the building of roadbeds is lagging far in the rear of the rolling stock ready to use these ways of travel. The report on this bill admits that some States will be compelled to curtail their building programs by reason of these reduced Federal appropriations, and do so at a time when the need for improved highways is greater than ever before.

The only excuse given for this cut in the sums to be appropriated is the present industrial depression. If the money expended for Federal aid was wasted, I would concede that this argument was sound. Instead of being wasted it is invested in a business enterprise that pays dividends every day in the year—the business of transportation which benefits all of our citizens. The only way for business to resume activity is to start productive work wherever practicable. The worst possible policy for Congress to pursue in this situation is to reduce the appropriation for public works. There are millions of men out of employment to-day who would welcome an opportunity to engage in highway construction. Instead of giving way to a feeling of panic this Congress should proclaim its faith in the future of the United States of America by increasing instead of diminishing the appropriations for good roads.

The last Republican national platform, adopted at Chicago in June, 1920, contains this plank:

> We favor liberal appropriations, in cooperation with the States, for the construction of highways, which will bring about a reduction in transportation costs, better marketing of farm products, improvement in rural postal delivery, as well as meet the needs of military defense.

That platform was adopted almost two years after the war was over and ought to mean what it says: "We favor liberal appropriations." Does that mean that the amount to be appropriated should be less than the sum provided by Congress for that very year, which was $100,000,000? Can it be possible that those who are in charge of this bill are afraid to let the Republican majority in this House carry out this solemn pledge made in their party platform Were they fearful that a motion to increase these appropriations to $100,000,000 annually might prevail? Was that the reason why this bill is called up for consideration under suspension of the rules, so that no amendment of any kind or character could be offered or considered?

I also object to the reduction of the amount to be expended for forest roads and trails to $6,500,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924. It should be the fixed policy of Congress to appropriate $1 for this purpose for every $10 that is made available for Federal aid generally. If the forest lands belonging to the United States could be taxed by the States and counties as other privately owned property is taxed to build roads the Federal Government would be required to pay at least $14,500,000 a year toward highway improvements in the States where the forest reserves are located. It is unfair to reduce the appropriation for this purpose for any year to less than half that amount. To do so also violates another plank in the Republican platform, which reads:

> In determining the proportion of Federal aid for road construction among the States, the sums lost in taxation to the respective States by the setting apart of large portions of their area as forest reservations should be considered as a controlling factor.

My strongest objection is to section 5 of the bill, which reduces the Federal-aid payments to $12,500 per mile during the next fiscal year and to $10,000 per mile thereafter. At present the United States may contribute as much as $20,000 a mile toward road construction by the States, which is none too much, where permanent highways are to be built, or where the route adopted is in a mountainous country. Last week the Miami-Superior highway in Arizona, 20¼ miles in length, was opened to travel. The total cost of this road through the Pinal Mountains was $887,960, or at the rate of $43,356 per mile. There are a number of roads in my State that have cost from $75,000 to $100,000 per mile, which does not include paving.

I have some figures here taken from the April issue of the Highway Engineer and Contractor which clearly demonstrates the menace of this proposed reduction in the limit of Federal-aid payments:

> Average costs per square yard of various types of paving for country roads have recently been issued by the Bureau of Public Roads. The figures cover 68,000,000 square yards of paving constructed with Federal aid in all parts of the United States during the period 1916–1921. The costs per square yard are as follows: Sand-clay, $0.18; gravel, $0.46; plain and surface treated macadam, $0.95; bituminous macadam, $2.10; bituminous concrete, $2.50; plain cement concrete, $2.57; reenforced cement concrete, $2.74; and brick, $4.10. These figures cover only the cost of the paving; they do not include the cost of grading; and it must not be assumed that roads of the several types can be constructed in any locality at the figures given.

It will be observed that these figures are based upon a five-year average, and do not represent the high peak of construction costs during the war. For an 18-foot pavement, allowing nothing for right of way, grading, drainage, or other expenses, the following table shows the average cost of providing a hard road surface to meet the requirements of modern traffic conditions:

$2.10 per square yard equals $22,176 per mile.
$2.50 per square yard equals $26,400 per mile.
$2.57 per square yard equals $27,139.20 per mile.
$2.74 per square yard equals $28,934.40 per mile.
$4.10 per square yard equals $43,296 per mile.

I venture to say without fear of contradiction that neither the Department of Agriculture nor any State highway department recommended this reduction to $10,000 a mile, which, as I have demonstrated, will not cover one-half of the cost of the average 18-foot hard-surfaced road. The only result will be that the State authorities will be compelled to give preference to the construction of long roads of a cheap type over level country. Permanent roads will not be built and mountain roads will be delayed indefinitely. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] has just handed me this telegram from his State highway commissioner, who is also chairman of the executive committee of the Association of State Highway Officials, which shows that this limitation is proposed against the advice of those who know the most about road building in the United States:

RICHMOND, VA., April 26, 1922.

Hon. R. WALTON MOORE,
Washington, D. C.:

Limit of $10,000 set by new Federal bill would seriously affect highway construction in this State. I believe that it would be a mistake to change the present law.

G. P. COLEMAN.

Certainly it will be a mistake to reduce the limit of Federal participation as here proposed. The chief reason why I am going to vote for this measure is because I hope and believe that the bill will be amended in the Senate so that the full amount of $100,000,000 will be appropriated each year and that the limitation will be raised to $20,000 per mile. With that confident expectation I shall vote for the bill.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to discuss this question in three minutes. I believe the bill is entitled to the support of all Members who believe in the road policy which we adopted several years ago. There are some people in the country who do not believe it was wise to begin or to continue Federal contributions to the building of public highways. But those people are in the very small minority. In the main our people approve and are pledged to the policy we are proposing to carry forward in this bill. The bill does not make as large an authorization as some gentlemen would like, but it makes a very liberal authorization, considering the state of finances. I think the committee arrived at a very fair compromise amid the divergent opinions on that subject. There is some objection to the provision of this bill, section 5, which restores the policy adopted by the first good-roads bill limiting the Federal aid to $10,000 a mile, beginning with the fiscal year 1923. But so far as the majority of the States are concerned, I think it is proper to return to the original policy. The amendment increasing the Federal participation was made for and on behalf of the State of New York. At that time practically all of the State delegations objected, or at least there was some objection to it, although now we have come to a time when costs are much lower than they were immediately following the war, and we may very well return to the original policy of participation by the Federal Government to the extent of $10,000 per mile, and I believe the authorization here is in a sufficient amount to carry on the work. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. All time has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I am told that on page 1 of the bill, line 6, the word June should be July. I am also told that a modification was made on page 3 instead of page 1. Is that true?

The SPEAKER. The modification was made on page 3.

Mr. MONDELL. The correction should have been made on page 1, and not page 3. On page 3 it is correct.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House suspend the rules and pass the bill?

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BEGG) there were 129 ayes and 23 noes.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, I object on the ground that no quorum is present, and I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 240, nays 31, answered "present" 1, not voting 158, as follows:

EXTENSION OF UNITED STATES BOTANIC GARDEN.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, a while ago House Joint Resolution 298, authorizing the transfer to the jurisdiction of the Joint Committee on the Library of certain reservations in the District of Columbia for use in connection with the Botanic Garden, was under consideration. The matter was passed over at the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] because his colleague [Mr. LUCE], who is interested in the matter, was temporarily absent. I ask that that matter be taken up now.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution by title.

The Clerk reported the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think some explanation should be made of this important resolution before the objection stage is passed, and I call upon my genial and lovable friend from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] to give us an explanation.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to oppose the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will have that opportunity if the bill comes up in its regular course. If there is no objection, there will be opportunity to discuss the bill. The Chair understands the gentleman from Wisconsin reserves the right to object.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] requests some explanation of this measure.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, is this past the objection stage?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The gentleman from Wisconsin reserves the right to object and desires some explanation of the bill.

Mr. WALSH. If there is going to be objection, what is the use of sitting here and listening to the explanation?

Mr. LANGLEY. I will say to my friend that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE], his colleague, desires to speak in opposition to the bill, but informs me that he does not desire to object to its being reported. That is entirely satisfactory to him.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I have made an explanation of the bill earlier in the day and——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio demands the regular order. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass Senate Joint Resolution 186, of which this is an exact copy.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky moves to suspend the rules and pass the Senate joint resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate joint resolution (S. J. Res. 186) authorizing the transfer to the jurisdiction of the Joint Committee on the Library certain reservations in the District of Columbia for use in connection with the Botanic Garden.

Resolved, etc., That the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, is hereby authorized and directed to transfer to the jurisdiction of the Joint Committee on the Library the following United States reservations for use in connection with the Botanic Garden: Nos. 6–A, 6–B, 6–C, 6–D, 6–E, 6–F, 6–G, 6–H, 6–I, 6–K, 6–L, 6–M, 6–N, 6–O, 6–P, 6–Q, 6–R, 292, and 293, all of which lie along the site of the old James Creek Canal, from Maryland Avenue to P Street SW., Washington, in the District of Columbia.

Passed the Senate March 31, 1922.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Kentucky is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from Massachusetts to 20 minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and forty-eight Members have answered to their names; a quorum is present.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 268.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on House Joint Resolution 268, for printing under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the joint resolution by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Joint Resolution 268, extending the operation of the immigration act of May 19, 1921.

The SPEAKER. Ordered printed under the rule.

BOTANIC GARDEN.

The SPEAKER. The question before the House is suspending the rules on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Massachusetts for 20 minutes.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the Speaker kindly notify me when I have used seven minutes? Mr. Speaker, perhaps I had better begin this brief explanation by stating that this map runs from north to south. Here is the present Botanic Garden. The need for action—as I said earlier in the day and which I will repeat for the information of those gentlemen who were not in the Chamber then—arises from the fact that the Meade Memorial, in the northwest corner of the garden, has taken 100 square feet, which is now covered with rose bushes and other valuable plants and shrubbery. The Grant Memorial has taken a large space over at this end of the Botanic Garden facing the Capitol. Director Hess has been using grounds surrounding the Gallinger Hospital as a sort of nursery, and he has a lot of shrubbery and things of that sort there, which must be moved immediately because of the improvement work that is now in progress on that institution, and they have notified him that he must move immediately. In addition to that fact the Botanic Garden——

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANGLEY. In a moment. The Botanic Garden is very much overcrowded for space, in addition to the situation I have referred to——

Mr. JONES of Texas. Now, it is not the purpose in enlarging this to make room for more monuments down there, is it?

Mr. LANGLEY. I certainly hope that it is not. That matter, of course, rests with the Congress and with the commission that may be appointed to pass upon it. That is not the idea of the committee reporting the resolution, however.

Mr. JONES of Texas. They would not put any more monuments there without getting the approval of the Congress?

Mr. LANGLEY. They could not do so.

Mr. CRISP. If the gentleman will permit, is this land to be incorporated in this park now the property of the United States?

Mr. LANGLEY. I was coming to that. All of this land here included in these yellow diagrams is owned by the Government of the United States, and is under the War Department. Most of it is unoccupied now, and it is very fine soil.

Some portions of it here—for instance, out Maryland Avenue—are occupied by the government of the District of Columbia. Two other blocks along here somewhere [indicating] are covered by débris of various sorts, which has been deposited there by the District government, which has been using those particular sections as a sort of dumping ground.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANGLEY. I will.

Mr. MILLER. Has the gentleman made an estimate of the probable cost of making the land of which he is now speaking suitable for Botanic Garden purposes, or is it in that condition now?

Mr. LANGLEY. Most of it is practically ready now for utilization for that purpose. This bill does not propose to buy a single foot of land. It merely proposes that it be placed under the supervision of the Joint Committee on the Library and its use by the Director of the Botanic Garden, subject to the control of that committee.

Mr. RAMSEYER. For what purpose is that land now being used?

Mr. LANGLEY. Most of it is not being used for any purpose.

Mr. RAMSEYER. It is just lying idle?

Mr. LANGLEY. Some of it is occupied by the District government, and the Commissioners of the District have agreed that they can not easily move off of the portions which they occupy. There is a space here occupied by the District government for stables which they propose to abandon, and which buildings can by a nominal cost be converted into greenhouses.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman put his pointer as to wherein N Street is? There is a dumping ground now where they pick up the sewage and put it on a boat?

Mr. LANGLEY. I think so.

Mr. RAKER. Why did not the committee take these blocks that are on farther south than 6-R?

Mr. LANGLEY. Because that is as far as James Creek Canal has been filled up. The balance of the canal bed is in its original condition—filled with water.

Mr. RAKER. I know; but there are at least 10 blocks from N Street on south to the river?

Mr. LANGLEY. This is P Street.

Mr. RAKER. From N Street on south, clear on down to the point to east of the War College, is one of the finest tracts of land in the city of Washington to-day that is unimproved.

Mr. LANGLEY. That is not the James Creek Canal bed. The gentleman has a wrong impression about that. Some portion of this property, I wish to say to the House, is really an eyesore to the city of Washington. Within three or four blocks of this Capitol Building there is refuse of various sorts, loose brick and stone, broken wagon wheels, and various things of that kind, and it is a habitation, they tell me—I do not know personally—for dope vendors, bootleggers, and other leggers [laughter] and this——

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman does not mean to say that there are moonshiners in the District of Columbia?

Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman from Wisconsin is from a wet city and I am from a dry State, and he ought to know better than I do.

Mr. STAFFORD. I acknowledge myself to be a "wet."

Mr. LANGLEY. Well, I do not. [Laughter.] I never admit anything. The result of this legislation will be to move all of that unsightly——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has occupied seven minutes.

Mr. LANGLEY. I will take two or three minutes more.

Mr. LUCE. Will the gentleman explain to the House what is the need of this legislation from a legal point of view? The land is now in the control of the District of Columbia, is it not?

Mr. LANGLEY. Part of it is under the control of the District, by authority of the War Department, but it is, of course, Government property, and Colonel Sherrill and all other officers directly interested—the Commissioners of the District, the Chief of Engineers, and everybody else who has had anything to do with this matter—state that it would require action of Congress to make it other than a temporary improvement.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It is under the control of the War Department, all of it.

Mr. LUCE. The War Department?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. LUCE. Why does the District of Columbia use this strip through here for its stable?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. By permission of the War Department.

Mr. LUCE. And this could be used for temporary purposes without legislation?

Mr. LANGLEY. I do not know how long is could be used.

Mr. LUCE. It could be used temporarily.

Mr. LANGLEY. The original proposition was that it be used temporarily, but the officers who have directly to do with this matter said that this action by Congress is necessary.

Mr. LUCE. One other question. Does the gentleman wish the House to understand that there is at present on this strip which it is proposed to turn over a single dwelling house?

Mr. LANGLEY. There is certainly no private dwelling house there privately owned. There may be some squatters on it.

Mr. LUCE. The gentleman's suggestion that this would aid in getting rid of anything disreputable or unsightly was not quite pertinent, then?

Mr. LANGLEY. I think it was pertinent, because, as I have explained, several blocks of this property were covered all over with refuse.

Mr. LUCE. Is there any structure at all on the Government property from the railroad down, any kind of an edifice—factories, or anything else?

Mr. LANGLEY. Yes. I saw yesterday a good many covered wagons and things in which law violations could be concealed.

Mr. LUCE. The gentleman's eyesight differs from mine.

Mr. LANGLEY. Yes; because I am younger than the gentleman from Massachusetts. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, that is about all I care to say.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Tell us something about the size of that strip.

Mr. LANGLEY. I thank the gentleman for making the suggestion. I had overlooked that. I have a list here which gives it. The entire area, included in these yellow marks here, is 15.093 acres. I have here somewhere an estimate of the number of square yards and the number of square feet and the number of square inches, that I intended to give to the gentleman from Wisconsin if he wanted it, as he wanted more specific information two weeks ago. There are 94,678,832 square inches, 657,478 square feet, and 73,053 square yards. I talked with some of the officials about getting the number of cubic inches of rich, productive soil, and ascertained that that was impracticable. [Laughter.] There is no question in my mind about the advisability of the adoption of this resolution. It will not only relieve the congestion in the Botanic Garden but at the same time the improvement will fit into the parking system of Washington, and it will beautify a section of the city that has been sadly neglected heretofore.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I used?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has used 12 minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman state how wide the tract is?

Mr. LANGLEY. Two hundred feet to the inch.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is very definite, about as definite as the gentleman can give me.

Mr. LANGLEY. It is definite enough, it seems to me, for all practical purposes. I think everybody understands all the essential facts.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] is recognized.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, by statute the Committee on the Library has the somewhat unique duty of control of the Botanic Garden. For that reason the general subject of the Botanic Garden has been before the committee, I imagine, for many years; I refer particularly to the change in its location. We had about two years ago an exceptionally illuminating and instructive hearing that gave at least one member of the committee such a vital interest in the matter that he has taken no small number of hours in attempting to reach a conclusion in his own mind as to what ought to be done.

When it became necessary to make preparations for dedicating the Grant Memorial, the superintendent of the garden came before the committee and pointed out that by taking down the iron fence much valuable shrubbery would be endangered. We already knew that his palm houses were too small, and in view of these two things the Joint Committee on the Library very readily and cheerfully authorized the superintendent of the garden, for whom we have a high regard and whose work we would help all we can, to take a stretch of land from the Botanic Garden down as far as the railroad along Canal Street. It is perhaps 40 or 50 feet wide, now covered by ugly stables, hardly deserving the name of stables, that might be supplanted usefully by greenhouses. It is cut by several streets, as everyone here who lives in Congress Hall knows very well. It is unsuited to any park purpose other than possibly a parkway. It would for the most part be unfit for anything botanical except greenhouses, and for that or any other practicable purpose we very gladly said Mr. Hess might use the property.

Somewhat to the astonishment of some of us, there appeared not long afterwards in one of the Washington papers a long and highly colored story to the effect that there was unanimous consent in Congress to creating a wonderful botanic garden down in the tin-can district between the railroad and the river, the filled-in district.

The ground for this story I do not know. The Committee on the Library had never had any such proposition laid before it, and was unable therefore to give any view on it, and it was a little disconcerting to find that the newspaper writer said that the proposition had the hearty and unanimous support of the whole Committee on the Library, which had never heard anything about it, at least in any meeting of the committee.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, will my friend yield to me?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly.

Mr. LANGLEY. Speaking about the newspaper article being disconcerting, I have in days gone by been myself disconcerted by newspaper stories; but I have since then recovered from that susceptibility, and I am sure my worthy and distinguished and learned friend from Massachusetts will not blame me for anything colored that appears in the papers. [Laughter.]

Mr. LUCE. My wonder was increased when I discovered in the report accompanying this bill that in it is quoted a recommendation from the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds which covered precisely that which the Committee on the Library had in mind, and that alone. The superintendent was present at the meeting of the Committee on the Library, and it was our agreement, and I should be delighted now to see the Congress decide, to transfer this strip from here to the railroad [indicating on map] to Mr. Hess. But the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, while quoting this recommendation of the superintendent, uses it as the basis of a bill to transfer all this tract on the other side of the railroad, which was so elaborately described by the newspaper man as the site of the future Botanic Garden.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. What legal or other objection is there to this bill transferring the land beyond the railroad on down to the river?

Mr. LUCE. I know of no legal objection, and I am in the singular position of having no serious personal objection to its transfer for the purpose for which it logically and properly might be used. But the public has been told with great enthusiasm that this is to be used for another purpose; and if it is to be used for another purpose I strenuously and earnestly remonstrate, and that is why I take the floor now, and hope that we may provide, if there is a parliamentary way of doing it, that this dream shall not be carried out until Congress has decided that it is desirable.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. In a moment. This land down beyond the railroad might be usefully employed as forcing grounds, as bedding places, and for the productive purposes of a flower garden—that is, for the growing of flowers, plants, and shrubs. It can not be made a thing of beauty. It can not be made a place that anybody will visit. It will have none of the attractiveness of a botanic garden, but can be used simply for raising the shrubs, plants, and flowers which the superintendent of the garden distributes, I presume, through the parks of the District, the hospital grounds, and other places, and from which to a delightful degree the Members of the House themselves benefit.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I will say to the gentleman that I think that is what the Director of the Botanic Garden and others agreeing to the proposition have in mind. Some of this land may be used as an arboretum, whatever that is. I have heard them mention that. I am not myself an expert on the subject.

I will say to the gentleman that the reason for including in this resolution more territory than the Director of the Botanic Garden mentioned when he was before your committee was that when Colonel Sherrill, in charge of public buildings and grounds, and representatives of both the Senate and House Library Committees and others went over it they said, "There is some more land, Mr. Hess," and one of the District Commissioners said, "You can use that also"; and they drew this resolution as it was unanimously passed by the Senate, and it is now introduced in the House, and it turns over to the Joint Committee on the Library, of which the distinguished gentleman is a very active and influential member, the authority to do whatever he and his associates care to do with that land.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. Referring to the statement of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY], in any event all that is accomplished by this resolution is to turn over that property to the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Library, of which my colleague is a member, and in future that committee can recommend and control the use that is made of this tract?

Mr. LUCE. Absolutely; and if the gentleman stopped at that point there would be no objection whatever. But my friend from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] lets the cat out of the bag when he uses the word "arboretum." By the use of the word "arboretum" he supplements and enforces the newspaper story, which is based on the theory that this is to be an arboretum, a most preposterous proposition. An arboretum is a place where great trees are grown. An arboretum ought to have a capacity of several hundred acres. A thousand or 2,000 acres would be none too small for an arboretum.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will my friend yield again?

Mr. LUCE. Does the gentleman desire to withdraw the word "arboretum"?

Mr. LANGLEY. I desire to say that I heard the word "arboretum" used in the discussion of this question, and the gentleman from Massachusetts knows much better than I do what it means. I do not see any reason why we could not grow trees down there if we wanted to; but again let me call attention to the fact that the committee of which the gentleman is a distinguished and powerful member will have control of that entire thing, and if you found that an arboretum might do some damage down there you might veto the arboretum and not let it be put down there. [Laughter.]

Mr. LUCE. The gentleman from Massachusetts happens to be acquainted with the word "arboretum," because one of the beauty spots in the suburbs of Boston is the Arnold Arboretum, perhaps the first and certainly the best of its kind in the country, a large area of land devoted to the raising of trees and a great help to botanists and to the students of arboriculture. Now, the danger here is that it might be thought, from what has been said on the floor and from what has been said in the press, that Congress by this bill had given its sanction to the use of this land for such a purpose as that. The danger of growing trees upon this ground is that it would totally upset any permanent plan for the improvement of this whole district sought of the Capitol extending to the river. Most of it is land privately owned and must in time be bought. It is intersected by streets that have been leveled up, and in between the trees are sink holes that are on the original level of the meadows. It will take, I venture to prophesy, not less than $1,000,000 to buy and improve that property for public purposes, perhaps a good deal more.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Is it not a fact that on this street, from about M on down to the river, about eight blocks, there is to-day the finest row of trees in or about the city of Washington?

Mr. LANGLEY. Absolutely true.

Mr. LUCE. It is a row of very beautiful trees, and doubtless they will be preserved in any reconstruction of the area down there. The gentleman refers to the trees on First Street, does he not?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. LUCE. Now, First Street runs away over here, several hundred feet.

Mr. RAKER. Over beyond here is the Navy property?

Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. I will ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that the two beauty spots of Washington, where more people go than to any other place in Washington, are the War College and around the Speedway, which have been improved as this would be improved?

Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Then why not improve this property?

Mr. LUCE. I will support that proposition with both hands if the gentleman and the House will join me. But this is not that proposition. This is a proposition to take a narrow strip, with no certainty that the remaining land will be taken, and with the possibility, as the gentleman suggests, that trees will be planted which will become great, and in time will interfere with the laying out of this region. Until there is a permanent decision as to the location of the Botanic Garden I doubt whether you ought to put this land beyond the railroad in the hands of the Committee on the Library. In common with most other people, I am not going to object to an accession of power. If you desire to give more power to the Committee on the Library, I, as a single member of it, will attempt to exercise that power as best I can to the public advantage. But I want to get it in the RECORD here now that at least one Member of this House does not contemplate that any action to be taken to-day shall bind the House to this as a permanent location for the Botanic Garden.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. If this is transferred to the gentleman's committee, it does not impose any liability on the committee or the House to make an arboretum or anything else out of it. As a matter of fact, you can simply exercise your discretion and good judgment, can you not?

Mr. LUCE. Absolutely, but this statement in the Washington paper was reprinted in a paper in my own city, and I presume elsewhere, and it announced that the Committee on the Library and the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and the Committee on Appropriations and everybody else had agreed that this was the site for the Botanic Garden; and I did not want somebody to rise in the Seventy-eighth or the Ninety-fifth Congress and say that we were unanimously of the opinion that such a thing should be done and that we took this action with that intention.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. If the gentleman from Massachusetts will bear with me, I have observed that what the Washington papers have expressed as the opinion of Congress is usually just exactly the opposite from the opinion of Congress.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield to me for one more question?

Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. I will ask the gentleman again if it is not true that this row of trees running along here on First Street from M Street to the river is not considered by everybody the finest row of trees in Washington or within hundreds of miles of Washington?

Mr. LANGLEY. That is right.

Mr. RAKER. Now, if we improve this territory down to this point, it is a shame that the Government does not take that property and improve it as it ought to.

Mr. LUCE. I agree with the gentleman on that. I will say that farther down on First Street there are now dwelling houses, between First Street and the canal, and that the canal property is evidently separated from First Street by private property, which in my judgment ought to be taken at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. CURRY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly.

Mr. CURRY. If the gentleman from Massachusetts does not think this is a proper place to develop a botanic garden, where does he think is the proper place?

Mr. LUCE. That would embark me on a controversy that would take much more than 20 minutes to finish.

Mr. CURRY. Is the gentleman's opposition based upon a proposition of some other place where he would like to have the Botanic Garden?

Mr. LUCE. No; not as to the spot. I have examined Mount Hamilton, and I think it would be a blunder if the Government did not add Mount Hamilton to the park system, but I have great doubts of its being the best place for a botanic garden. I think the gentleman must realize that if some petty picayune 20 or 30 acre spot was taken now for a botanic garden it would decrease very much the chance of later getting a proper space to serve as a botanic garden. A botanic garden is more than a place to grow pretty flowers and pretty shrubs. It is to serve as an important center of study by scientific men from all over the land, and for that purpose the site ought to be carefully selected by experts.

Mr. CURRY. Is not this to add to the development of the Botanic Garden?

Mr. LUCE. It is, and if I can get it squarely set forth by any action of this House to-day that it is not the intention of Congress that this shall be a permanent location for the national activities in botanical research, but that the question of a permanent location shall be left open for future consideration, I shall not repine at the outcome. Now, Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes I have left I would like to say a word about the Botanic Garden controversy. I understand that there has been much acrimony in the discussion of the matter. I have no personal choice or preference.

I do not know who owns Mount Hamilton. No man has ever come to me in connection with Mount Hamilton, but after it was brought to the attention of the committee two years ago I went out there alone in order that I might not be biased by the comments of any interested person, and I spent a delightful afternoon examining that tract. If any gentleman here who is as fond of walking as I am will take an afternoon and go out there, I am sure he will find no more attractive spot in the neighborhood of the Capital for a pleasant stroll and enjoyment of the beauties of nature.

The trouble with Rock Creek Park—and I have done my share in walking there, too—is that those who planned it omitted providing enough paths for pedestrians. All you gentlemen who own automobiles—and I hope you all do—get your pleasure by riding through it, but such as enjoy walking and go out there will find it unsuited for men who prefer to walk rather than to ride. It can never be a playground for the masses of the people of Washington. It is too hilly; there is not enough level land. While it is possible at reasonable prices to secure for all time for the use of the people places for playgrounds, recreation spots, beauty spots that everybody can enjoy, it strikes me as a lamentable lack of foresight not so to do. Could I have my way, as soon as we get out of this period when we must look at every dollar two or three times before we spend it, I would gladly see all the available tracts of land acquired for that purpose. I would like to see Mount Hamilton taken for the park system, but let the site of the Botanic Garden await the decision of those qualified to advise.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I can not claim to have given an intimate study of these questions that my distinguished friend from Massachusetts has given. My judgment on the matter is made, I am very frank to say, largely from the advice and suggestion of the superintendent of the Botanic Garden himself. I have confidence in his knowledge of his business and have been quite willing to be guided by his suggestions. So far as Mount Hamilton is concerned, I have seen that, but from what I have seen, that which is called soil would have to be pulverized and manured to make bricks even. [Laughter.] It does not appear to me to be suited to a botanic garden or for general botanic purposes such as has been described by the gentleman from Massachusetts. In this I am fortified also by the statement of the superintendent of the Botanic Garden. It seems to me that this spot, which I have been over, is suitable for the purposes described by the gentleman from Massachusetts; whether it is suitable for an arboretum I do not pretend to know. It does seem to me to be a most excellent temporary solution, if it be no more than temporary, of this problem in which most of us are interested in having solved, and I hope that the resolution will be passed.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD].

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I can not see why there should be any objection to the transfer of this property from the War Department to the Committee on the Library for the purpose of relieving the congested condition of the Botanic Garden.

What may be the future with reference to a botanic garden the future must determine. I for one am violently opposed to this land proposition to unload Mount Hamilton upon this Nation at an initial cost of $400,000. [Applause.] It would take twice $400,000 to blast the rocks in order to find a place level enough in which to set a hen. [Laughter.]

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. FISHER. Does the adoption of this resolution mean the complete abandonment of the plan which has been suggested whereby there will be a new Botanic Garden, an elaborate one, purchased by the Government in some other section of the city?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; it does not mean anything of the kind. It means that it will afford an outlet to save what the Government has paid hundreds of thousands of dollars to get, in the way of a collection, from going to waste, so that those valuable shrubs and plants may be kept growing until such time as a site may be selected. I am glad to hear the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] express himself as he has, and I know that he is not a party to the plan of some gentlemen to absolutely destroy this beauty spot down here at the foot of the hill, in order that they may force the purchase immediately somewhere of some other piece of ground, of Mount Hamilton, preferably, for a Botanic Garden. That is the crux of this whole business. There are thousands and thousands of dollars worth of plants out here at the Gallinger Hospital that must be taken care of. The congested condition down here at the Botanic Garden because of the encroachment of the Grant Memorial, which never should have been placed there, and because of the placing of the memorial to Meade, which never should have been placed there, makes it all the more necessary why there should be some outlet to take care of those shrubs. There can be no possible reasonable objection to this. It will afford relief without cost to the Government, and at the same time it will tend to beautify that portion of the town which has been sadly neglected. There are a few, for which I am thankful, that feel that anything that may tend in the least to give permanency to the present Botanical Garden, that will approve this measure of relief; but let us take care of the beauty spot we now have, that has been more than a hundred years in the building, rather than to despoil it at the behest of those who are actuated solely by the mercenary spirit, all too prevalent in this city and country to-day.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, there are two reasons that I think are quite clear why we ought to have immediate action on this resolution. I do not enter into the controversy respecting Mount Hamilton. While I have not been committed to that proposition, I am of opinion that in the light of the past 50 years of growth of this Capital City, the immediate future ought to be looked after, so far as the park system is concerned, for it must greatly develop in the next 50 years. However, I eliminate that entirely. I am not committed to the proposition at all, and I do not know that I would vote for the purchase of Mount Hamilton now if that question were up. I know that I would not vote for it upon such information I now have for a botanic garden; I would be inclined to vote against it for that purpose. I do not know what I would do on the matter of developing the park system, beyond my desire to insure against unwise omissions to take advantage of our opportunities for a wonderful city in the future. The two things I have in mind are, first, the utilitarian side so as to utilize this Government land which is now without any particular use to the country, and is much of an eyesore. It could be made of particular value by the extension of the Botanic Garden, which, in the present quarters, is seriously hampered. This plan will relieve the congestion down here in the garden, where can be found a wonderful treasure in botany. I greatly regretted the statement made on the floor of the House the other day about the value of the collection in the Botanic Garden. There is a collection there which has been gathered in the last hundred years and it would be absolutely impossible to replace it should it be destroyed.

Mr. LANGLEY. One hundred and three years have elapsed since it was started.

Mr. FESS. There is no possibility, either so far as physical accomplishment or price is concerned, or so far as time is concerned, if it were destroyed, whereby it can be replaced. So far as the value of this collection is concerned, I leave that to those who see a particular value in the botanical richness of such a collection in the Capital City. That ought not to be destroyed; it ought to be protected as a treasure not possible to replace.

Those in charge fully recognize what the garden means, and have thus far been able to resist what appears to be a wanton attitude toward it. But the present situation demands an expansion which some Members interpret to mean a removal. The latter can not be done without loss, while the former can be easily accomplished. That is the purpose of this resolution.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Who is responsible for permitting the fence to be cut down as it was around the Botanic Garden?

Mr. FESS. Congress authorized that to be done, conditioned upon the consent of the superintendent of the garden, who came to the Joint Committee on the Library and gave his consent in order to arrange for the dedication of the Grant Memorial. We finally agreed that it ought to be done, inasmuch as the monument was built there. I think it was a mistake to put the monument there, but since that is not the question there was nothing really left for us to do but to remove the fence.

Mr. LANGLEY. There was a unanimous agreement by the gentlemen, in addition to the Library Committee, which I referred to a while ago, if Mr. Hess would withdraw his objection, and the fence was removed two weeks ago, and I think the Congress ought to live up to its part.

Mr. FESS. I personally deplore seeing the fence removed. However, that is done.

Another reason for this resolution is to convert a most unsightly portion of the Capital City near the Capitol into a part of the park system by removing shacks and extending the garden in time to the river. Whatever be the final plans of the Botanic Garden, this resolution transferring this land from the jurisdiction of the War Department to that of the Joint Library Committee will not prevent a complete plan later on in case the Congress decides otherwise.

The immediate approach to the Capitol from the depot, as well as surroundings in other directions, is not designed to impress the visitor. I hope to see the time when the Capitol will take on the beauty commensurate with its importance in the world. This is only one of many steps leading to it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky to suspend the rules and pass Senate Joint Resolution 186.

The question was taken; and, in the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the rules were suspended and the joint resolution was passed.

By unanimous consent a similar House joint resolution (H. J. Res. 298) was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. LEA of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members of the House have 10 days in which to extend their own remarks in the RECORD on the road bill which was passed this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that all Members of the House have 10 days in which to extend their own remarks in the RECORD on the road bill. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think that is a rather long time. The ordinary time is five days.

Mr. LEA of California. Mr. Speaker, I modify the request to make it five days.

Mr. WALSH. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to are here printed in full as follows:

Mr. LEA of California. Mr. Speaker, I have heretofore supported the various measures providing Federal aid for road construction. I secured the privilege of extending my remarks to place in the RECORD my reasons for voting against the pending bill.

This bill contains over five pages of provisions proposed to be made a part of our Federal road law. It authorizes the eventual appropriation of over $145,000,000, reduces the limit per mile that may be spent by the Federal Government on road construction, and contains other provisions of more or less importance.

It was presented to the House under a method of procedure which practically denied debate, left no reason for debate, and absolutely denied Members an opportunity of offering amendments to improve the bill.

I voted against this bill as a protest against such methods of legislation. I voted against it because, in my judgment, it places an unreasonable, impractical, and unwise limitation on the proportionate amount of Federal participation in road construction. I voted against this bill, mentally assured that its defeat would furnish the House an opportunity of passing another bill providing for an equal amount of funds, unhampered by what I believe to be an objectionable limitation.

LEGISLATIVE SHACKLES.

By the adoption of special rules, and by suspending the rules, and thus preventing proper consideration and prohibiting the right of amendment of important bills, the House has made a common practice of what is justified only by unusual and exceptional conditions. The motive and effect of these methods of procedure is to deny the Members of the House the opportunity of exercising their discretion on legislative matters. Such methods of procedure are the means by which a small committee or a dominating few, who are able to control procedure, shackle the House and render it impotent to translate its will into legislation. The number of instances in which the House in a similar way has abdicated its function can be indefinitely multiplied from our records during recent years.

Such methods of procedure are becoming an offense against popular government and reflect upon the initiative and courage of Members of Congress.

In the case of this particular bill, the chairman of the committee having the bill in charge moved to suspend the rules and pass the bill. This meant that 435 Members of the House were limited to 40 minutes' debate—20 minutes for and 20 minutes against the bill. It meant every Member was denied the right or opportunity to offer any amendment; that the bill must be passed or defeated exactly as it was presented, without crossing a "t" or dotting an "i." Thereupon the chairman stated, "This is the only bill we thought it was wise to offer at this time." In other words, the House was informed, in effect, that it could take that bill without change or get nothing.

Unquestionably an overwhelming majority of the House desired to authorize this road apppropriation. By a similar majority, I believe, the House was against the limitation proposed. Under ordinary methods of procedure we would have had the opportunity of a separate vote on the question of limiting the Federal expenditure per mile. Then the bill as finally passed would have represented the majority will of the House in all its provisions. But under the procedure followed in this case, many Members who voted for the bill were unwillingly forced to vote for this unwise and impractical limitation upon the use of the funds.

Claiming to be the most popular branch of the greatest of legislative bodies, we unprotestingly again submitted to a practice which deprives our Members of their discretionary functions and yields the power of the House to a committee or a dominating few who happen to be in position to control our procedure. Is the domination of legislation by a few the product of their self-appropriated power or is it a supine concession from the membership of the House? The clear design of such methods is to refuse the Members of the House the exercise of their own discretion. Without the exercise of that discretion and our own judgment, what justifies our existence as legislators? Is our surrender of our functions on the assumption of the greater wisdom and virtue of the few that initiate and control such procedure? Shall we accept the right to exercise our legislative functions as a privilege extended or withheld at the will of a dominating few or shall we reclaim the rights that have been lost only by our own self-forfeiture? Such methods can not be justified or explained on any theory that is credible to the Members of the House.

MILEAGE LIMITATION.

Twenty thousand dollars per mile is the present limit on Federal expenditures for road construction. This bill, if enacted, would fix the limit for the coming fiscal year at $12,500, exclusive of bridges more than 20 feet, and thereafter at $10,000 per mile, except certain additional amounts granted a few public-land States.

The Federal aid road act passed in 1916 naturally and wisely recognized that the only logical basis for apportionment of Federal and State funds in joint road building must be upon a basis of the cost thereof. Any other standard of apportioning State and Federal responsibility is arbitrary, unequal, and therefore unjust in its application.

The Government should have nothing to do with building anything but good roads. Sometimes a good road costs $10,000 per mile, sometimes $20,000, and for equally good reasons sometimes it costs $30,000 or $40,000 or more. Outside of the right of way which the State provides, the cost of a road is dependent upon labor costs, the amount and character of excavations, the difficulty and expense of drainage, the amount and cost of grading, the cost of providing a proper foundation dependent upon the variability of soils, rainfall, freezing, drainage, and other conditions. The cost of surfacing a road likewise varies, not only according to the kind of the surface selected, but also on account of the variety of conditions as to transportation, availability of materials, and other essentials at different localities. To say that we shall expend an amount not to exceed $10,000 per mile means that we will sometimes pay 50 per cent, sometimes 40, sometimes 30, and sometimes 25 per cent of the cost. Such an arbitrary limitation ignores the cost of construction, the amount of traffic served, the character of the traffic, whether light or heavy, and the need, the value, and the usefulness of the road.

It would be about as logical to say that the Government will not spend its money for building a bridge over 50 feet, although the stream requires a 100-foot bridge, or to limit the concrete surface of a road to 4 inches when the traffic requires 8.

Innumerable instances can be named where the States have constructed roads costing much more than $20,000 per mile, and where it would not have been economy to construct roads at less cost. In reference to such roads the attitude of the Government would in effect be, "We will pay 50 per cent of the cost of constructing an inferior road, but if you want to construct a really good road, such as the traffic and building conditions require, then we will pay only a less proportion of the cost." It is not logical to say that we will cooperate liberally where the burden is light and to a much lesser degree where the burden is heavy.

A good road is dependent upon a properly selected route, proper grades and curves, drainage, foundation, and surface. A road upon a properly selected route, pursuing a natural line of travel, is the most enduring improvement on the earth made by man. Everything else built by his hands wastes away, but a properly selected route of a highway will be used by the human race as long as the world endures. It is utter folly to build expensive roads without proper drainage, moderate grades and curves.

One of the fundamental principles of Federal-aid road construction has been to encourage good roads. The participation of the Government would scarcely be justified on any other theory. Yet the tendency of this limitation is to encourage the States to build roads of a more or less temporary and doubtful character, rather than good, enduring types. The general tendency of the State is to slight rather than to overexpend money on substantial roads. The States need no encouragement in superficial road building or in continuing a policy that too long has been wasteful.

The present limitation prohibiting Federal participation above $20,000 per mile limits the equal participation of the Federal Government principally where construction costs are unusual or abnormal. The proposed reduction of this limit to $10,000 per mile will prohibit the equal Federal participation in practically all roads of a really high-class type. It will prohibit the equal Federal participation in many projects such as the States are now commonly constructing.

California now has 13 Federal-aid road projects, in which the estimated cost per mile runs from $30,000 to $43,000. No money is being wasted in building these roads. Those high costs are necessary on account of expensive construction or on account of the high-type road that must be built to accommodate the traffic. The final adoption of this limitation will seriously interfere with State plans as to such roads and will handicap and discourage high-class construction.

There is no extravagance in building roads well. There is no occasion for the Federal Government to place restraints against superior road construction. The waste that we may fear is from the construction of inferior roads. The unwise administration of road funds, incompetent engineers, and unfortunate selection of materials are common sources of waste in road cost. But these mistakes occur as to the cheaper roads as well as the more expensive ones. This limitation places no restraint on that kind of extravagance.

On the 31st day of March, this year, $340,000,000 of Federal-aid funds had been apportioned since the act of 1916 became a law. These funds have been apportioned to over 37,000 miles of roads located in the various States. Eleven thousand miles of these roads have been constructed. Plans, specifications, and estimates have been made for 18,000 miles, and other projects aggregating 5,000 miles have been approved.

Of these funds over $10,800,000 have been apportioned to California, covering a total mileage of 757 miles. Of these roads 160 miles have been completed. Agreements have been executed for an additional 452 miles. Plans are complete for 73 miles and projects have been adopted for 71 miles.

The average cost per mile of the completed roads in California has been as follows: Graded and drained roads, $14,300; bituminous concrete, $17,300; concrete, $24,200. Bituminous roads under construction in California are costing an average of $21,400 and concrete roads $27,200 per mile.

The State of California has practically accepted the road with a concrete foundation as its most practical road on main lines of traffic. As the Federal-aid share of such roads has been $13,600 per mile, the effect of this bill after June 30, 1923, if enacted, would be to change the relative percentages of the costs now being borne by the Federal and State Governments, with a result that the State would bear an expense of $17,200 per mile while the Federal Government would carry an expense of $10,000 per mile.

On the graded and drained roads, bituminous concrete roads, and the gravel roads the Government would bear a full 50 per cent of the cost, but on the superior-class roads, found most practical, the Federal Government would pay only 37 per cent of the cost and the State would pay 63 per cent. The greatest difficulty this limitation would present would not be as to the average road, but as to particular roads where construction costs are necessarily and properly higher than the average road.

There is no more economy in the cheaper road than in the more expensive concrete road. The need for the concrete road is just as great. Equal economy and necessity exist for its construction as for the cheaper road. When the total amount of funds to be supplied by the Government is not determined or limited by the amount spent per mile there is no economy or logic in arbitrarily placing this limitation that will handicap the State in an efficient, economic, and businesslike handling of its road-construction problems.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the Botanic Garden.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks under unanimous consent referred to, on the road bill, are here printed in full as follows:

Mr. HAWES. Mr. Speaker, Federal aid for a highway system is recognized in our Constitution, and from the time of President Washington to President Harding it has met the approval of our Chief Executives.

Congress commenced its assistance in 1812, and made direct appropriations within a few years after that time of over $500,000, and spent money on roads running from $7,000 to $13,000 a mile.

The importance of the subject to-day, due to the introduction of the motor vehicle, which both uses and destroys roads, is understood when we know that there were 10,250,000 licenses for motor vehicles issued in 1922; that the new investment in these motor vehicles in 1921 reached the enormous sum of $8,322,000,000; that it is estimated that 6,000,000 cattle were hauled in trucks from the farm to the packer in 1921.

In the last 10 years the United States and the States invested $2,526,000,000 in good roads.

The Democratic national platform and the Republican national platform both called for liberal appropriations for Federal aid.

Both President Wilson and President Harding have given their unqualified approval to this Federal participation.

The church, the school, the farmer, and every class of our citizens are deeply and vitally interested.

Acting upon the invitation of the United States Government, 48 States have created State highway commissions, have enacted State laws to comply with the Federal provision; the subject has occupied many sessions of the legislatures in many States, including in numerous States special sessions of the legislatures called for this specific purpose.

Most of the States complied with the Federal aid provision on the 50–50 or matched dollar basis, and they have adjusted themselves to the Federal provisions only after long educational work, much discussion, and great difficulties.

Any change, therefore, in the Federal law means increased difficulties, uncertainties, and vexations for each of the 48 States.

I doubt very much whether the members of the Roads Committee of the House understand the complex nature of Federal aid, and that in every change they make they cause embarrassments and trouble for not only the State commissions but the legislatures of the various States.

About one year ago the committee brought in a roads bill under a suspension of the rules allowing but 40 minutes' debate, 20 minutes to those favorable to the bill and 20 minutes to those opposing. No opportunity for amendment was provided, so that the will of the committee must prevail in the House, or any hope for amendment must be expected from the Senate.

Again, on last Monday the committee reported another bill to the House cutting the appropriation from $100,000,000 to $65,000,000 and making certain radical changes, and the House under this rule was not permitted to discuss or suggest amendments.

Representatives of the 48 States were denied the privilege of expressing the will of their States. Twenty minutes of this time was divided by the chairman of the committee into a general discussion of the bill. Answers to questions propounded on the floor of the House could not be given in the time limited, nor could amendments be made.

A Member from Ohio occupied 15 minutes in opposition to the whole theory of Federal aid. He did not discuss the provisions of the bill but frankly stated his opposition to it in any form, and but five minutes was permitted the gentleman from Arizona to even touch upon the subject of a possible amendment.

The rule by committee was never better illustrated than in this case. The doctrine of "take it or leave it as we decide" was never more strongly emphasized.

It is a denial of the right of petition, a denial of the right of discussion, in effect a denial of the right of representation for the committee to proceed along this line.

If all the functions of the House in the matter of amendments are to be transferred to the Senate and the House compelled to vote yea or nay on a matter of this magnitude, then the power of the House is destroyed and representation is denied.

Earnest men and women in every State in the Union have State road organizations, county road organizations, and township road organizations; they are fighting the battle of good roads everywhere; and yet 430 Representatives of these 48 States in Congress are denied the right to discuss, or even to present, the petitions and memorials for their State on the floor of the House, for the purpose of expressing the will of these good people and of the officials of the various States.

The fact that in every congressional district the Democratic platform has been violated, the Republican platform has been violated, and the recommendations of both Wilson and Harding ignored by a committee which refuses the right of discussion to the House, will necessarily become a campaign issue in the fall election. This would be most unfortunate, because there should be no partisan politics in the matter of good roads or the building of highways.

But if year after year a small committee is to decide absolutely the policy of the House, prevent amendment, and prohibit discussion it raises a national issue of importance.

The committee evidently does not understand that when they change the Federal law it may require changes in many State laws.

Whole systems of roads—as in my State, which contemplates the building of 6,000 miles—will have their machinery thrown out of gear and the legislative system disrupted.

When the expenditures of this Congress are criticized and its failure to retrench are discussed, the cutting off of $35,000,000 for roads will be an item which will be compared adversely with the failure to save in other directions.

I desire to enter my protest against any future discussion of the road problems of the Federal Government in a 40-minute discussion. It simply can not be done intelligently.

The issue as presented by the proponents of the bill made it impossible to vote against it without creating the impression that the vote was against Federal aid in any form, so that many Members were forced to vote aye when, if given an opportunity to have discussed proposed amendments, they would have voted nay. I find myself amongst this class.

Disagreeing with the amendments proposed by the committee, and desiring to effect a change which I am sure would have met with the approval of the majority of the House, I was constrained against my better judgment and wishes to vote for the bill as presented.

I personally know, however, that a number of Members who voted with the small minority of 31 would, upon the general subject being properly presented, have voted aye.

The bill has passed the House, but the poor privilege of discussion is afforded only after its passage. I desire to direct the attention of the Senate, or of the conferees in case there is a disagreement between the House and the Senate, to a very unfortunate change made in the established law by this bill.

Every intelligent roadman understands the simple proposition that a road must be built for the load it is to carry. A road which carries 50,000 automobiles a day must be of a different width, thickness, and form of construction from one which carries 5 automobiles a day. The question of freight tonnage and passenger traffic controls the kind and character of the road which must be built near the denser centers of population.

The cheapest form of road must at all times consider the use for which the road is built. As the road extends back to the farm, 50 or 75 miles away, and as its use decreases, the cost and form of its construction change. But if 5 miles of any road leading from a farm to a market is not properly built and of a substantial character, then the road, so far as transporting the products of the farm to the market is concerned, is useless.

The present law permits the use of $20,000 a mile of Federal money when equally matched by State money.

Section 5 of this bill reduces this limitation to $10,000 per mile in 1924 and thereafter.

Many States have laid out their entire systems connecting the farms with the cities, and have considered the use of the road in the matter of density of population.

Some of these roads can not be built for $20,000 a mile, and road work in many States must stop until the legislatures of the States change the laws and the rules of the various highway commissions are changed.

The question of the expenditure per mile on roads should be one for scientific men employed in the Federal Highways Bureau and the scientific men employed by the various State commissions. It is for the high-class engineer to determine the cost of a road and the type of a road.

This cutting down, therefore, and placing a limitation of $10,000 a mile will work very injuriously, if not disastrously, in many States of the Union.

The following telegram was received by me from the State highway engineer of the Missouri commission:

JEFFERSON CITY, MO., April 19, 1922.

Hon. HARRY B. HAWES,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Reducing Federal participation from $20,000 to $10,000 per mile will hamper road-building program in Missouri. High-type roads can not be constructed for $20,000 per mile, and reduction of Federal participation would invite serious criticism of roads constructed that will cost more than double Federal participation. This contemplated action in Congress would mean that available Federal aid would have to be applied on a much larger mileage of roads, thereby increasing the overhead charges for both State and Federal departments. Would strongly urge that you do everything in your power to prevent this becoming a law, as it would greatly retard the building of high-type roads. Will take matter up with commission at meeting to be held in Jefferson City to-morrow, April 20.

A. W. GRAHAM.

Followed later by a communication in the form of a resolution reading as follows:

The following resolution was presented to the commission, and upon motion of Mr. Matthews, seconded by Mr. Connett, the resolution was adopted:

"Whereas the Missouri State Highway Commission has been advised that the Federal Congress has pending before it a bill reducing the Federal aid appropriated to the various States, fixing the maximum sum at $10,000 per mile instead of $20,000 per mile, as the law is at the present time: Therefore be it

"Resolved by this commission, That the Members of Congress from Missouri be requested to oppose this particular section of the road bill, and to urge the passage of a law which will continue the Federal aid payments at the rate of $20,000 per mile as heretofore: Be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary be requested to forward copies of this resolution to each Member of Congress from Missouri."

I communicated with the Bureau of Public Roads, from whom I received the following letter, with inclosures, which are here inserted:

Hon. HARRY B. HAWES,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. HAWES: In response to your request for information as to the cost of highway construction of the higher types, I take pleasure in inclosing three tables.

The first of these, a "Summary of mileage and average cost per mile of bituminous concrete, Portland cement concrete, and brick pavements completed, and final payments made under the terms of the Federal aid act," is arranged by States to show the average cost of these pavements per mile by States.

The second table, the "Estimated cost per mile of bituminous macadam, bituminous concrete, and brick highways placed under agreement during the calendar years 1917 to 1921," shows the cost of these pavements during the past five years and indicates the general trend of prices. The amount of new work let this year is hardly sufficient to justify a positive statement as to what the 1922 averages will be, but enough new work has been let to indicate that this year's prices are somewhat less than last year's. It should be remarked, however, that during the past two years there has been a decided tendency to increase the width and thickness of these types of pavement and that, as a result, the total cost per mile has not fallen off as rapidly as would otherwise have been expected.

The third table inclosed shows the mileage and cost by States and by types of all pavements under construction and completed on December 31 last. From this table such information as you may desire on pavement costs in any particular State may be secured.

Should you find this information inadequate for the purposes that you have in hand, I shall be pleased to supply any additional data that you may have occasion to use.

Very truly yours.

THOMAS MACDONALD.

The committee had before it Thomas H. MacDonald, Chief of the Bureau of Public Roads, an expert of the highest attainment, who has supplemented years of service as the chief highway engineer of the State of Iowa by the experience acquired during many years' service with the United States Government. He is, under the Secretary of Agriculture, the chief administrative officer of Federal aid for the United States Government. I can not find in the hearings any recommendation for this change made by Mr. MacDonald, nor can I find any evidence that the committee took any testimony regarding the advisability of such change.

W. C. Markham, legislative representative of the American Association of State Highway Engineers, who represents 48 State highway departments, a man of high attainment, great experience, and authorized to speak for the highway departments of 48 States, never approved the change and never recommended it.

It was not recommended by the National Agricultural Conference; it was not recommended by the American Farm Bureau Federation; it was not recommended by the American Association of State Highway Officials; it was not recommended by the American Automobile Association, which represents the owners of over 10,000,000 machines, which pay into the State treasuries of the 48 States 95 per cent of the money that has been spent on good roads by the States.

In view of these facts, how the committee could have recommended such change is beyond my comprehension. No reasons were set out, no testimony was taken, no arguments advanced, and not one witness called before the committee approved of the change.

I believe I can state without fear of contradiction that the leading men on both sides of the House did not indorse this amendment.

If the petitions and remonstrances of States are to be denied, if road legislation is to be put through under a gag rule, if the testimony of State and Federal experts is to be eliminated and the right of discussion to be prohibited, then the function of amendment and revision must be transferred to the Senate—a most humiliating expedient.

I hope that when the chairman of the Committee on Roads brings in another bill for discussion in this House, if he feels that he has not sufficient influence with the Committee on Rules to give ample time for a fair, frank discussion of a bill that calls for the expenditure of $75,000,000, that he will at least make the attempt in the future to secure a reasonable latitude for debate and amendment and not present a bill in the future which chokes discussion and prohibits change.

The extension of remarks under unanimous consent referred to, on the road bill, are here printed in full as follows:

Mr. ATKESON. Mr. Speaker, the bill under consideration provides for Federal aid in building and maintaining rural post roads throughout the country for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1923, and June 30, 1924. The Committee on Roads had hearings and heard much testimony. When the bill was considered in executive session the time and amount was thoroughly threshed out in the light of the testimony. In view of the fact that not much road was builded during the last several years on account of the high cost of labor and material; that considerable allotments had not been taken up or paid out because approved projects had not been completed; and results brought about by the late war, the committee concluded that a two-year provision, instead of three, would be the part of wisdom and could not result in harm to any program of building in any State.

They also concluded that as much money is still available for allotments in many of the States that a smaller appropriation for the two years would be abundant for all practical purposes during said time. Director McDonald based his testimony on $50,000,000 for the year 1923; and it was understood that these figures met with the approval of President Harding and the Bureau of Roads under the Secretary of Agriculture. But in view of the conclusion of the committee to make the appropriation for two years instead of three, it finally concluded to report the bill for $65,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and $75,000,000 for the fiscal year ending 1924. In addition it provides for forest roads and trails the sum of $6,500,000, to be available until expended in accordance with section 23 of the Federal highway act, approved November 9, 1921.

In order to prevent allotments to projects approved being tied up indefinitely, section 4 of the bill provides that if the work is not contracted and in course of construction within one year after approval and allotment the Secretary of Agriculture "may require the said State to submit one or more projects to replace the said project." This is a new feature of the law and will undoubtedly result in settling many unfortunate contentions, and will make the money once allotted available again, on other projects where work is proceeding or may be contracted.

After much discussion in the committee the amount of Federal aid per mile, "exclusive of bridges of more than 20 feet clear span," was fixed at $12,500 after June 30, 1923, and $10,000 per mile after that fiscal year. The feeling was that these sums would be sufficient and abundant to keep all road projects going until the end of the fiscal year 1924; and by that time, or before, the Congress will have an opportunity to review results and obtain data as to costs of construction, and so forth, and can then make such provisions as the facts demand or warrant. It will be up to the several highway commissions to show Congress what it has done and what it costs to do it. By that time the people—the taxpayers—will demand a showdown at the hands of those directing the construction of our highways in order that they may see they are getting the worth of their money.

By section 7 some new teeth have been put into the law, and I am sure this is a wholesome feature of the law. This is a good bill, and if too conservative it should be attributed to the desire of the committee to move in harmony with the condition of the National Treasury and the general readjustments in the business affairs of the country. If the committee has erred it is in the right direction, and if time shows it in error, its errors may readily be corrected by any subsequent Congress and before any possible harm can come to the continuous building of good roads.

I do not think there is any disposition on the part of Congress to reverse the policy of Federal aid for post roads established in 1916. Good roads is one of the demands of the people, and they are willing to pay for them; but they want every dollar judiciously expended and every mile of road they can get for the money.

Mr. BOX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on soldier relief legislation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Botanic Garden.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on pensions for soldiers and my work in connection with that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to are here printed in full as follows:

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, the greatest gratification in being a Member of Congress is the opportunity to be of service to the men who in times of our country's need have willingly doffed civilian attire and donned the uniform of Uncle Sam to fight and die, if need be, that the glory of the flag might be maintained. The obligation of the country can never be paid in money, but the Nation should exercise the greatest diligence to the end that none of those who served should suffer the distress of poverty.

The ranks of the veterans of the Civil War are rapidly thinning. Those who remain and their widows should receive loving care. The effects of exposure, malaria, and so forth, are apparent in many of the boys of the Spanish War. Thousands of them have become more or less incapacitated prematurely by reason of the hardships that they endured. We did well to pass the act of June 5, 1920. It was a fair thing to do. It was also proper that the men in the Regular service should not be forgotten. They rendered service for small compensation. The pay never measured up to the dangers.

It has been my privilege and pleasure to aid many of the men of our various wars or their widows and children in securing what our Government desired that they should have. It is fair to say that the Pension Bureau has always shown a desire to carry out the wishes of Congress in the administration of the pension laws. The work is tremendous, staggering in detail and responsibility. It seeks to do justice and rarely fails.

With the consent of the House I desire to place in the RECORD a statement of pension cases in which I have been of some measure of service during the time that I have been a Member of Congress.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting an address delivered in Chicago on the 21st by Hugh Cooper, engineer, of New York City, on the St. Lawrence waterway.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD an address by Hugh Cooper on the St. Lawrence waterway. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House on a matter of procedure.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, owing to illness in the family of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs [Mr. BUTLER], he will not be here to-morrow to call up the so-called "scrapping bill," and instead the House will consider the bill (H. R. 10442) to authorize an increase in the indebtedness of the Philippine Islands. If that bill is disposed of at a sufficiently early hour, we may take up for consideration one of the bills from the Committee on Banking and Currency objected to to-day, possibly the bill providing for perpetual charters for national banks. On Calendar Wednesday the ordinary calendar business will be taken up, the Committee on Printing having the call.

TRANSFER OF FORT HALE, CONN.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

The next bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11347) authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer and convey to the State of Connecticut all right and title now vested in the United States to lands and buildings thereon known as Fort Hale.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have no special objection to considering the bill in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, but should not like to have it considered in the House.

The SPEAKER. The House will remember that the Chair ruled a year ago that when unanimous consent was given to the consideration of a bill which is on the Union Calendar, unless there was such an objection as has been made by the gentleman from Indiana, the consent was given to the consideration of the bill and also to its consideration in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and of course any Member has the right to demand a separation and demand that it be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the gentleman from Indiana now makes that request. The Chair states it so as to have it understood that if consent is given it is to be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and not in the House. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I do not know I shall object. I do not know that I should object or ought to object to a request of this sort, but I doubt very greatly the wisdom of considering unanimous-consent bills in the way suggested. If we shall establish the policy of going into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of bills on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, I am afraid we shall not get along very well or very far with the legislation on that calendar. It is a matter for the House to determine whether or not we are to go on following the rule and policy that we have followed for many years in this regard or depart therefrom. If we depart from it in the matter of one bill, gentlemen have a perfect right to insist we shall depart from it in the matter of every bill that is brought up for consideration on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will yield.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. My recollection is that until the last Congress the practice which now prevails did not prevail; that until the last Congress, prior to that, on unanimous consent days where a bill was reported the Speaker would ask if there was objection, and if no objection to a Union Calendar bill the House, as I recall, went automatically into the Committee of the Whole House, unless the gentleman in charge asked unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union with regard to each individual bill. At the beginning of the last Congress the Speaker, I think very properly, announced——

Mr. MONDELL. I can recall of few cases where we have gone into the Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is my recollection, and the Speaker at the beginning of the last Congress, very early in the beginning of the last Congress, I think very wisely, announced that he would regard a consent given to consider a bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, even though it be a Union Calendar bill, as consent to consider it in the House as in Committee of the Whole House, and prior to that, I think, consent was given in each individual case.

Mr. MONDELL. All I care to say is that if the House desires to establish the precedent of going into the Committee of the Whole on bills on the Unanimous Consent Calendar it is perfectly agreeable to me.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. If the gentleman will permit, the custom has been in former Congresses and until the present Speaker announced the rule that the Speaker would say after unanimous consent was agreed to, "This bill is on the Union Calendar." Then a gentleman interested in the bill would ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. It took two requests to accomplish what is now accomplished by one request.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, it is true that the right to demand that we go into Committee of the Whole exists, but I recall very few cases where we have considered measures on the Unanimous Consent Calendar in the Committee of the Whole. That can be done. We have not been doing it. We have been getting along very nicely with the Unanimous Consent Calendar. But if gentlemen believe it is wise to establish that precedent I have no objection whatever.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND] if his request that it be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union is based upon some opposition to this bill?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Yes; I have some opposition to the bill, but I shall not confine my remarks entirely to the bill.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. In order to save argument as to what we should do about it, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the next bill.

TRANSFER OF PROPERTY AT LIGHTHOUSE POINT, CONN.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11346) authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer and convey to the State of Connecticut all right and title now vested in the United States to land and buildings thereon known as the old lighthouse property at Lighthouse Point, in the city of New Haven.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill go over without prejudice. I understand that the Secretary of War was erroneously informed as to the facts stated in the report, and I wish to have that report confirmed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 11347 hold its place on the calendar for the same reason.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

LOAN OF COTS TO G. A. R. OF CALIFORNIA AND NEVADA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the House Joint Resolution 300 authorizing the Secretary of War to loan cots, mattresses, and blankets for the use of the Grand Army of the Republic at the California and Nevada State encampment to be held in Riverside, Calif., in May, 1922.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire whether the gentleman introducing this bill or the gentleman reporting it can inform the House whether we have ever loaned the use of Army supplies in the way of tents to other than the National Grand Army of the Republic or the United Confederate Veterans?

Mr. SWING. The Committee on Military Affairs has reported favorably three bills to the House of this kind, and the House passed last May the bill of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CABLE] granting this privilege to the Grand Army of the Republic of the State of Ohio.

Mr. STAFFORD. Did that bill become a law?

Mr. SWING. I do not know that it did.

Mr. STAFFORD. I believe when the bill passed the House the encampment had already been held.

Mr. SWING. No; I think not.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am prompted to ask that question by the very positive objection made by the Secretary of War to this character of legislation. I assume the gentleman is very fully acquainted with it. I would like to read it for the consideration of the House. It says:

> Since July of last year I have consistently declined to authorize the loan of supplies or equipment or to concur in or recommend the passage of acts authorizing loans.

I do not recall a bill to which the Secretary of War has so positively expressed his objections.

Mr. SWING. The situation is this, if I may state it. The articles that are desired are stored at the edge of the city limits of Riverside. They are not in use, but they were stored there on the close down of the camp at March Field, which was used during the war for aviation purposes. The property sought to be used is within 2½ miles of the place where they expect to use it, and the bill provides that all expenses shall be defrayed by the Grand Army of the Republic, and, in addition to that, that they shall put up a bond to return them in as good a condition as they were to start with.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am aware of that. The Secretary of War sets forth the claim that they would not be in the same condition after usage. But if the House has passed a similar bill, I will not press any objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Reserving the right to object, it seems to me, if I may be permitted, that there have been precedents established during a good many years in Congress about this thing. There is a general statute that provides for the loaning of tents and canvas, the shelter, to these various patriotic organizations composed of veterans of former wars. That has been the law for quite a number of years. There is no general objection to it, because there is not that degree of wear and tear in the handling of canvas for shelter as there is in the intimate use of bedding and bedclothes, cots, and that sort of thing.

They are movable, and they are handled through the day, and it is obvious to all who have had experience in outdoor life that the wear and tear is more. So it has been the policy for years to limit under the general law the loaning of these things to the loaning of the shelter which the Government has in use in various ways, and which can stand long outdoor exposure from time to time without any particular difficulty.

Mr. SWING. May I make this observation: First, I have, at the suggestion of Mr. MILLER, who reports the bill, an amendment to eliminate mattresses, on the suggestion which he made that they might be soiled and would be difficult to clean. The cots and blankets will not be used out of doors, but they have public halls in which they will be used. The city of Riverside is one of the prettiest little cities in southern California, with a population of about 15,000, and the hotel accommodations are not adequate for as large a crowd as is expected. They would expect to place these cots indoors.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Will the gentleman from Vermont withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Certainly.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I understand that the other branch of Congress did not pass any bill that provides for the loan of blankets and pillows, but it does permit bills to go through for cots and tents. So it occurs that if it calls for bedding or pillows to be loaned the bill will not have a chance to go through the other body. I have no objection to the bill. I think we ought to loan them.

Mr. SWING. Mr. Speaker, I intend to take out the word "mattresses."

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The question in my mind is even back of all that. Of course, the use of these supplies means inspection and examination each time after they are used, because they deteriorate. But if we start in to loan that part of the paraphernalia of military supplies where are we going to end?

Mr. SWING. The answer to that is this: The precedent has been established for some time past of making an exception of those two organizations, the Grand Army of the Republic and the Confederate Veterans' Association of the South. Their members are decreasing in number, as you know, each year; each year there are fewer and fewer of them. They meet only once a year. It will do the bedding good to take it out and air it once a year and have it shaken up and cleaned and put back, and it will last longer than it otherwise would.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Yes. Every time you use a pound of butter you improve it. [Laughter.] That is very susceptible of demonstration. If you will consult the law you will find that other organizations beyond those of the Civil War, the Grand Army of the Republic and the Confederate Veterans' Association, have been included in these loans. The Spanish-American War Veterans have been included. This is not simply a remote precedent that is clasped down by a golden sentiment, a fond something that will disappear in time. We have now 4,000,000 ex-soldiers of the World War, and we will be asked to allow for them the things that you are now asking to have.

Mr. SWING. By a letter from the Secretary of War to the Speaker on June 22 he stated that because of the reasons I have stated, the diminishing number of members in these two organizations, he had no objection to loaning to the Grand Army of the Republic and the Confederate Veterans' Association the cots and blankets for their annual encampments.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWING. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. Is this loan of these things to be made to the Grand Army of the Republic direct, or will they be loaned only in their name, and turned over to private persons to be put in halls and public buildings, and then let them charge hotel rates for sleeping quarters?

Mr. SWING. No. They are to be loaned to the executive committee of the Grand Army of the Republic. The cots and blankets are to be put up in the city halls and used by the veterans without charge.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Would the gentleman be willing to follow that up with a similar loan to every other patriotic organization that might ask for it?

Mr. SWING. The practice of the Secretary of War has been to limit it to the Grand Army of the Republic and the Confederate Veterans' Association.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. We are the legislative body. The executive department can not do anything unless we consent to it. Does the gentleman think it advisable so to dispose of the property of the War Department that every patriotic organization can come in and get what it wants, and in that way save expense to itself?

Mr. SWING. These occasions come along infrequently, not oftener than once a year. This request comes from a place where the goods are now kept in storage and not in use. I think the wear on them is so infinitesimal, so incapable of being estimated, that it is negligible, because if it could be estimated it would be paid for.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Has the gentleman ever been in one of these camps?

Mr. SWING. Yes; I have been in camp.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Have you cleaned up afterwards?

Mr. SWING. I have policed my share of the camp.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. We have this same argument every time. We come out at the same hole we go in at. The Senate does its duty eventually. I think we ought to do our duty here.

Mr. SWING. I do not think this request should be refused unless there is some valid objection to it, and none has yet been offered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to loan to the executive committee of the Grand Army of the Republic, at Riverside, Calif., having in charge the arrangements for the State encampment of said order, to be held in Riverside, Calif., in May, 1922, such blankets, mattresses, and cots as may be required at said meeting: Provided, That no expense shall be caused the United States Government by the delivery and return of such property, the same to be delivered to said executive committee at Riverside, Calif., at such time prior to the date of such meeting as may be agreed upon by the Secretary of War and the chairman of said executive committee: Provided further, That the Secretary of War shall, before delivering such property, take from the said chairman of said executive committee a good and sufficient bond for the safe return of said property in good order and condition, the whole transaction to be without expense to the Government of the United States of America.

Mr. SWING. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer two amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SWING: Page 1, line 8, strike out the word "mattresses," and also strike out of the title of the resolution the word "mattresses."

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be heard on the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would state that the amendment to the title is not in order at this time.

Mr. SWING. Then, Mr. Speaker, I offer the first part of it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. The gentleman from Arkansas is recognized.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the fact that the gentleman from California [Mr. SWING] feels impelled to offer that amendment to facilitate the passage of the bill. Personally I am opposed to the adoption of the amendment.

These old men are very few. We have thousands of mattresses and blankets stored away in Army camps all over the country. Suppose these old veterans at their encampment do happen to destroy a few of these mattresses. It will be a very small sum. If we withhold this privilege from them the United States Government will benefit very little, because the people who are capable of buying these mattresses and blankets will not get the benefit of them.

Down at Camp Pike in my State a New York concern offered, I think, $400,000 for all the supplies at Camp Pike. Anyone who offered a bid had to put up $100,000. The War Department refused to let men bid on the blankets and other things separately. It refused to let one of my constituents who was prepared to make good by proper bond bid on the supplies separately, and after protests from one of the Senators from my State the Secretary of War refused to approve the bid of this New York concern. One of my Senators protested against the low sum. The governor of the State said, "Why, the State will buy them for $100,000 more than that." But a few days ago the press reports called attention to the fact that the same New York company showed up the other day and claimed they had bought under a separate bid all the blankets at Camp Pike. Yet I had been told no divided bids would be permitted. If one of my constituents had been given a chance at the blankets and shoes, two important things, he would have handled them under an arrangement that would have brought the Government several hundred thousand dollars more than they were offered. So I say under your present policy of making it impossible for anybody except those having large capital to bid on these supplies the United States Government is not going to get much out of them.

These blankets and these mattresses and these tents are going. Look at what you got for some of your tents recently. A mere song. The man who bought them sold them out in job lots for many, many times more than the Government got. And now you quibble about these old veterans spoiling a few cheap mattresses. Let the other end of the Capitol kill these bills if they want to. Why, Mr. Speaker, in my veins flows the blood of one who followed the fortunes of Lee, in the saddle behind that wizard of cavalry, Nathan Buford Forrest; and as a son of the South I want to say to you that so far as we are concerned these old veterans of the Union Army can have these blankets and mattresses and welcome. Suppose they do soil or destroy a few of them. Let them have both mattresses and blankets and be comfortable. [Applause.] Why quibble about a little cost of renovation? There are only a few of these old men left. In handling a matter like this, gentlemen, you can not afford to quibble over cold business details. You gentlemen of the North have been fair to the Confederates by loaning them tents for their encampments. You have made a rule that you will let these tents go both to the G. A. R. and to the Confederate veterans. That was a proper thing to do, and I as a son of the South appreciate it. Nobody can accuse me of playing politics in what I am saying now, because these men can not vote for me; they do not live in my district; but I want to say to you that when I see these old men on both sides tottering along, when I realize that in a few more years they will be in their graves, it kind of makes me resentful to hear gentlemen quibble over the fact that maybe they will soil a few mattresses or lose a few blankets. God bless them, let them have every blanket and mattress we have got stored down there on the edge of that city, and if they do not get them back it is all right with me. If those old fellows take home a blanket apiece it will be all right so far as I am concerned. [Applause.]

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the amendment. I do not intend to make one of these traditional North and South speeches or to open any beautiful flasks of mellow sentiment or anything of that kind, because we are not here for that purpose. We are here to do business and we are here as the custodians of Federal property. It is a cold matter of responsibility in a fiduciary capacity absolutely. Whatever may be our personal inclinations toward the fine old soldiers of the North or the South, that is a personal matter and not a governmental one.

I think it only fair to direct the attention of the committee to the fact that there is a statute which long ago settled the policy of this thing, which was devised for the express purpose of heading off any tumult of oratory or exuberance of rhetoric that may take place every time some patriotic organization wants to borrow some tents. So the supplying of tents is limited to specified patriotic organizations. Everybody agreed to that, and it works automatically. Every now and then somebody presents a bill which, like this one, contains an exception to the provisions of the general statute, and that exception, it seems to me, should be tested out not by our sentiment, not by the question as to whether we would deny these fine old soldiers some personal comfort or some reasonable privilege, but by the question as to the policy of the administration of the Government with regard to it and with regard to other men who make like requests based upon that very incident which they will take as a precedent.

It is true that the soldiers of 1861 are almost completely retired from their activities and that the probability is that there will be very little demand for these supplies from them or their fellows; but there are still in middle life the soldiers of the War with Spain who, however comparatively limited in numbers, are themselves followed to-day by very young men, the 4,000,000 veterans of the World War, who, God bless them, we hope to have with us for the next 75 years.

This is a question of continuing policy, not a matter of beautiful sentiment that we can hook onto something that happened 60 years ago.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. I would like to have the gentleman's opinion from a practical standpoint. If we are going to make this loan at all, should we not loan the mattresses as well as the cots?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I do not think so.

Mr. BEGG. Nobody would certainly expect one of these old veterans to sleep on a bare cot.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I do not think they will go there to lie on bare cots. I do not think anybody intends they shall.

Mr. BEGG. Then why the bill?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Because it is easier to provide bedding than it is the cot to hold it up.

Mr. BEGG. I am not so sure about that. Is it easier to provide a mattress for a bed than it is to provide a little $1.50 cot?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I do not know that I am altogether qualified to pass upon that question of housekeeping.

Mr. BEGG. If the gentleman will think a moment he will realize that a mattress costs more than a cot.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Perhaps it does; but the men who attend these encampments, the few hours that they do sleep, are not very particular whether they sleep on a mattress or not.

Mr. BEGG. I do not believe the gentleman will find that the men who are going to attend this encampment are in a physical condition which will enable them to be as careless of their personal comfort as that.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. They are the same old boys that they used to be, and when they go to these encampments they go to have a good time.

Now, it seems to me it is only a question of the practical viewpoint whether we are going to adopt a continuing policy which means that the War Department property will be scattered from Harlem to breakfast, to use parliamentary language, every summer each year for the next 75 years that we will be having requests from the 4,000,000 soldiers of the World War. No one can pretend that there is not a destructive waste in the employment of such intimate paraphernalia as bedding.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Certainly.

Mr. WINGO. How much per mattress did the last sale of Army supplies bring?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I do not know, and, moreover, that is beside the question. It has a little vague, but still an appreciable reference to campaign material.

Mr. WINGO. I am not talking about campaign material.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Neither am I, and that is the reason I avoid the subject.

Mr. WINGO. I am talking about the facts.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. So am I, and therefore keep away from campaign material.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BEGG) there were—13 ayes and 16 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SWING. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 8, after the word "meeting," strike out the semicolon and insert a comma and the words "but not to exceed 500 of each."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SWING a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

RESTORING LANDS IN LOUISIANA TO PUBLIC DOMAIN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 5224) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to certify to the Secretary of the Interior for restoration to the public domain lands in the State of Louisiana not needed for naval purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill go over without prejudice.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I reported the bill from the Public Lands Committee. The author of the bill is the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MARTIN], who is home on account of the serious condition brought about by the existence of the flood. He communicated with me last week and asked me if I would look after this matter. He says it is a matter of great importance to the people of his section and that it is urgent. I would appreciate it, and I am sure the gentleman from Louisiana would appreciate it more than I can express, if the gentleman from Wisconsin would permit the bill to be disposed of.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have examined the bill and report, and there are certain features that I wish to examine more in detail.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. It might be that I or some other member of the Public Lands Committee could enlighten the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. The bill will come up under the regular order two weeks from to-day. These people have been in possession of the land for more than a quarter of a century.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. It is to perfect the title and raise money which is very badly needed.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; if I have the floor.

Mr. LAYTON. I am not interested in this bill, but it raises a question of law or principle connected with a matter in which I am interested. Do I understand that as a matter of fact Congress has the right to restore Government property, real estate, to the rightful owners when the Government ceases to have use for it?

Mr. STAFFORD. The Government has the right at any time to cede its property.

Mr. LAYTON. The reason I ask is that I am a member of a committee where that question has been brought up, and it was stated that there was no way to get back to a State or a county real estate which the Government had ceded to it except by a public sale to the highest bidder.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is a general law which provides for the sale of parcels of land in the case which the gentleman instances. But, of course, Congress can repeal, amend, or qualify the law.

Mr. LAYTON. I am only asking this for future reference to get it into the RECORD.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. WHEELER, for 4 days, on account of important business.

To Mr. MONTAGUE, for 2 days, on account of death of a relative.

To Mr. BARBOUR, for 7 days, on account of important business.

To Mr. STEVENSON, for to-day, on account of sickness.

To Mr. ATKESON, for 30 days, on account of important business.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, Mr. KINDRED was given leave to withdraw from the files of the Committee on Military Affairs certificate of Joseph J. Donnelly, deceased, Sixty-sixth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 33 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, May 2, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Mr. LOGAN: Committee on Claims. H. R. 6929. A bill for the relief of Horace E. Walker; with an amendment (Rept. No. 949). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11469) granting an increase of pension to George Gorham; Committee on Pensions discharged and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

An act (S. 2563) to provide for the completion of the bridge across the Little Colorado River near Leupp, Ariz.; Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce discharged and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. DEMPSEY: A bill (H. R. 11489) to authorize the enlargement, extension, and remodeling of the Federal building at Lockport, N. Y.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. KAHN: A bill (H. R. 11490) to enlarge the powers and duties of the Department of Justice in relation to the repression of prostitution for the protection of the armed forces; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WEBSTER: A bill (H. R. 11491) to continue the land office at Waterville, in the State of Washington, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. STRONG of Kansas: A bill (H. R. 11492) providing for the transfer or sale of Army and Navy equipment to the Boy Scouts of America; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. TOWNER: A bill (H. R. 11493) to amend the War Finance Corporation act, approved May 5, 1918, and the act amendatory of the same, approved August 24, 1921, by extending for one year the powers and authority of the War Finance Corporation; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. VINSON: A bill (H. R. 11494) to amend the Federal farm loan act so that actual farmers may borrow money for indebtedness due by them when not incurred for agricultural purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. WARD of New York: Resolution (H. Res. 335) for the immediate consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 12, authorizing the President to require the United States Sugar Equalization Board (Inc.) to take over and dispose of 13,902 tons of sugar imported from the Argentine Republic; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. CLARKE of New York: Resolution (H. REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. OVERMAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 3040) to amend section 266, chapter 11, of the Judicial Code, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 682) thereon.

Mr. BROUSSARD, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10941) authorizing the Postmaster General to grant permission to use special canceling stamps or postmarking dies, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 683) thereon.

Mr. BURSUM, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the following bills, reported them each with amendments and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 8261) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors (Rept. No. 684); and

A bill (H. R. 8874) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war (Rept. No. 685).

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SPENCER:

A bill (S. 3539) to amend section 6 of the act of November 23, 1921 (Public, No. 96, 67th Cong.); to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. BURSUM:

A bill (S. 3540) fixing the fees of the examining surgeons in the Bureau of Pensions; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NORBECK:

A bill (S. 3541) to establish the Wonderland National Park in the State of South Dakota; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

A bill (S. 3542) granting an increase of pension to Carl W. Carlson (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JONES of New Mexico:

A bill (S. 3543) granting a pension to Mary R. Cooney; to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENT TO SENATE RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. STANLEY submitted an amendment providing for the improvement of Canoe Creek, Henderson County, Ky., at its juncture with the Ohio River with a view of dredging and establishing a harbor of refuge, intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3017) authorizing appropriations for the prosecution and maintenance of public works on canals, rivers, and harbors, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

COCONINO AND TUSAYAN NATIONAL FORESTS, ARIZ.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 7812) to extend the time for cutting timber in the Coconino and Tusayan National Forests, Ariz., be taken from the calendar and recommitted to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PROTECTION OF MISSISSIPPI RIVER LEVEES.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that House Joint Resolution 319, just received from the House, be laid before the Senate and read at length and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 319) making available funds for preserving and protecting, in the present flood emergency, the levees on the Mississippi River, its tributaries, and outlets not under jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission was read the first time by its title, the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That a sum not to exceed $200,000 from funds heretofore appropriated for improvement of rivers and harbors and which remain in the Treasury unexpended because the works or projects for which the same were appropriated have been completed or have been recommended for abandonment, is hereby made available for expenditure by and under the direction of the Secretary of War and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers for the purpose of protecting life and property by preserving and maintaining during the present flood emergency the levees not under Government control on the Mississippi River, its tributaries and outlets.

Mr. WARREN. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to report the joint resolution back favorably, without amendment, and to ask for its immediate consideration and passage.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONTINUANCE OF GOVERNMENT PUBLICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 132) to provide for the continuance of certain Government publications, which were to strike out all after the resolving clause and to insert:

That hereafter the head of any executive department, independent office, or establishment of the Government is hereby authorized, with the approval of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, to use from the appropriations available for printing and binding such sums as may be necessary for the printing of journals, magazines, periodicals, and similar publications as he shall certify in writing to be necessary properly to conduct the ordinary activities required by law of such department, office, or establishment: Provided, That there may be printed, in addition to those necessary for such official activities, not to exceed 2,000 copies for free distribution by the department, office, or establishment issuing the same: Provided further, That the Public Printer shall print such additional copies thereof and of any other Government publication, not confidential in character, as may be required for sale to the public by the superintendent of documents at the cost of printing and binding, plus 10 per cent, without limit as to the number of copies to any one applicant who agrees not to resell or distribute the same for profit; but the printing of such additional copies shall be subject to regulation by the Joint Committee on Printing and shall not interfere with the prompt execution of printing for the Government.

SEC. 2. That section 3 of the sundry civil appropriation act for 1922, approved March 4, 1921, be, and is hereby, repealed.

And to amend the title so as to read: "Joint resolution to authorize the printing of journals, magazines, periodicals, and similar publications, and for other purposes."

Mr. MOSES. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House, request a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. MOSES, Mr. CAPPER, and Mr. FLETCHER conferees on the part of the Senate.

HOUSE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

The following bills and joint resolution were severally read twice by title and referred as indicated below:

H. R. 4898. An act to declare the Tombigbee River nonnavigable from its source to its intersection with the boundary line between the counties of Itawamba and Monroe; and

H. R. 6313. An act authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to grant a right of way for a public highway to the county of Skagit, Wash.; to the Committee on Commerce.

H. R. 11054. An act to validate certain deeds executed by members of the Five Civilized Tribes, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

H. R. 11131. An act to authorize the appropriation of additional sums for Federal aid in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

H. J. Res. 300. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to loan cots, mattresses, and blankets for the use of the Grand Army of the Republic at the California and Nevada State encampment to be held in Riverside, Calif., in May, 1922; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

HEIRS OF NELS RUDI.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, on yesterday I introduced the bill (S. 3536) for the relief of the heirs of Nels Rudi, which was referred to the Committee on Finance. As the bill relates in a way to the war-risk insurance act, I think it should go to the Committee on Pensions. I ask that the Committee on Finance be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that it be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not hear what bill the Senator referred to.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Senate bill 3536 introduced by me on yesterday. It is not on the calendar. It was introduced yesterday and went to the Committee on Finance. I asked that it go to the Committee on Pensions, but apparently my request was not heard at the Secretary's desk. The bill presents a rather remarkable situation of affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Finance be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill 3536 and that it be referred to the Committee on Pensions. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes, Mr. President. I first want to know what the bill is.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. As I said, the bill presents a rather remarkable condition of affairs. Three brothers by the name of Rudi, residing in Rosebud County, Mont., held a family conference about the time war was declared. One of them was married and the other two were bachelors. They concluded that the two bachelors ought to go to war, which they did. Each of them took out life insurance under the war risk insurance act in favor of the brother who remained at home. One of them was killed in action, the insurance then going to his surviving brothers. The other brother contracted pneumonia and died, his insurance going to his surviving brother who had remained at home. That brother then took the "flu" and died, leaving his wife and an infant son, who would inherit whatever estate he had. However, the Veterans' Bureau holds that the monthly payment of the insurance under existing law goes to the parents of the surviving brother living in Norway instead of to the widow and son. This bill provides that the monthly payments made hereafter shall go to the heirs at law instead of to the parents in Norway.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the bill was properly referred. The bill creating the Veterans' Bureau was considered by the Finance Committee.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If there is any insistence at all, I shall not ask for a change of reference.

Mr. SMOOT. I repeat that I think the bill was properly referred, Mr. President.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not think so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to discharging the Committee on Finance from the consideration of the bill and referring it to the Committee on Pensions?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; Mr. President, I object.

DISMISSAL OF EX-SERVICE MEN FROM CIVIL SERVICE.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, in view of the interest displayed by some Senators to be the first to meet the caravan bringing the petition for the soldiers' bonus to the Capitol, and therefore to have their names first recorded as favoring a soldiers' bonus, I am prompted to refer to three resolutions which I introduced some weeks ago attempting to protect some of these very soldiers in their right to work for the Government. Those three resolutions were referred to the Committee on Civil Service, at the request of the chairman of that committee. I knew then, as every other Senator knew, that those resolutions were being sent to their grave. The two most important of those resolutions came out of that committee on yesterday with adverse reports. The committee has done well what it was predicted it would do—that it would strangle those resolutions. It has done what the administration wanted it to do. It has protected from inquiry the indefensible act upon the part of the President when he arbitrarily and in the face of the law dismissed honorably discharged soldiers and sailors from the classified service. It has protected this administration against having to account to the Senate for its willful disregard of the law and its inhumane treatment of the ex-service men of the country. I am not surprised that it did it. No one expected it to do anything else.

However, there is a time coming, Mr. President, when this administration, high and mighty as it feels itself to be, will have to account to its superior—the American people. It seems but fitting, therefore, that I shall briefly refer to the fact that this week will bring to us the fifth anniversary of the enactment of the so-called selective draft act. There are here Senators who five years ago this week made this Chamber ring with their eloquence, who, to hear them say it, only regretted that age made it impossible for them to don the uniform and carry a gun at the front. They expressed their envy of the young men whom they were sending to the battle front and some of them to their death under the selective draft act, regretting that the boys were to go and that they were to stay. They foretold with what great honors and respect this country would receive the soldiers in the years to come, and how, after they had saved civilization at the peril of their lives, the Nation, through all future years, would express to them their gratitude.

If those same Senators now, after five short years, reflect the sentiment of this country, they reflect a sorry picture, indeed, for they appear to believe that the country in five years has forgotten all of its debt of gratitude, as Senators have forgotten all their fervid oratory and are willing for political preferment to protect the administration which is depriving honest and honorably discharged soldiers and sailors from the right to earn an honest livelihood. I say if they reflect the sentiment of this country it is a poor public sentiment, indeed; but I deny it, Mr. President; they do not. They simply reflect the sentiment of this administration, and the administration reflects the sentiment of Wall Street. It does not reflect the sentiment of the homes and the firesides throughout this country. This administration reflects the sentiment that enabled a man to buy a seat in this body and keep it. It reflects the sentiment that corruptionists have greater rights than do honest people. It reflects the sentiment, Mr. President, that made the President of these United States come before the Senate and make the majority Members of it recommit the soldiers' bonus legislation, when only four votes had been recorded against it at the time it was made the unfinished business of the Senate; but I deny, Mr. President, that that reflects the honest sentiment of the American people.

Of course, when that is said, the Republican Senators answer back that they represent an administration that received a majority of 7,000,000 votes. But those 7,000,000 votes, Mr. President, were cast by men who took the Republican candidates at their face value and who believed what the candidates said. The voters who cast the 7,000,000 votes which gave the Republican Party that majority have been walking the streets for seven months now, looking for a job in order to earn an honest living, and they are not going to repeat their blunder of 1920. The Senators who are so anxious to reflect the will of the present administration and subvert their own opinions and destroy the right of honorably discharged soldiers and sailors to earn an honest living under the Government will find out when the people speak that they represent nothing but a repudiated administration.

This administration, Mr. President, has accomplished some things; whether they be laudable or not the people will determine. As I have said, it has accomplished the throttling of legislation offered to pay adjusted compensation to soldiers and sailors of the last Great War; it has to its credit the seating of a Senator who bought his seat in the Senate; it has given to its credit the denial to a minister who was designated to offer a public prayer at the opening of the so-called Limitation of Armament Conference the right to use the name of Jesus Christ in his prayer.

Oh, Mr. President, it has achieved something else. A member of the present Cabinet, selected, so far as I know, for one single accomplishment, received the biggest fee that I ever knew anybody to obtain for securing a pardon for a convicted criminal. I speak of the Attorney General. I am informed that he received $25,000 to get Mr. Morse out of the penitentiary under a plea that he was afflicted with tuberculosis; and now it becomes his painful duty to put him back in the penitentiary for again swindling the Government, unless some reason can be found to believe that the gentleman has again contracted a dangerous malady. The Attorney General got $25,000 for that achievement, I am told, and wanted more, and when he did not get it he was given a seat in the Cabinet for what he had accomplished. The President who appointed him has that to his credit—good or bad, I will let the American people say.

Recently, Mr. President, a number of children—misguided it may be, unwise it may be, but believing, from the newspaper stories, the President had a heart, that he was sympathetic—came here on a weary crusade, asking that there be pardoned, not some rich criminal who had defrauded the Government out of millions of dollars and who was able to pay munificent fees to have somebody lobby for his pardon, but little children of humble parents, the fathers of two of them being ministers of the gospel—good or bad, I do not know—came here to see the President and on their little bended knees to ask him to pardon their fathers. They were not able to hire lawyers, Mr. President; and what happened? They were refused an audience with the President of these United States. If they had been able, I presume, to have paid $25,000 for a lawyer, such as Mr. Daugherty was before he came to Washington—a specialist in getting pardons for rich criminals—they would have had a hearing; but, having nothing but the hope of mercy in their little hearts and nothing to clothe them but their tattered rags, they were denied a hearing.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, I am amazed at the statement of the Senator from Arkansas. Were it not that I have such great faith in his integrity and in his careful manner of investigation, I should doubt the accuracy of that charge even against the Attorney General.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. CARAWAY. I have the floor and will permit an interruption, although I do not intend to lose the floor?

Mr. STANLEY. If the Senator from Indiana will permit me, I shall be through in about a minute.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. STANLEY. I was going to say that, as an American citizen, I hope that ugly and revolting thing did not happen. In the State of Kentucky, for instance, it is a serious offense to accept a fee for a service of that character. Whether it is penalized by the State of Arkansas I do not know; but the pardon attorney, the man who prostitutes his political influence to delude an executive for a filthy retainer deserves little consideration. I do not care to comment on that; I merely want to ask the Senator if his State penalizes such unprofessional conduct, as do so many States of the Union?

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I am proud to say that the kind of lawyers we license to practice in my State do not have to be penalized to prevent them from doing a thing like that.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon an interruption?

Mr. CARAWAY. I will.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. We did not hear over on this side what it was that the Senator said about the Attorney General. Will he kindly repeat it?

Mr. CARAWAY. I know the Senator did not hear it, because all the Senators over there got busy in order not to hear what was being said. I said that I understood that the greatest achievement of the Attorney General was that he got a pardon for a criminal, and got a fee of $25,000 for doing it.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Does the Senator mean since he became Attorney General?

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, no.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. May I further question the Senator?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. To what case does the Senator refer?

Mr. CARAWAY. The Morse case.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Does the Senator charge on his responsibility as a Senator that Mr. Daugherty, even before he was Attorney General, received a fee for helping to get Mr. Morse out of the penitentiary?

Mr. CARAWAY. I charged that that was a matter of public information. I was not, of course, present when any contract was made. I will say that I have heard it so often that I think it is true, without question.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. The Senator, then, accepts a rumor as true, and charges it on the floor of the Senate?

Mr. CARAWAY. Does the Senator from Indiana say that it is not true?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I do.

Mr. CARAWAY. On the Senator's own personal knowledge?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I do.

Mr. CARAWAY. That Mr. Daugherty did not represent Morse?

Mr. WATSON. I did not say that he did not represent Morse; but I say on my knowledge of the situation that he received no fee for the service rendered, nor did he represent Morse directly, according to my understanding.

Mr. CARAWAY. Did he indirectly represent him?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. No.

Mr. CARAWAY. Why did the Senator say, then, that he did not directly represent him?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I meant by that that my understanding of the situation is that he was representing his client, and that the testimony of Mr. Morse was necessary, and that in that way he had contact with Mr. Morse; but he did not get him out of the penitentiary; he had not anything to do with getting him out of the penitentiary; and he received no fee for getting him out of the penitentiary.

Mr. CARAWAY. How does the Senator know that?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I know it from the language of the Attorney General.

Mr. CARAWAY. Did he tell the Senator that he did not?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. He did.

Mr. CARAWAY. That he never got a cent for it?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Not for that.

Mr. CARAWAY. For what did he get his fee, then?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. He did not get any fee from Morse.

Mr. CARAWAY. Why does the Senator say, "Not for that"? Why does the Senator juggle with language? Why does he not say that he did or did not get a cent?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. That is the thing that the Senator is charging here. I say that for that he did not get a fee.

Mr. CARAWAY. For what did he get his fee?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I do not know whether he ever got a fee from Morse for another purpose or not.

Mr. CARAWAY. I did not think the Senator knew.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. But I do know that what the Senator says here is not true.

Mr. CARAWAY. What is that?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Of course, I am not charging——

Mr. CARAWAY. What is it that the Senator says he knows is not true?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I am not charging that the Senator said anything he knew not to be true, of course.

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, well, then, let the Senator be a little bit plain about his language.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I am charging that Mr. Daugherty did not get a fee from Mr. Morse for getting him out of the penitentiary or helping to get him out of the penitentiary.

Mr. CARAWAY. For what did he get his fee?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I do not know whether he ever got a fee or not.

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, well, if the Senator does not know, how does he know that he did not get it for that?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I do not know whether he ever got a fee from Morse for some other purpose or not.

Mr. CARAWAY. If that is all the information the Senator has——

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. No; I have information on this matter that the Senator is talking about, and that is what he is charging.

Mr. CARAWAY. I ask the Senator, then, what he did get his fee for?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. So far as I know, he never got any fee.

Mr. CARAWAY. Does the Senator know that he did not get any?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I know that he did not get any fee from Morse for getting him out of the penitentiary or helping to get him out.

Mr. CARAWAY. Did he get any fee at all from Morse?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. He may have gotten one 10 years ago. I do not know anything about that. Whether he was ever Morse's attorney or not is a different proposition. As to that I do not know, but I know that in this instance he got nothing.

Mr. CARAWAY. When did the Senator discuss this matter with the Attorney General?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. On various occasions.

Mr. CARAWAY. How came the Senator to discuss it with the Attorney General?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Because I had heard the rumor.

Mr. CARAWAY. Did the Senator believe it?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. The rumor?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I did not.

Mr. CARAWAY. Then why did the Senator go to the Attorney General with it, if he did not believe it?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Because I am the kind of a man that if any one of my friends is involved in any trouble I go and talk to my friend about it.

Mr. CARAWAY. And the Attorney General told the Senator it was not true?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. It was not true.

Mr. CARAWAY. Did the Senator then ask him what he did get the fee for?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I never asked him about any fee, of course, because he said he did not get any.

Mr. CARAWAY. Let me ask the Senator whether this was the truth, then—that he tried to get that fee, and it was so large that the prisoner would not pay it?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Oh, no; nothing of that kind, of course.

Mr. CARAWAY. All right.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. But let me ask the Senator a question. Suppose that Mr. Daugherty did get a fee for representing Mr. Morse. He was a private citizen. He was a practicing lawyer out in Columbus. Suppose that he did take the employment to help get this man out of the penitentiary—was there anything wrong in that?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes, sir; it was so absolutely wrong that, in my judgment, an attorney who accepts a fee to influence an administration to grant a pardon ought to be stricken from the rolls.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. MOSES. Taking fees from Mr. Morse at any time is a reprehensible thing, is it?

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator from New Hampshire is just as nearly correct with his information on that point as he is on anything else. We were not discussing that. I said that if he took a fee to influence an administration to pardon Mr. Morse it was wrong.

Mr. MOSES. Now, I ask the Senator if taking a fee from Mr. Morse to influence an administration to do something else would be wrong?

Mr. CARAWAY. I do not know what the question of the Senator from New Hampshire may imply.

Mr. MOSES. I will state to the Senator, if he will wait. I understand that Mr. William G. McAdoo has taken very large fees from Mr. Morse for appearing before boards and commissions and members of the Government under the previous administration in connection with the very contracts for which the Attorney General has now indicted Mr. Morse.

Mr. CARAWAY. Well, maybe he did.

Mr. MOSES. That is not a matter of rumor; that is a matter of public record.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am glad to know it. I do not know whether the thing he did was right or wrong. I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire, however, that if a man assumes the rôle of a lobbyist and conceals his interest in order to influence the administration either to get a contract or to get a pardon, he falls without the pale, and I do not think he is entitled to any consideration for so doing.

Mr. MOSES. When Mr. McAdoo is running for the Presidency the Senator from Arkansas can give his opinions more at length about that.

Mr. CARAWAY. I shall be very much pleased to do that; but I should like the evidence of what the actual transaction is before I am asked to pass upon it. I have nothing but the rather vague statement of the Senator.

Mr. MOSES. The Senator did not ask for any evidence about Mr. Daugherty when he took a rumor and stated it on the floor, and then went on to testify as if it were a fact proven.

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes, sir; and so far as I know yet, it is true.

Mr. MOSES. And, if I may add, the Senator is constantly doing that, Mr. President—putting words into the mouths of other people, and taking newspaper stories and rumors here in connection with this debate which has been going on on his part now for some weeks in connection with trivial affairs and constantly distorting the subject.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. CARAWAY. Just a minute; let me answer my very good-natured friend from New Hampshire, who can not make an assertion without growing angry about it. Let me say that any statement I have made here about what has transpired I have fortunately been able to prove. I can not get an investigation to get the sworn testimony, because the majority of the Committee on Civil Service will not let me have the investigation; but I shall not waste time quibbling with the two Senators—one from Indiana and one from New Hampshire—who are so anxious to defend the administration, right or wrong.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator a question. The Senator, as I understand, is talking about the ethics of the legal profession.

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Did the Senator ever accept a fee to help get a man pardoned after he had been convicted?

Mr. CARAWAY. No; I did not.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Never, at any time?

Mr. CARAWAY. Never, at any time, directly or indirectly; and I never will.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I must say that my record as a practicing attorney has not been the same as that of the Senator.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am glad of that.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I have taken fees for the purpose of trying to get men out of the penitentiary after having been convicted, after I had made investigations and had come to the conclusion that mistakes had been made. I have taken fees in cases of that kind. There was nothing reprehensible about it, nothing contrary to the practice of the profession in its highest ethics; and I imagine that most of the lawyers over on the other side and most of the lawyers over here have done the same thing, with an approving conscience, I may say.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am glad to know that the conscience of the Senator from Indiana will approve anything he does.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I do approve that sort of thing. If, after investigation——

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield now to the Senator from Kentucky. The Senator from Indiana can plead guilty later on.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Let me finish my sentence, please.

Mr. CARAWAY. All right.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. If, after investigation by an attorney, he comes to the conclusion that a man has been wrongly convicted, or that there were mitigating circumstances that were not submitted to the jury, and, knowing that, he comes to the conclusion that a man should be pardoned, it is perfectly legitimate, from my viewpoint, for him to take employment to have him released from prison.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I concede that if the Senator from Indiana feels that when he was in court he did not properly represent his client, then maybe his duty would extend to appealing to the Executive for mercy. That is a question about which I am not going to express any opinion.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. CARAWAY. I will yield to the Senator from Kentucky in just one minute; but what is curious about it is, if the Senator from Indiana thinks it is such a laudable thing to do, why he rose in so much haste to defend the Attorney General from the charge of having done that.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Because it was not true that the Attorney General had done it, according to my understanding.

Mr. CARAWAY. Just a minute, Mr. President. I have the floor, and I am perfectly willing to hear the Senator from Indiana in a minute.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I thank the Senator.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator thought so much of the rumor that the Attorney General had accepted a fee to secure the pardon of Morse and felt that it was doing the Attorney General such a grave injustice, that, as a friend of the Attorney General, he rushed down to his office to make inquiry if he was guilty of this offense and then came back rather heatedly to deny that he ever did it. That is not quite in keeping with the Senator's declaration that it was perfectly honorable for him to do it. If it was, why did the Senator ask him about it at all?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Now will the Senator yield?

Mr. CARAWAY. I will; yes.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Of course, my friend from Arkansas exaggerates the situation, as usual.

Mr. CARAWAY. No; just wait a minute, now. Where is the exaggeration?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. In the statement that I "rushed down" to the Attorney General, as if I hurried down and had a conversation or consultation with the Attorney General about that particular matter.

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, I guess the Senator took his limousine.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. The Attorney General and I are very good personal friends, and have been for a quarter of a century. We come together very often socially, of which fact I am very proud; and in one of those contacts on one of those occasions I told him that I had heard that rumor, and asked him about it. That is all there was to it. My understanding is, and that is what I rose to say, that no fee was paid and none received for that purpose, but that if Mr. Daugherty, before he was Attorney General, had made an investigation and concluded that it was a legitimate employment, he had a right to take it, and that in taking it he violated none of the ethics of the profession.

Furthermore, let me say——

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield to the Senator, but I want part of the day.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I was brought to my feet very largely because I understood the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] to say that the Senator from Arkansas had charged that a fee had been taken by Mr Daugherty since he became Attorney General.

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, no.

Mr. STANLEY. No.

Mr. CARAWAY. What strikes me as strange—I shall merely talk about it, and not criticize it—is that the Senator from Indiana thinks that it is entirely honorable and entirely professional to take a fee to procure a pardon, and yet when he heard a rumor that the Attorney General, before he was appointed, had done that he rushed—strike out the word "rushed"—he went down to see him and asked him if this "heinous" story that was going the rounds was true. I shall leave the Attorney General and his other self, the Senator from Indiana, to adjust their little differences about that when they talk it over again at their next social meeting.

Mr. President, I was somewhat diverted from what I had intended to say when I was talking about the President, who, as rumor says—and I presume I must label it "rumor" in order to meet the censorship of my genial friend from New Hampshire—was just setting out to a game of golf, and therefore had no time to see these little folks. They had nothing but time, Mr. President, and therefore they were willing to wait until the President should have finished his amusements and come back to his place of business, but they were denied an opportunity to see him, and, wandering around in this presumably Christian city on Sunday, they chanced upon a church—a Baptist church—and wanted to go in because services were being held. The usher, I am informed, asked them in, but the policemen, I presume acting under orders of the people in authority, denied them the right to go in. The President of the United States was in the church worshiping, and these poor little outcasts were told that they must not go in. They were finally taken into some room and heard a lecture on being good to animals, when they had come thousands of miles, some of them, with a prayer on their little lips, to ask the President to be good to their fathers.

The fathers of these little fellows were convicted of violations of the espionage act. What the offenses were particularly I do not know. I do not know that the fathers ought to have been pardoned, but I do know that unless Jesus Christ was wrong the children ought to have been received, because somewhere in His Book he said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." But, of course, the present President has revised the text, so that a prayer must have stricken from it the name of Jesus Christ, and children are not to enter church if the President is there.

I would like to give you the life history of a few of these little fellows. One of them comes from within 15 miles of where I live. I knew his father well. He was about as inoffensive a man as I ever knew. He belonged to the ne'er-do-well class, and that is about all that could be said against him. He had conscientious scruples against wearing his country's uniform in time of war. He thought the Bible meant what it said when it commanded "Thou shalt not kill," and he would not go. He has a boy whose names is James. I read from the News:

> James is 12. His mother died a year after his father, J. M. Danley, a tenant farmer living near Paragould, Ark., was sent to prison for violation of the espionage act. He went to live with another family and until he joined the child crusaders worked in the cotton fields from 10 to 12 hours a day. His sisters—May, 18, and Irene, 15—are with other families and also work in the fields. His youngest sister, Elva, 4, is with May.

He came more than a thousand miles, from a little, humble home, Mr. President, to ask the great President of these United States to grant his father a pardon. He was refused an audience with the President. Then he tried to go to church, and he was refused admission to church because the President of the United States was there.

Here is another little fellow——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. During the term of former President Wilson I had exactly the same experience these children are reported to have had. Upon two different occasions I went to the church which President Wilson attended and was unable to gain admittance to the church because the church was filled, and the ushers would not allow anyone else to go in. It is eminently unfair to draw the inference that just because the President was in the church on the occasion to which the Senator refers, he was to be in seclusion, and that these children or anyone else should not be allowed to go in. The Senator knows very well that any church attended by a President is filled during any service he may attend, and many people who desire to do so can not get in because the church is crowded.

Mr. CARAWAY. Let me ask the Senator from West Virginia if he knows what the circumstances were attending this?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I was not present upon this occasion, but I was present on similar occasions when President Wilson was at church.

Mr. CARAWAY. But, Mr. President, these were children, and there was nothing suspicious about their conduct. However, a newspaper reporter who sits in the Senate press gallery, and who was present on that occasion, told me this morning that other people went in; that the usher was willing that these children should go in, but the police kept them out. I do not suppose that was exactly the experience the Senator from West Virginia had when he tried to go to church one time.

I started to read this little story about Helen Keller Hicks. It is as follows:

> Three-year-old Helen was born after her daddy, William Maddison Hicks, went to prison.
> He is a grandson of Alias Hicks, who founded the Hicksite order of the Friends Church, and has never seen his little girl, except when at Leavenworth on the prison movie screen was flashed a picture of children parading. Among them was his little girl bearing a banner which read, "I have never seen my daddy."
> Now he teaches in prison, and the courses he gives are credited toward a degree in Kansas State University. But, as he gets no money for the work, his wife and three children—Robert, 10; Rose, 8; and Helen—have been driven from their home at Guthrie, Okla., by poverty.

These are two. There are others, but I will not cumber the RECORD by reading them.

I want to pause here long enough to say that I believe the present President is the most gracious man in manner I ever knew. It is a delight to see him; and if he ever missed an opportunity to have his picture taken, except with these little children, I never heard of it. He is a kindly man, apparently. Yesterday morning, which was the day after these little children were not permitted to go to church, and two days after he had refused to see them, the President and his secretary, George Christian, had their pictures taken bidding good-by to Bernard S. McMahan, director of the caravan of Shriners, who will lead the delegates from Washington across the continent by automobile to the meeting in San Francisco.

On the same morning—yesterday—the President had his picture taken with officers of the Women's Overseas League, "who visited Harding." I beg your pardon. I do not believe his picture was in that group. I was so accustomed to seeing his picture in every one of them that I just said that without noticing, but his picture does not seem to be in it.

I may say, Mr. President, that the President, according to a local newspaper, has been generous with his time; and here is a list of the people he recently took time to see:

American National Bankers' Assoication.
Associated Advertising Clubs of America.
National Maritime League.
United States Cotton Association.
Motion Picture Producers' Association.
Ophthamologists' Association.
Daughters of American Revolution.
American Press Association.

He has had time to see David Wark Griffith, Lillian Gish and Dorothy Gish, Freckles Barry, Babe Ruth, and the tallest man in the world, whose name nobody remembers; the midgets, Lillian Russell, and many others. He had time to see all those, Mr. President, but when a lot of little children, weary with thousands of miles of traveling, and with hope in their hearts, because they had read these rumors about the President being full of mercy, came to see him, they were denied an opportunity of seeing him. It may be that is the thing the President ought to have done; I do not know.

But, Mr. President, I rose to talk about the committee refusing any investigation as to the facts, or even asking the President to make a statement as to why former soldiers and sailors were unlawfully denied the right to work for the Government they had risked their lives to defend; but before I refer to that, if there is no objection, I want leave to insert a newspaper account of these children going to church, about which the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND] seemed to be doubtful. The reporter who wrote this seems to have been present on that occasion, and this is his story of it.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

LITTLE CRUSADERS KEPT FROM CHURCH—REFUSED ADMITTANCE TO CALVARY BAPTIST, WHERE HARDING WAS WORSHIPING—GET IN JUVENILE ROOM—POLICEMEN AND USHERS EXPLAIN EDIFICE WAS FILLED WHEN CHILDREN ARRIVE.

WASHINGTON, April 30 (Special).—Members of the "Children's Crusade," appealing for the release of political prisoners, were prevented by policemen from attending services to-day at the Calvary Baptist Church, where President Harding was worshiping. Fire regulations, according to the police, did not permit the admittance of any additional persons, the church being crowded at the late hour when the 27 children arrived.

The children were accompanied by Frank P. O'Hare and Mrs. W. B. Hough, who has a son serving sentence for alleged violation of the espionage law. They arrived at 11.15 o'clock, 15 minutes after the time when reservations not taken are thrown open to the public. They walked up to the front door and were met by a policeman, who stopped them until an usher from the church came out. According to Mr. O'Hare, the usher at first agreed to take charge of the children, but was prevented by the policeman, who asserted that they should remain outside.

DENIES SEEKING PRESIDENT.

"If you want to see the President, why don't you go to the White House?" Mr. O'Hare quoted a policeman as saying.

"This is a church, isn't it?" he said. "They don't want to see the President, they want to see God."

Mr. O'Hare denied the children were taken to the Cavalry Baptist Church because the President belongs to that congregation. He said they planned to be here for some time and intended to worship each Sabbath, making the rounds of all the denominations represented in the delegation of children and wives of political prisoners.

Upon suggestion of a church attendant the children were taken to a side entrance, where they went into a separate room, where juvenile services were being held.

OTHERS ENTERED JUST AHEAD.

Mr. O'Hare said he went to the side entrance in order to prevent an outbreak among the children at the front of the church. He said he saw 10 or 15 persons enter the front door just before the children arrived, but added that they might have been the last admissible before the church was pronounced filled.

Mrs. Hough said policemen held out their hands to cut off entrance from the church as the children and their supervisors turned off of the front sidewalk toward the church door.

"When we got into the juvenile section I just sat down and cried," said Mrs. Hough. "I'll have to admit it. I realized we were not getting into the main part of the church. I didn't know but that it was an excuse. I cried because I thought the children had been barred out."

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, there is a gentleman by the name of John H. Bartlett. I never heard of him until he got to be president of the Civil Service Commission. That is nothing against him, however, and I do not utter that with that idea, because there are many great men from New Hampshire I never heard of until quite recently.

Mr. Bartlett was so effective as president of the Civil Service Commission, and made the distribution of pie so easy, that he was promoted to be the appointive officer who hands out most patronage under any administration. He is the First Assistant Postmaster General. There was a meeting here of the Civil Service League to protest against this administration's assault upon the civil service. Mr. Bartlett was not invited, but knowing that he would be justly criticized he thrust himself upon the meeting, and, as I understand from those present, took most of the time and entered a denial before the charge could be made. He elected to say that he was about the only real friend the civil service had ever had. He concluded his tirade against the people who did not agree with him, and in defense of handling the post offices, with this statement:

It should be needless to state that the first, second, and third class postmasters are not under civil service now and never have been. They have never acquired a civil-service status. Such Executive orders as have been made with reference to them have been merely a delegation by the President to the Civil Service Commission of the duty of examining them and making up a list for the President to select from. The President is not even obliged to select from these lists when they are thus made up. The power of appointing these presidential postmasters is with the President and the Senate. He has the right to change this order any minute he chooses. It is merely a means of selection. To speak of General Work's desire to vacate the present Executive order with reference to presidential postmasters as tending to undermine the civil-service system is illogical and irrelevant. They are not a part of the civil-service system at all.

I do not think Mr. Bartlett knows it, because I do not think he has ever known anything about the civil service except to point the way to give a job to a deserving Republican, but most everybody in the service has been covered into this service under an Executive order. Most of the so-called civil service is the result of Executive order. The offices are brought under the civil service, and until some President shall vacate those orders they will remain under the civil service.

I realize that where the President is given the constitutional power to make an appointment Congress can not take it from him. Everybody knows that, and Mr. Bartlett need not have wasted his time telling us that. Everybody knows that in appointing postmasters the President does not have to select from the list that is presented by the Civil Service Commission. Most people know that he is going to make the list suit him, and if it does not suit him he does not select from it until it has been made to do so.

I have a report here from which I am going to read extracts, and then I shall ask to include it, if I may, which says that—

Out of 2,508 appointments of postmasters in which there was any choice the highest man was appointed in 1,104 instances, or fewer than 44 per cent, while the second or third man was appointed in 1,424 instances, or more than 56 per cent. Investigation showed in virtually every instance, it is said, that the appointment of the lower man was influenced by politics.

"It is an essential absurdity to have competitive examinations for the purpose of eliminating spoils and still to admit patronage by the Congressmen," the report says.

Illustrations are given in the report to show how Congressmen are influenced by political considerations in recommending appointments. In this connection Representative JOHN JACOB ROGERS, of the fifth Massachusetts district, is said to have written a letter to Capt. Frederick C. Dean, who was highest on the list, and who, after eight years of post-office work, had sacrificed his chance of advancement by going to the front in the war, explaining why a lower man on the eligible list, Sam Highley, had been appointed on Mr. ROGERS'S recommendation. Mr. ROGERS is quoted as having written as follows:

"He has been my principal Woburn representative in each of my five congressional contests. He has always been in charge of my nomination papers in Woburn and has been the man to whom I have always turned first in every campaign. Thus I feel under unusual obligations to Sam, who has never in nine years asked for anything for himself."

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield.

Mr. STERLING. Will not the Senator be so good as to insert in the RECORD all of Mr. Bartlett's speech?

Mr. CARAWAY. I will turn it over to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. STERLING. He has read from a newspaper report of what was said by Mr. Bartlett.

Mr. CARAWAY. I shall turn it over to the Senator from South Dakota and let him put it in the RECORD.

Mr. STERLING. I will ask to have it inserted if the Senator does not.

Mr. CARAWAY. Or I can do it myself if the Senator prefers. I read on from the article:

United States Senator JAMES W. WADSWORTH, Jr., of New York, is quoted as having written concerning the appointment of a postmaster at Long Eddy, N. Y., that he always relied upon the advice of the Congressman who, it is presumed, seeks the advice of the leading local Republicans and the Republican county committee.

Senator FRANK B. WILLIS, of Ohio, is quoted as follows in a letter said to have been written to Miss Katherine Riley, of Bellefontaine, explaining why women are not appointed postmasters:

"Because we believe in party, not personal, government, we have asked the successful candidate to secure the indorsement of the Republican committee, which is the body upon which the party must depend for its work back home. As time goes on, more and more women will be considered and appointed, but just now it is most natural that more men should be, for they have longer done political work which deserves reward.

"There seems to be in this a Republican echo of Mr. Bryan's letter"—

I want to be fair and read it all—

"to an official in Santo Domingo urging places for 'deserving Democrats,'" the report comments. "The only possible advantage of this system is that in some cases 'it keeps the dunces out.' In other respects it is as bad as avowedly spoils appointments."

I ask permission to put the entire article in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article referred to is as follows:

CIVIL-SERVICE RULE REVISION IS SOUGHT—NATIONAL LEAGUE REPORT WANTS HIGHEST ON ELIGIBLE LISTS APPOINTED—POLITICS AND POSTMASTERS—MAJORITY OF 2,528 APPOINTMENTS WERE "SECOND AND THIRD MEN," COMMITTEE SAYS.

Asserting that politics is the dominating influence in the appointment of postmasters, William Dudley Foulke, Walter H. Buck, Lewis H. Van Dusen, and Henry M. Waite, of the National Civil Service Reform League's committee on appointment of presidential postmasters, made public yesterday a report urging the adoption of a rule to require the appointment of the highest person on the eligible list, instead of any one of the first three.

The report says that out of 2,528 appointments of postmasters in which there was any choice the highest man was appointed in 1,104 instances, or fewer than 44 per cent, while the second or third man was appointed in 1,424 instances, or more than 56 per cent. "The only possible advantage of this system is that in some cases it 'keeps the dunces out.' In other respects it is as bad as avowedly spoils appointments."

Mr. CARAWAY. Since this administration came into power I have never known yet the Post to be misinformed about what was going to happen where the administration had the power to make it happen. If the administration had not made up its mind to do it, I take it that if it was stated in the Post, it would not take such action as would make the Post appear in error. Therefore I clip from the Post of this morning an item entitled:

Adverse report made in civil-service probe. Caraway resolutions sought inquiry on alleged illegal dismissals.

The article calls attention to adverse reports on two resolutions and then continues:

A third resolution offered by the Arkansas Senator, which is yet to be reported, calls upon the President to supply full information regarding the dismissals, including reasons why the employees were given no opportunity to reply to charges against them. The committee will pass upon this at its next meeting and an adverse report also is predicted.

The Post can not be wrong about it, and the adverse report will come along. I am just as confident of that as I shall be when I see it in the RECORD that it has been made, because the Post knows what the administration and the friends and adherents of the administration are going to do.

Mr. President, I wish to ask unanimous consent to call up now one of the resolutions adversely reported yesterday. I want first to have the resolution S. Res. 271 (Report No. 681) called up, and I ask for its immediate consideration if there is no objection.

Mr. SMOOT. There is objection. We have had one hour of this debate now and I want to proceed with the tariff bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection.

Mr. CARAWAY. If the Senator wants to make a speech I shall be glad to let him have the floor.

Mr. SMOOT. No; the Senator from Utah can get along without making speeches and taking up the time of the Senate like it has been taken up this morning.

Mr. CARAWAY. And it is so kind of the Senator from Utah to tell us that that I am under everlasting obligation, because I had the fortune to sit here pretty nearly half a day at one time and hear the Senator make a speech on the sales tax, and I think when he got through he had convinced himself that he was right.

Mr. SMOOT. I hope the Senator from Arkansas does the same thing to-day.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is true, and I do not ever expect to convince the senior Senator from Utah because he and I never have agreed, and I am sure when I agree with him I will be retired from public life.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to refer to the resolution (S. Res. 271) which was reported adversely yesterday. I ask unanimous consent to call that up and have a vote on it. While the bonus matter is pending I would like to see how many friends of the soldiers there really are in the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, for the same reason I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, this resolution asks for information from the President about discharged soldiers. Did I understand that there was objection to its being considered?

Mr. STERLING. I understand the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] objected, but I did not object, I will say to the Senator from Mississippi, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from Utah was tied up in the Committee on Finance when this matter was before the Senate, and he, perhaps, did not know about the discussion when the matter was presented, and does not know that at that time a unanimous-consent request was made for its immediate consideration. We thought it should have been considered immediately. The charge was made that the soldiers in the service were being demoted and discharged contrary to law when their record was good, and we merely sought by this resolution information from the President as to the names of the parties and the reasons therefor, a most simple request.

But I think the reason, as then expressed, why the Senator from South Dakota wanted it to go to the committee was because there were some facts that he said he desired to ascertain. The committee has made an unfavorable report on the resolution. Certainly there is some sentiment here in the Senate, some feeling left for the soldiers of the late war. Whether you are going to give them a bonus or not is not concerned in this question. I am for it; but certainly we should take care to see that the law, so far as these men are concerned, is respected and that their rights under the law are guaranteed. If they are being discharged and being demoted contrary to law, the country is entitled to know it and the Senate is entitled to the facts.

It seems to me it is the least thing we can do for these men to ascertain whether or not the law is being violated with respect to their demotions and their discharges. The resolution was a simple one, but the committee has made an unfavorable report on it and there has been no reason assigned for it except that there was a decision rendered in the courts of the District of Columbia in 1915 about it, which, by the way, in my opinion, does not touch or meet the proposition at all. It seems to me we should act on the resolution, either indorsing the committee's action, which is unfavorable, or repudiating it.

Mr. STERLING. I am glad to have the Senator from Mississippi indicate that he has read at least that much of the report, anyway.

Mr. HARRISON. I did, thinking and hoping I would find some reason for the committee's action.

Mr. STERLING. The citation of the authority there is, I think, absolutely decisive of this question. The committee therefore made the report that the resolution be not passed. There is no law on the statute books now pertaining to the inquiry, according to the decision of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia.

With reference to the other resolution, let me say——

Mr. HARRISON. Let us finish this one first, if the Senator will permit.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah will state the inquiry.

Mr. SMOOT. I simply want to say to the Senator from Mississippi in the first place, and then I will state the inquiry, that the Senator knows there is an adverse report on the resolution. He knows it can not pass without discussion. As the Senator having charge of the tariff bill under consideration, I am not willing that the time of the Senate shall be taken now in the consideration of any legislation which is going to lead to lengthy discussion, and it is for that reason that I object. I object to the consideration of the resolution and ask that the regular order be taken up.

Mr. HARRISON. Then the Senator would delay this matter for anywhere from two to four months, because, as the Senator knows, the tariff bill will be discussed that long, at least?

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator will do so if the same tactics are going to be continued in the future that have been employed in the past. If the Democratic Party desires to defeat the tariff bill, of course the united party on that side of the Chamber can postpone action for months; but I want to say now, so far as I am concerned, that the time has arrived when we will begin our sessions earlier in the morning and sit later in the evening, and, if necessary, we will hold night sessions. We are going to see just exactly what object there is in the discussion, and when we find it out of course we will know how to act.

Mr. HARRISON. I am very glad to hear the Senator say that. It is the first time I have seen any indication that this Congress is going to attempt to do business. I will say to the Senator that if he keeps some of his Members here on that side of the aisle he will have to use a crowbar and lasso, because they have not stayed here up to this time to listen to the discussion.

Mr. SMOOT. Be that as it may, I am quite sure that from now on we are going to keep a quorum and we are going to have the tariff bill considered. We are not going to allow other measures to displace it in any way, if we have votes enough in the Senate to prevent it.

Mr. HARRISON. In view of what the Senator has said—and I take it he is speaking for his party—I understand it is his position that he will oppose during the discussion of the tariff bill, and until it has passed the Senate, the taking up of any other matter that will lead to discussion.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; to a long discussion. I shall oppose it until the tariff bill passes, unless a vote of the Senate directs otherwise.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, the Senator would except appropriation bills?

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, we all recognize that the appropriation bills have to be passed within a limited time.

Mr. HARRISON. We are agreed on that. Does not the Senator except the adjusted compensation or bonus bill?

Mr. SMOOT. That is for the Senate to say. So far as the Senator from Utah is concerned——

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator has spoken with authority on the other proposition. How does he speak on this question?

Mr. SMOOT. I will speak on this matter exactly as I spoke upon the other. So far as the Senator from Utah is concerned, that shall not interfere with the passage of the tariff bill; but if a majority of the Senate says that it shall, just as I stated before upon any other matter of legislation, if the Senate says that it shall, the Senator from Utah can not prevent it.

Mr. HARRISON. Then, that means that the adjusted-compensation legislation, except by a majority vote of the Senate, will not be taken up until after the tariff bill has been disposed of?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not say that it will not be. If I were going to express my own opinion, it is that the majority of the Senate will vote to take up the adjusted-compensation bill to displace the tariff bill now pending before the Senate. That is my opinion.

Mr. HARRISON. I said unless a majority voted to take the bonus bill up the Senator from Utah would object to it being taken up until the tariff bill shall have been disposed of.

Mr. SMOOT. Unless a majority of the Senate decides that the soldiers' bonus bill shall be taken up, I shall object to its consideration until the tariff bill is disposed of.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. President, the Senator from Utah has, of course, called for the regular order, but that does not preclude me from speaking on the resolution. As I was going to say, it does seem to me that it is not asking very much to request the adoption of the resolution which the committee of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] has reported unfavorably asking the President to give us the information which is sought in the resolution, to wit, the names of the ex-soldiers in the service whose records are good who have been demoted or discharged.

The preamble of the resolution reads:

Whereas by act of Congress it is provided that in the event of reductions being made in the force of any of the executive departments no honorably discharged soldier or sailor whose record in said department has been rated as good shall be discharged or dropped or reduced in rank or salary.

That is the proviso of the law. The Senator from South Dakota in his report was kind enough to include that proviso in the law which was passed August 23, 1912, and which reads:

Provided, That in the event of reductions being made in the force in any of the executive departments no honorably discharged soldier or sailor whose record in said department is rated "good" shall be discharged or dropped or reduced in rank or salary.

That is the law; and in view of that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] offered his resolution merely calling on the President of the United States—

if not incompatible with the public interest, to inform Congress:

(a) Whether honorably discharged sailors and soldiers whose records were good have been demoted, dropped, or discharged from the civil service since the 4th day of March, 1921.

By the unfavorable report of the committee it is practically stated that Republican Senators do not desire to request the President to send to the Senate information as to the honorably discharged soldiers and sailors whose records were good who had been demoted, dropped, or discharged from the civil service since the 4th day of March, 1921.

The second clause of the resolution reads:

(b) By what, if any, charges or lack of efficiency justifying said dismissal or demotion.

By the unfavorable report of the committee on the resolution they say they do not desire that information.

The third clause of the resolution reads:

(c) Giving the name and date of demotion, dropping, or discharge of each soldier or sailor.

The committee refuse to ask the President to give to Congress that information. Why? It is, I am bound to assume, first, because honorably discharged soldiers and sailors have been discharged and demoted in the public service when their records were good; that their names can be given by the hundreds; that it is the practice in the departments to discharge them without respect to law; and yet the committee try to smother that fact and to protect the President from sending the names of such soldiers to the Senate. Why? Ostensibly because the report cites some decision which was rendered by a court in the District of Columbia in 1915 to the effect that that law was interwoven with some other provisions of the law and did not apply.

I care nothing about it, so far as my desire to see the resolution passed is concerned, whether or not there was any such law in 1912. I want for my information, and I am sure there are other Senators here who desire for their information, to know whether or not, irrespective of the law, former soldiers and sailors whose records are good have been discharged from the departments or demoted. I want to know, irrespective of the law, if soldiers who served their country in time of war and whose ratings are good are being demoted and discharged and others are taking their places. That is the object of the proponent of this resolution; and yet the committee, in order to smother the resolution and withhold the facts as to whether honorably discharged soldiers and sailors whose records are good are being demoted and dismissed, refuse to give the Senate an opportunity to pass upon the action of the departments.

I say to Senators on the other side of the Chamber they had better watch their step. Whether they pass the adjusted compensation bill or not, they ought to see that honorably discharged soldiers and sailors whose records are good are at least treated fairly in the public service. I think that is all I desire to say as to that matter; but, as one Member of the Senate, I do not propose to wait two, three, or four months until the tariff bill is out of the way until action is taken on this resolution in order to ascertain whether or not the Senate indorses the action of the committee in unfavorably reporting the resolution.

If Senators would stay here in their seats and debate the tariff bill in order that after full and candid discussion we might express ourselves by our votes, we would get through with the bill in a little while; but here, day after day, I think I might say minute after minute, there are generally only four or five Senators on the other side in their seats.

Those on this side of the Chamber who desire to discuss the bill and point out its weaknesses and the viewpoint of the minority, can not, of course, argue with Senators on the other side of the aisle and show them the right way, because they refuse to sit and listen. I assume the reason why Senators on the other side do not stay here is because they are afraid the arguments will overpower them; that their conscience will melt under the argument, and they will be forced to flee from the mandate of the administration and vote with us for the reduction of the high rates of duty proposed in the bill.

Oh, if the American people knew how they are being imposed upon through the enactment of such indefensible and outrageous provisions as are proposed in this bill; if they knew how you are being voted by proxy, without knowledge or investigation of the subject matter, you would hear from them. But unfortunately they do not know all that is going on here.

I say let us stay here and transact the public business. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] stays here; he sits in the Chamber and is trying to drive the bill through, but he does not get any help. On the other side of the Chamber now there is but one member of the Finance Committee of the Senate—I see the Senator from West Virginia shaking his head—I apologize to him—but including him, there are only two Senators on the other side of the Chamber out of—I will ask how many Republican Members there are on that committee?

Mr. MOSES. Ten.

Mr. HARRISON. Only 2 out of 10. The Republican Senators have been grabbing everything, and I thought perhaps they had 14 Senators on the Committee on Finance out of the distribution; but out of 10 Republican members of the Finance Committee there are only 2 who are now sitting on the other side of the aisle paying attention to the consideration of the this bill.

It is useless for us to discuss the provisions; we can not convince Senators on the other side when they will not listen. I appeal to the Senator from North Dakota to use the power of his position to keep Members on his side of the aisle in the Chamber so that they may study and discuss the bill, and when the time comes to vote may be able to vote intelligently.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I am not going to occupy the time of the Senate at any length. I wish to observe, in the first place, however, that the remarks of the Senator from Mississippi, it occurs to me, have somewhat of a partisan bias. I have heard the Senator from Mississippi before, and it seems to me that his remarks have often taken on that coloring.

Mr. HARRISON. There is and there can be no partisanship in this matter.

Mr. STERLING. The Senator imagines, perhaps, that he is scoring one against the Republican side of the Chamber; he is desirous of showing to the country that he now has found something in the policy of this side of the Chamber to criticize.

Mr. President, as I listened to the Senator from Mississippi I wondered if in his heart he has that tremendous interest in the ex-soldiers and sailors which he seems now to disclose in his remarks upon the resolution or in his reference to the bonus bill.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. With reference to the Senator's suggestion as to partisanship, let me say that there is not any partisanship in my remarks. If I were selfishly inclined I should desire, indeed, I would pray, that the Senator and his colleagues might follow the same path which they are now treading, because it is the path that will lead them to destruction. I am trying to help them; I am trying to advise with them, so that they may extricate themselves from the position in which they have placed themselves.

Mr. STERLING. Oh, well, we thank the Senator for his very good intentions toward this side of the Chamber, but I can assure him that I think we will be able to get along, and that when it comes not to the mere making of a political or a partisan speech, but when it comes to the transaction of business, the Republican Members of the Senate will be here to attend to that business.

Mr. President, speaking now in regard to the resolution, the proviso to which the Senator has referred is the sole basis for the resolution. The proviso is found in the act approved August 23, 1912, the purpose of that act being to authorize the Civil Service Commission to establish a system of efficiency ratings throughout the executive departments of the Government. At the end of the section in which such provision is made there occurs the particular proviso relating to soldiers, which is as follows:

Provided, That in the event of reductions being made in the force in any of the executive departments, no honorably discharged soldier or sailor whose record in said department is rated "good" shall be discharged or dropped, or reduced in rank or salary.

Mr. President, it may be seen at a glance, I think, how sweeping that provision is on its face. Literally construed, as it might be construed at any time by the head of a department, an ex-soldier or sailor would be kept on the pay roll and nominally in the service of the Government without a single thing for him to do. The very case which has been decided and which is cited in the committee report was a case where a navy-yard employee, who had formerly been in the service of the United States as a soldier, was discharged because there was no work for him to do. The Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia in that case took the position that the proviso relating to discharged soldiers and sailors in the Government service was a part, an inseparable part, of the whole section, and that since the Civil Service Commission had not, in pursuance of the law, established a system of efficiency ratings, the proviso was altogether inoperative. Since the resolution of the Senator from Arkansas was based wholly and solely upon that proviso the committee having the matter under consideration decided that there was no operative law to which the resolution would apply, and hence reported it with the recommendation that it be not adopted. That is the sole reason for making such report.

The suggestion has been made that the committee acted conformably to the will of the President, or that somebody had been in conference with the President in regard to these various resolutions which were submitted to the Committee on Civil Service. As chairman of that committee, I can say that I have never conferred with the President with regard to a single resolution so referred, and I have not known what his mind is in regard to these resolutions. In reporting two of the resolutions adversely on yesterday I had in mind the fact that there is a third resolution submitted by the Senator from Arkansas still under consideration by the committee, the subject matter of which is the same as one of the resolutions which we reported adversely on yesterday. That resolution called for the appointment of a select committee, but, as I have said, the resolution now under consideration by the committee covers the same subject matter. Then why go to the trouble, and to the expense, I may say, of having a select committee appointed to conduct hearings when the whole subject matter is before the Civil Service Committee itself in the shape of a pending resolution?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The complaint that I have heard made against the discharge of soldiers from the public service has been to this effect—that when it became necessary to reduce the number of employees in many of the departments of the Government veterans were discharged in the same manner as other employees; that no preference was extended to veterans in order that they might be retained at work. Most of these complaints about dismissal of veterans such as the one the Senator mentioned, who was discharged from the navy yard, were not because there was a reduction in the number of employees but because when that reduction came veterans were not given preference and retained in the service. I should like to ask the Senator if that feature of the complaint was called to the attention of his committee?

Mr. STERLING. No; that feature of the complaint was not especially called to the attention of the committee. The committee took the resolution as it was, which was based on the proviso to which I have called attention, and which I have quoted. There are other provisions of the statutes giving preference to soldiers and sailors and to widows of soldiers and sailors. Those statutes are not affected by this report in any way whatever. The Senator will note the peculiar language of the proviso. They are not to be discharged at all while their rating is good. That is practically the language of the proviso, which would mean this—and would mean it, probably, in the minds of many heads of departments—that even though there were no work to do, no service that the soldier could perform and render a consideration to the Government, yet he would have to be retained on the rolls.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question? I have not studied the case cited in the report, the case of Persing against Daniels. The Senator has. This was the case of an employee of the Navy Department, a former soldier, was it not?

Mr. STERLING. An employee of the Navy Department, who brought mandamus for the purpose of being restored to his place.

Mr. HARRISON. Did they have an efficiency board in that department at that time?

Mr. STERLING. I do not think they had.

Mr. HARRISON. Then it was because of the fact that there was no efficiency board to rate him, good, bad, or otherwise?

Mr. STERLING. No efficiency board. The act itself provided that the Civil Service Commission should establish a system of efficiency ratings in all the departments, which was not done, and has not been done to the present day.

Mr. HARRISON. I thought perhaps at that time there was no efficiency board. There is an efficiency board now in the Navy?

Mr. STERLING. There is an Efficiency Bureau, but it has not established efficiency ratings throughout the several departments of the Government.

Mr. HARRISON. There is an efficiency board in the Agricultural Department, say, and in the Post Office Department, and in the Department of Commerce, and in the Department of Labor?

Mr. STERLING. Oh, I presume so; created by the heads of departments.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; at their instance, of course. That is to carry out the law that there shall be an efficiency rating, so that persons in the employ of the Government shall be rated either good or bad.

Mr. STERLING. But I will say to the Senator from Mississippi that those efficiency boards are not within the contemplation of the statute to which I have called attention.

Mr. HARRISON. That is purely a technical objection.

Mr. STERLING. No; it is not a technical objection. It is a fact, and a very material objection.

Mr. HARRISON. At any rate, you can see in the ratings whether an employee is good or bad or what his mark is according to that efficiency board, whether it was appointed at the instance of the Civil Service Commission or at the instance of the head of the particular department under which he is working.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, just one word in regard to the charge which has been reiterated again and again with reference to discharged soldiers and sailors and their dismissal from the service or their demotion in the service. It would appear from the statements made by Senators on the other side of the Chamber that this administration, in a way, "had it in" for honorably discharged soldiers, the men who rendered service to the Government during time of war. Can anything be more absurd or preposterous than that? I have heard it repeated so often that I have grown altogether weary of it. No administration that has any regard for its own future, aside from the dictates of humanity and of patriotism, would discharge without just and lawful cause those who had served their country in the hour of danger, as our soldiers and sailors have done, and who afterwards come into the civil service of the Government in the several executive departments.

Mr. President, in the interest of fairness and after hearing the remarks of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY], I ask to have printed at the end of my remarks an address made by Hon. John H. Bartlett, former president of the Civil Service Commission, now First Assistant Postmaster General, before the mass meeting of the National Civil Service Reform League on Thursday evening, April 27.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TOWNSEND in the chair). Without objection, that order will be made.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Address of John H. Bartlett, First Assistant Postmaster General and former president of the United States Civil Service Commission, before a mass meeting of the National Civil Service Reform League at Washington, D. C., Thursday evening, April 27, 1922.

Believing that the cause of civil service is being harmed by the misinformation of those who should be its friends, knowing that my attitude toward civil service is being misrepresented by those whom I had supposed to be its friends, being wholly unwilling to yield to "anyone jot or tittle" of interest and friendship for the cause of civil service when properly administered and kept within proper bounds, and in order that our own postal employees may not be disturbed in mind, they being 60 per cent of all under civil service, I am venturing on my personal account, and not representing the administration, to beg my way into this meeting, which was staged and advertised as opposed to the ideas of civil service which I have advocated and still do advocate. There may be legitimate difference of opinion with reference to the scope of civil service, but I challenge any man who claims to be more interested in the welfare of those who serve under civil service than I am or more interested that civil service shall better serve the country. If any man questions my sincerity in this, I challenge him to a show-down; and in this, although without authority, I am sure I may include the administration, because in everything tending to upbuild civil service the administration has been squarely behind it, has inaugurated reforms of far-reaching importance with reference to civil service which have never been attempted in any prior administration, and has in no instance violated any civil service law.

In the call of this meeting, which was signed by William D. Foulke, of Indiana, as acting president of the United States Civil Service Reform League, he admitting himself to be an "independent" in politics, certain alleged facts are set forth, with the conclusion that "if they are allowed to continue the civil-service system will be undermined and uprooted and we shall return to the deplorable spoils method of the past."

In this narration of items of alarm imperiling civil service I have the distinction of being one. With reference to me it says: "Mr. John H. Bartlett, who for a short time was civil service commissioner, appointed by President Harding, and who is now First Assistant Postmaster General, has made a public statement, distributed as a part of the Post Office Department's publicity, advocating a restriction of the merit system to the lower places of the service only, thus excluding those places promotion to which is the great incentive to efficiency among countless employees of the Government."

This so grossly misrepresents my interview that the good faith of the quoter is in question. What I did say, which, I think, clearly defined my position, and which I now stand upon, is as follows: "It is exceedingly difficult to draw the line where civil service should stop its attempt to reach the higher officials, but it would seem to be reasonably sound doctrine that in a Government by the people, when a new administration comes in with a fresh mandate from the people to carry out certain policies, it should have the privilege—in fact, a perfectly free hand—to select all those higher officials to whom must be intrusted administrative policies and executive discretion. If it can not have this power, the will of the people will be defeated."

If such a sentiment as this is a cause for alarm, then it is time an alarm is sounded against those extremists who would throttle the will of the people.

I hold no brief for any of the others against whom the call for this meeting makes accusations and on account of whom the extraordinary statement is made that civil service is imperiled, but I know positively that none of them is correctly represented in this notice, and that no one of them has any idea of disturbing the fundamental principles of civil service.

It seems a little suggestive of politics that a political "independent" from Indiana should, on the eve of a great primary in that State, attack the splendid Senator who is seeking a renomination.

Mr. Foulke's "straw man" document begins with this statement: "There appears to be a dangerous organized effort on the part of various Members of Congress and others high in Government places to weaken, cripple, and perhaps finally destroy the present competitive system in the civil service of our country.

Such an accusation smacks of politics, particularly when the accuser is an "independent," and the eight gentlemen accused as leaders of the organized effort are all Republicans.

Assuming (to be charitable) that there is no politics in it, such an assertion can be accounted for only as the jealous imaginations of one who has become obsessed with only one idea and has fallen out of touch with Washington.

This meeting, whether called on a false alarm or for political motives or for the most honest motives, can not help being fruitful of good. We should discuss in a very friendly manner the real serious considerations which will tend to improve civil service and also to aid the Government. However zealous we may be of civil service the welfare of our country is of greatest importance. Those who can not see any evils connected with civil service are as blind as those who can see no good in it.

I wish to invite your attention at the beginning of our discussion to certain very fundamental principles of government, because I am arriving at my principle which guides me in my viewpoint of civil service by taking the broader vision of what will best serve the welfare of all the people; in other words, the welfare of our country. We must never lose sight of this one controlling, dominating fact, that a people's government is greater than any individual in it, or any group of individuals in it. This has been illustrated in all our history. Only recently we have seen thousands of our heroic young men and women not merely giving up their positions but also their sacred lives in order that their country might be preserved. Even if we are under civil service ourselves the braver and nobler thing is to ask what is best for our country, for in the long run what is best for the country will be best for us all. Our country is founded on the great principle that the will of the people shall govern. We are a great democracy and the machinery of our Government must always be so set up and so constructed that it will run true to the principle that the will of the people must be carried out. If popular government means anything, it means that there shall be submitted to the people at election time the great issues and the lesser issues concerning their Government. These issues are not idle things; they are of tremendous importance to the Republic; indeed, they are of vital concern to the very existence of the Nation. They concern the morals of the Nation; they concern all of the many lesser matters and principles with which government deals.

Whenever an administration comes into power, whatever its politics, it is the verdict of the people that the things for which it has stood shall be carried into effect as far as possible and as promptly as possible. The faithful fulfillment of these mandates of the people must be held up as the foremost objective of any administration. The machinery of government, the instrumentalities, and even the personnel by means of which these mandates of the people must be carried out must always be subordinated to the great tasks to be performed.

Now, right here at this point of reasoning is the beginning of the diverging lines between the two schools of thought with reference to civil service. One school seems to go on the principle that civil service, when it reaches its highest goal, may include everyone below the President. I say this advisedly, because I have heard grandiloquent civil service speakers proclaim the day when Cabinet officers shall be under civil service. If Cabinet officers, the same logic would also include the President.

One has only to ponder upon this for a moment to set himself thinking that it is absolutely necessary somewhere to draw the line, for if all the officers of the Government, from the President down through to the messenger boy, should come under legal civil service, all of them holding office for life, we would then have something worse than a monarchy, worse than a kingdom—it would be a monarchy and bureaucracy combined. It would then be a machine government instead of a people's government.

I know this is an extreme view, and I am setting it up for your thought simply to emphasize the fact that there must be drawn a line where civil service shall end and that that line must be drawn on some principle. I have never heard the ardent extremist on civil service ever suggest that any line should be drawn anywhere, and I am only pointing out to them that they are tending toward an impossible conclusion and a conclusion which would defeat the fundamental principle of self-government upon which our country was founded. What has brought me into this controversy is that I have suggested that their constantly reaching for higher and higher administrative offices and never suggesting where they propose to stop is a dangerous tendency; it is a thing which is inducing lovers of popular government to strike back at them; it is the thing, and the only thing, which, if pursued, will defeat civil service, for if we have to decide between civil service and popular government we cast our lot on the side of popular government.

Those who think with me believe, as I stated in my first interview, that positions having to do directly with the formulation of administrative policies and executive discretion must be within the control of the President, whom the people have sent to Washington to carry out those policies. They must be changeable, as the people's will is changeable, in order that the people's will may be carried out. When I say the people's will I, of course, mean a majority of the people. You will see, therefore, that I am drawing the line where civil service should end with those officers who have very little or nothing to do with the formation of administrative policies and the things which vitally concern the formation of those policies and their execution. This is drawing the line of a principle. If the extremists on civil service are drawing any line on any principle, I am not informed of it.

Discussing the necessity of the high administrative offices being under the immediate control of the President unrestricted by civil service law, in order that the will of the people may be carried out, it may be well to reflect for a moment upon the tendency of a bureaucracy. Those constituting a bureaucracy, and by that I mean such persons as constitute the permanent and unchanging organization of government, are inclined in the course of years to settle into a kind of mass formation of common interest and stereotyped methods and look with distrust and disfavor on the orders and policies of the new heads of departments who are elected by the people. In other words, they get away from the people too far. Bureaucracy is wedded to thinking that government is a perfected science and that they alone possess the key to that science.

Then again, we must look at the truth as it is and understand that when an administration goes out and its policies have been repudiated by the people, if the high administrative officers of that administration remain in they are called upon suddenly to change their mode of thinking, their policies, their interest, and their enthusiasm to opposite policies. It is not to be expected that they can be enthusiastic for one administration for one thing and with the next administration equally enthusiastic for the opposite thing. Suppose war is declared with pacifists in the offices, for instance. It is not to be expected that they can be perfectly loyal to one administration and its policies and principles and then in a night change to the same degree of loyalty to the opponents of that administration and the opposite principles and policies. In this I am referring to the high administrative officers whom any President must rely upon to make sure that his policies are carried into effect. If they are all under civil service you are asking an impossible thing of them. They can not change their loyalty and enthusiasm in that way and they ought not to do so. A man will do better service for his country if his heart is in the thing which he is doing. It is in the interests of the whole people that the high administrative officers should be selected at will from those who are enthusiastically for the particular policies and principles to which the people have given their support. Suppose a drive is made on national disloyalty, when Socialists and weak men are in these positions.

Permanency in service of high administration officials defeats the popular will. It becomes frozen administration. Confident that they can not be removed, its members become defiant of the popular will and sneerful of new administrators who come with messages direct from the people. One or two new men come in at the head of a great machine of 5,000 permanent employees, the highest of whom are administrative officers who, during the preceding administration, have been intrusted with administrative policies and perhaps have come to believe in them. At once they are asked to change to carry out new policies. Some of them do not believe in these new policies, perhaps. The head of the department knows they do not believe in them, but nevertheless he has to ask them to help him carry them out. In fact, he has to rely almost wholly upon them to carry them out. They are so situated and so skilled in governmental machinery that they can, if they choose, almost wholly dominate the situation. They can control him easier than he can control them, when he has so little assistance as now.

It is more or less of an open secret that whenever a new department head comes into office there takes place a sort of undefinable contest to determine whether his ideas shall be put into effect or whether the high administrative officers and cunning men of that department will control him. My idea is that such a man coming with fresh instructions from the people, being placed in charge of thousands of organized public servants, needs a larger number of immediate associates of high administrative qualities to assist him, and to see to it that his policies and ideas are carried out by that great organization. Such a new head of a great organization, all of whose members are protected by civil service, finds himself with very ineffective power of discipline over the organization because all his subordinates, including the appointment officers, are under civil service and have a mutual interest to stand together as against his discipline. It does not matter what political party the civil service employee belongs to if he is not intrusted with high administrative authority. If such a head feels that he is being circumvented and undertakes to make removals, for the most righteous purpose, he encounters an organized attack, such a one as lies, I fear, behind this meeting here to-night. If he finds his plans blocked at every turn by advice that is "inexpedient," by unreasonable delays, and by indifference, he is helpless. He simply must have a larger number of administrative men around him of his own selection and in whom he has implicit confidence to see to it that nothing is "put over on him." As it is, he finds himself working up hill all the time. His only remedy, his only avenue of peace is to fall into the same old way of doing it that it has been done for 30 years, and yet he has been sent there to do certain new things which the public demand of him. If he tries to cut some red tape which the people want cut, he finds no one in all his organization who knows how to use the scissors to do it. Red tape has become an exact science and those who are skilled in that science do not propose to give up their means of livelihood.

There is no way to prefer charges against such subordinates, who may perhaps be doing nothing that can be detected and set forth as a ground for charges. They simply do not believe in the things which the new head believes in and they simply do not know how to carry out such policies. It is like a great contractor who has been building wood houses for years and has built up an organization of that kind. He finally decides that he will begin building brick and stone houses; he calls his superintendents together and they tell him it can not be done. They tell him he will fail if he does it. They predict all manner of evil. He finally calls in a half dozen brick and stone superintendents that he has picked up from other sources and asks their opinion. They tell him it is the most up-to-date proposition, and that there is big money in it. What does he do? What ought he to do? Should he keep the superintendents who say it can not be done, or should he get a new set of superintendents who know they can do it?

I fear many of us do not realize how rapidly our country has grown and how much business there is to do. It is not the same Washington that it was in the days of Cleveland, Mr. Foulke. The President himself can consider only the very broadest policies in the broadest way. His Cabinet officers and independent heads are so jammed with work and appointments that they are physically able to consider their vital administrative problems only in a very general way. They, in turn, must delegate administrative discretion and execution to those immediately under them, and again the delegation must go on for several steps. In fact, the real vital matters of administration in most cases have to be studied out and formulated by those a few steps removed from even a Cabinet officer. The Cabinet officer needs more than the one or two noncivil service assistants which he now has. He needs several who believe as he does, who believe in him, and who are enthusiastic for his success, and these can not well be under civil service, because no man can serve two masters.

I do not say that any individual now under civil service in Washington or elsewhere should lose his civil-service status by my theory. I believe in justice to all employees. But whatever be the rearrangement necessary to carry these principles into effect, it should be done. It does not involve greater expense to the Government, because I believe a Cabinet officer or a head of any other department, if allowed to surround himself as I have stated, would be able to save all along down the line where he is not now able to do.

It is argued that the higher up the positions under civil service go the greater the inducement not only to enter the service but to continue in the service. There is some force in this argument and it is not inconsistent with my ideas. If civil service stopped where administrative officers begin there would be no reason why a Cabinet officer could not select anyone under him in civil service to fill any of his administrative positions, provided he could find such a person whom he desired. He would naturally look over his organization to see if he could find such a person. In case he found such an employee whom he could promote to a high administrative position not under civil service there should be some provision whereby such employee would retain his civil-service status and be permitted to go back to some civil-service position in case some other Cabinet officer in some other administration with new policies did not feel that he could best serve the demand of those new policies. This would leave every inducement for distinguished service in order that one might be selected for the high administrative positions. The only difference is it would not compel a Cabinet officer by civil-service seniority to take some one against his judgment. In other words, I would permit an administration to select its high administrative officers from a hundred millions of people rather than to compel it by law to select from only a half million people who are under civil service.

When the people vote a change in administration they mean a change in "administration," not simply a change in the President. An administration must embrace the high administrative officers. Moreover, everyone knows that new blood brought into any great business is helpful, that without the ability to bring in new blood and new talent from time to time any great business will gradually contract, grow narrow, and become inefficient. The extreme civil-service view would not permit a President to bring to Washington any new blood. He would come with his trunk and platform, and the organization prepared for him by civil service would tell him what to do.

The whole difference between my ideas and those of the civil service extremists, as I understand it, is that they claim that the only officials who should be called "administrative officers," and who should not be under civil service, are Cabinet officers and perhaps one or two assistants, and some of the extremists do not even concede this; while I believe that these are not enough, as our Government has at length grown and developed, to make certain that the President's policies are carried out and to discipline and reform the great body of civil-service employees under him.

I believe it can be shown that there are many civil-service employees, through themselves or their friends, who are adding fuel to this fire now calculated to attack this administration. Some of the present employees of the Government are so partisan and so friendly to the last administration that they do not want this administration to be a success. I refer to this merely to illustrate the point that a President, in order to succeed, must be surrounded by enthusiastic believers in him and in his policies.

A few observations, which may sound political, are rather compulsory. The position of Postmaster General Work is attacked in the call for this meeting and unjustly so. The committee representing this league who called upon him consisted of Mr. Foulke, who claims to be independent in politics, and another gentleman who said frankly that he was a Democrat, and a third gentleman who did not volunteer his politics. While Mr. Foulke is acting president, I heard Mr. Dana, the president of the league, criticize President Harding in his speech in Detroit last autumn, and I am told he is a Democrat.

There is absolutely no cause for alarm on the part of the great body of civil-service workers who do their work well—none whatever. It is unfair and unkind to them to advertise this bogy scare, which has no foundation in fact. The wheels of government would be absolutely clogged without a rational civil service law and a Civil Service Commission. It is a necessity of Government. This present alarm is an apparition, a phantom, a scare put up in order that a few now under civil service who ought to be put out may hide behind it. It is the villain's plea who, dodging behind his wife, cries out, "Don't strike a woman."

Now, we should all be fair with our President. I ought to tell you how very ready he has been to back up the Civil Service Commission and encourage it in taking many advance steps during the past year. As head of the Civil Service Commission I had every reason to know of the sympathetic attitude of the President toward civil service. One of the most important and far-reaching movements in civil service in its history has been to make it possible to rate applicants for civil service positions on something "plus" scholarship. The commission advocated the policy of investigating the character and personal fitness of applicants and to average their rating in these things in with their scholastic ratings in order that a more practical and businesslike result might be obtained. The President not only enthusiastically supported us in this, but by a special message recommended that Congress appropriate $40,000 in order that this work might be begun, and such appropriation has been made. It is the first step of its kind in the history of the country. It is a part of the program to put more business into the Government.

In addition to this, there has been going on for some time in the council of civil service, in cooperation with the Bureau of the Budget, a study of the personnel problem of the Government looking to a personnel board and better personal management. The President has interested himself in this.

For the first time in the entire history of the country, we now have inaugurated a system of welfare work among the employees. This was begun in the Post Office Department, where more than one-half of the Federal civil service employees may be found, and Mr. Dennison, a $50,000 man working for practically nothing, was induced by the President and General Hays to come here to inaugurate this great work. He has already organized some 500 welfare councils in the country and is gradually establishing better working conditions, better health conditions, and, in short, humanizing the Postal System. There are still to be accomplished a vast number and a vast amount of tasks in order that the civil service of the Government may be perfected and the workers of the Government placed on a better footing. There are many things to be corrected; there are many injustices going on constantly. There are many reforms within the service itself in the handling of the employees and in doing justice to them which would be a great advance step and highly beneficial to the Government. There is now a lack of personnel correlation between the different departments. There is a lack of system. There is no uniformity of method in which the personnel is handled and treated. There is need of a work which should call for a master personnel man who is able to do for the personnel of the Government in the line of coordinating and correlating a task similar to that done by General Dawes in relation to purchases and finances.

Personal spites, personal affections, and petty jealousies among the personnel of the Government work more harm and injustice to the ordinary civil service man and woman than politics have ever done. Along these lines lies a great work of correction.

These problems of internal upbuilding in the civil-service system are the most pressing and most important of all.

I must say that since I have been associated with civil service I have seen very little interest on the part of the league in these very important questions. They have seemed to me to be interested almost wholly in grasping every possible office and putting it under civil service. They have been so eager to get higher and higher officials under the cover of civil service that I have assumed they have no idea of stopping short of the President. I have certainly expected some of them to advocate covering in Senators, judges, and Congressmen.

It was said in the call for this meeting that I favored restricting civil service to the lower places of the service, presumably meaning the low-paid employees. This is not my position, because I believe that everyone from the President down is rather poorly paid, and if I adopted that as my position I would have everyone under civil service, which is the very thing against which I contend. There are officials now under civil service who are paid $6,000 per year, while the assistants to Cabinet officers, including myself, being administrative officers not under civil service, are paid only $5,000 per year. I fail to see what inducement to stay in the service it would be to permit one of these $6,000 men to accept my position at $5,000. The Director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing receives $6,000 per year and is under civil service; the Supervising Architect of the Government receives $6,000 per year; and there are still several others receiving $6,000 and many $5,000, all under civil service. But to be sure that I be not misunderstood, I again say that the line between civil service and administrative officials should not be drawn on salary but on the principle which I have set forth.

Perhaps I should say, in answer to an implied if not a direct charge to the contrary, that during the eight months that I was with the Civil Service Commission neither the President nor any Cabinet officer violated any civil service law.

When the preceding administration of the Post Office Department came into power all of the fourth-class post offices and postmasters of the country, being the small post offices, were under civil service. They had been placed under civil service by preceding Presidents, and so far as appears were generally doing their work acceptably. The Post Office Department was certainly in as good condition at the beginning of the preceding administration as at the end. Let me call attention to what happened, merely to offset the impression which certain persons are trying to make upon the country that this administration is against the civil service: President Wilson, coming into office with these 38,000 post offices and postmasters under civil service, forthwith, by Executive order and at one fell swoop, ordered all these postmasters removed from civil service and ordered the Civil Service Commission to hold examinations in all of the 38,000 places to fill the vacancies. This was done, and as a result about 14,000 of the civil-service postmasters, who were then doing good work, lost their jobs and 14,000 Democrats took their places. This administration thus far has allowed them to remain. It would seem to have been fair that if on these examinations a postmaster who was already under civil service and serving the country faithfully passed the examination as "No. 1" he should be given the office; but this was not the case. It does not appear what Mr. Foulke did at that time by way of protest.

It should be needless to state that the first, second, and third class postmasters are not under civil service now, and never have been. They have never acquired a civil-service status. Such Executive orders as have been made with reference to them have been merely a delegation by the President to the Civil Service Commission of the duty of examining them and making up a list for the President to select from. The President is not even obliged to select from these lists when they are thus made up. The power of appointing these presidential postmasters is with the President and the Senate. He has the right to change this order any minute he chooses. It is merely a means of selection. To speak of General Work's desire to vacate the present Executive order with reference to presidential postmasters as tending to undermine the civil-service system is illogical and irrelevant. They are not a part of the civil-service system at all.

Now, it is urged against my contention that a President's hands are too much tied by having the high administrative positions placed under civil service that the President, even now, when they are under civil service, has the power to take them out from under civil service whenever he desires. This is technically true to a large extent, but it is not a practical proposition. The President can not be put in a position of having to be called upon every time a Cabinet officer finds himself improperly hampered and interfered with by high administrative officers being under civil service. The practical operation heads up with the Cabinet officer and he does not have the power to remove positions from civil service by Executive order. What I contend for is a complete and definite understanding which shall be adopted and established as a policy, accepted by all, that certain well-defined administrative offices ought not to be and shall not be under civil service. This would put a stop to the contest.

Here lies the good to come from this meeting. The public will find out from this meeting what the power of a President is, and furthermore they will see wherein it is right and necessary to exercise that power. Since Cabinet officers do not have this power to remove positions from civil service and since the President can not be troubled with a multiplicity of details involved in getting him to exercise his power, it follows as a practical matter that the President's policies and the Cabinet officer's policies are in unsympathetic hands. As I said before, the President himself can not give the time to these problems and should not be asked to do so, and, therefore, a system should be devised which does not require him to do so. He has the legal right, as he did in the case of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, to remove offices and officers from civil service when he deems it for the public good. He did not then, and has not in his administration, violated a single civil-service law. He can lawfully put in or take out a person from civil service without giving any reasons therefor if he deems it for the public good. He is not obliged to give the notice to discharged employees required of all other removing officers because he is given the right under the fundamental civil-service law to make any exceptions to that law which he sees fit. I am speaking only of the law and the President's power in a general way. I have no knowledge of the situation in the particular case in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and am only answering the charges that he has violated the law.

In conclusion, I urge all friends of civil service to get behind the movement to perfect the personnel system of the Government in such a manner as shall be most just and satisfactory to the employees and at the same time most efficient and beneficial to the Government, and help build up and perfect the work of the Civil Service Commission as the great acting personnel agency of the Government. And particularly I urge the adoption of a policy wherein every administration without the restraint or restriction of any civil-service law may bring to the aid of its policies from all the people, including the civil service, all those higher officials who are directly concerned in the formulation of administrative policies and essential to insure that those policies be carried into effect, because it is only in this way that the expressed will of the people as to policies and issues will be most certain of fulfillment.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat may I ask him a question? I just want to get this matter clear. I judge from the report that this unfavorable report is dictated because of the decision in the case of Persing against Daniels.

Mr. STERLING. Largely.

Mr. HARRISON. It was not because of any objection that the committee had to getting information from the President as to whether there had been any demotions or discharges of disabled soldiers? That is right, is it not?

Mr. STERLING. The Senator is substantially correct.

Mr. HARRISON. Then if we should eliminate the "whereas" it would cure the defect that the Senator has pointed out; and I feel sure from what the Senator has said that the committee would have no objection to the resolution in that form. Certainly, I can see no reason why anyone should have objection if the resolution should read then, leaving out the "whereas"—

Resolved, That the President of the United States is hereby requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to inform Congress:

(a) Whether honorably discharged sailors and soldiers, whose records were good, have been demoted, dropped, or discharged from the civil service since the 4th day of March, 1921; and

(b) By what, if any, charges or lack of efficiency justifying said dismissal or demotion; and

(c) Giving the name and date of demotion, dropping, or discharge of each soldier or sailor.

The Senator would have no objection to the resolution in those words, I take it?

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, the preamble is not the resolution. The resolution, aside from the preamble, plainly indicates that it is based on the proviso to section 4 of the act of August 23, 1912. That runs all through the resolution, and the committee reported not on the preamble alone—that indicates, of course, a purpose—but the resolution itself, aside from the preamble, indicates its purpose, and uses the language of the proviso to which I referred, and which, I say, under the decision of the court of appeals of this District, is inoperative.

Mr. HARRISON. Then the Senator has objections to the resolution which he did not state in his first speech? He is opposed, then, to the President being asked by the Senate to transmit to the Senate the names of discharged sailors and soldiers, whose records are good, who have been discharged or dismissed from the public service?

Mr. STERLING. I am opposed to it, Mr. President, as I say, because it is based on this resolution, and because the inquiry in a general way, without having a basis in law for its being made, would serve no useful purpose.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to offer the resolution with the "whereas" stricken out, and I will ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I object.

Mr. HARRISON. I should like to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The reading clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States is hereby requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to inform Congress:

(a) Whether honorably discharged sailors and soldiers whose records were good have been demoted, dropped, or discharged from the civil service since the 4th day of March, 1921; and

(b) By what, if any, charges or lack of efficiency justifying said dismissal or demotion; and

(c) Giving the name and date of demotion, dropping, or discharge of each soldier or sailor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the resolution being received?

Mr. STERLING. I object. The Senator from Utah, when on the floor, objected to the consideration of either of these two resolutions or reports on the resolutions to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I have not heretofore said anything regarding the way in which the ex-service men have been treated in connection with the matter of appointments. I have realized that as a matter of law the administration had a legal right to make such appointments as the President may think best.

The other day—I think, on Friday or Saturday of last week—I saw an editorial in one of the local papers extolling this administration for favoritism which had been shown to the ex-service men in connection with the appointments to postmasterships throughout the country. I have received from time to time information regarding various appointees who have been preferred over the ex-service men. The President issued an order, dated October 14, 1921, which went out to the country as showing an intention, I take it, on the part of the President to favor the ex-service men. That order provided that in civil-service examinations the ex-service men should be credited with five points on their examination papers. That order was very peculiarly worded, and kept the promise of the President well within the bounds of the law; nevertheless it created the impression throughout the country that the ex-service men would be given preference in these appointments. As a result of that the ex-service men, regardless of politics, applied for appointment to different positions, especially postmasterships; and, where their ratings would justify it, it seems to me they have reasonably expected to receive the appointments.

I merely want to state the facts. I have before me correspondence regarding two positions in New Mexico. In one case the ex-service man had been postmaster. He had been reappointed to the position just prior to the expiration of the last Congress; but the Senate, following out its general policy—I mean, as then controlled by the present majority party—decided not to confirm any such nominations, and so the appointment went over.

Later, in pursuance of the order for an examination to be held, that postmaster, an ex-service man, took the civil-service examination and he received a rating of 96.4 per cent. The next highest applicant received a rating of 82.53 per cent. The second man was not an ex-service man. Some time previously he had been postmaster at that same place, but objections had been made to the way in which he had conducted his office. A vigorous protest came in from the patrons of the office against his appointment, not only on account of his rating and the fact that he was not an ex-service man but because in his previous incumbency his services had not been satisfactory. Notwithstanding that situation, this second man, who had received a rating of only 82.53, received the appointment as against an ex-service man who had been conducting satisfactorily the work of this particular office and had a civil-service rating of 96.4 per cent.

Another case is that of the widow of an ex-service man. She applied for appointment as postmaster, and apparently, according to the information which I have, had the indorsement of practically all of the people of the community. In the civil-service examination her rating was 91.63 per cent. The rating of the next highest applicant was 82.2 per cent. The second applicant was a man, and he received the appointment.

So it seems to me that the spirit in which the country believed the President had entered his order of October, 1921, must result in a disappointment. If politics is to be removed, or if the ex-service men are to receive any consideration in appointments to office; if the women of the country, the widows of ex-service men, are to be given any consideration, it seems to me that it should have been done in the two cases which I have mentioned. In each case, both appealing to the consideration of the country, the applicant who was not appointed had the approval of the patrons of the office and had a much higher rating under the examination given by the Civil Service Commission. I do not believe it is right for the newspapers of the country to refer to the fact, and rather take consolation in the thought, that the administration is doing something in a preferential way for the ex-service men of the country or for their widows. If those in authority want to make politics out of this thing, they have a perfect right to do so under the law; but if they are going to do that, why should not the proposition be stated openly, so that the ex-service men of the country may understand all the time that they are not going to receive any preference from this administration?

Now, Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Glass	McNary	Stanley
Ball	Hale	Nelson	Sterling
Borah	Harris	Newberry	Sutherland
Brandegee	Harrison	Nicholson	Swanson
Broussard	Heflin	Norris	Townsend
Bursum	Johnson	Oddie	Trammell
Calder	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Underwood
Capper	Jones, Wash.	Page	Wadsworth
Caraway	Kellogg	Phipps	Walsh, Mass.
Culberson	Kendrick	Pittman	Walsh, Mont.
Cummins	Keyes	Poindexter	Warren
Curtis	King	Pomerene	Watson, Ga.
Dillingham	La Follette	Rawson	Willis
Edge	Lenroot	Robinson
Fletcher	Lodge	Sheppard
Frelinghuysen	McKellar	Smoot

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. J. Res. 319) making available funds for preserving and protecting in the present flood emergency the levees on the Mississippi River, its tributaries and outlets, not under the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

THE TARIFF.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7456) to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, before proceeding with the item to which I was alluding yesterday when I yielded the floor, I want to call attention to a letter, one of a multitude which I am daily receiving, with respect to this bill and what it means and what its effect will be upon the public. This does not relate to the item which we will vote upon, I hope, to-day, but it is germane to the bill before the Senate, and for that reason I desire to read a portion of it to the Senate. The writer says:

> In my personal opinion it is quite apparent to anyone familiar with the industry that the chemical manufacturers are not aiming for a tariff as a protective measure, but are taking advantage of this unusual opportunity to have put in force a schedule of rates that will put an end to all foreign competition and in turn assure them of another extended period of unprecedented profit making as during the war.

Mr. President, I have charged, and I charge again, with respect to this chemical schedule, one which affects practically every industry and manufacturing concern of the country, because the articles are of a fundamental or primary character and constitute the bases of thousands of finished products, that this chemical schedule has been drawn in the interest of the chemical producers of the United States, in order that they may perpetuate monopolies which they have organized and extort from the people hundreds of millions of dollars annually, as they did during the progress of the war.

In the discussion of these schedules, Mr. President, I shall point to articles where the manufacturers in the United States charged our own Government and the people during the war 2,000 and 3,000 and 4,000 per cent above the pre-war prices. There was absolutely no limit to their greed and their cupidity and their avarice. They would rob and plunder their own Government as they would rob and did rob the American people, and many of the chemical manufacturers in the United States are seeking by this bill to perpetuate their power and opportunity to plunder the American people in the future as they plundered them during the war.

Here is corroboration from a man who is engaged in production, and who writes me, as many are writing me, denouncing the infamy of this bill, which comes here with the O. K. of some of the majority members of the Finance Committee on it. It comes, too, with the O. K. of the "tariff bloc," and those who appeared before the tariff bloc indicated their approval of this chemical schedule, including the dye embargo. I resume the reading:

> If the proposed rates go through, they will achieve their purpose

That is, as the writer says, these chemical manufacturers will have "another extended period of unprecedented profit making as during the war," because it will destroy all foreign competition. The writer further says:

For it will be impossible for any business such as the one we are engaged in to think of competing against such prohibitive rates. My specific purpose in writing is to call your attention to the proposed 15 cents per ounce duty on strychnine, inasmuch as strychnine is a commodity which is purchased in large quantities by constituents of your State and of many other States in the United States. It is the only poison which has been found suitable for the extermination of gophers, jack rabbits, and rodents of various characters which are such a great menace to agriculture in the Western States. It is impossible for us to obtain figures as to the quantities consumed by the various States in combating rodents, but it is safe to state that four-fifths of the entire amount of strychnine produced is used by the farmer for the purpose described.

Four-fifths of the strychnine brought in the United States or produced in the United States is consumed by the agricultural classes, and yet the Chemical Trust, which has dictated these schedules, proposes to make the farmer pay tribute to it as by these schedules determined.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TOWNSEND in the Chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Will the Senator kindly indicate by whom the letter was written?

Mr. KING. I am not at liberty to give the gentleman's name. It is written by a manufacturer of medicines in the United States.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Does he ask the Senator to withhold his name?

Mr. KING. Oh, no.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. It seems to me the name of the author ought to be included in the RECORD if the Senator can give it.

Mr. KING. I would not feel at liberty to put it in the RECORD without the writer's consent. The Senator from New Jersey might do so, but I would not.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I only have this object: I am anxious that the rates shall be just and fair to American industries so far as possible, but when a statement of that character is made and the letter quoted as an authority given I think it is due to the Senate and those who are defending these schedules that the author's name be included.

Mr. KING. I hope the Senator will give to the Senate the names of the men who went into the committee room after the hearings were closed, and who were in the corridors around the committee room for weeks after the hearings were closed, and who were constantly being communicated with by members of the Finance Committee, as well as what they said, especially Mr. du Pont and others interested in Schedule 1 of this bill.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I do not know what the motive of the Senator is in making that statement. There is no secrecy regarding the men who were asked to give the committee information. When they were invited to attend both sides in the controversy were invited. There were no star-chamber proceedings and nothing anyone desires to conceal. I think the Senator is very unfair in his assumption that there were any methods which could be criticized. The committee asked questions of everyone who had information to give. So far as I am personally concerned, I see in the requests that were made nothing that was improper, and no influence was exercised, as the Senator suggests or intimates.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have said before and I repeat now without any desire to be offensive or critical of my good friend from New Jersey, a member of the Finance Committee, that in my opinion, after the hearings were closed at which the minority members were permitted to be present, the committee had no right to hear testimony either for or against any schedule unless the minority members were present or were invited to be present. I charge that the committee received Mr. du Pont, who was interested in the dye monopoly, and talked with representatives of the Carbide Trust and others after the hearings were closed; and no Democratic members were permitted to be present.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield further to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. KING. Let me finish my statement, and then I shall be glad to yield.

Democratic members of the committee were not present and were not advised of the entrance into the committee room of persons who were seeking benefits under this bill or of the consultations of the committee with representatives of these companies, the name of one of whom I have mentioned, and there were others.

I now yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I appreciate the Senator's courtesy very much. He has criticized the committee. Of course, the chairman of the committee is not at the moment here to make answer to the charge of unfairness. I simply want to say, so far as Mr. du Pont is concerned, or anyone else who appeared before the committee at the request of the chairman or other members of the committee, that not only was Mr. du Pont heard, but Mr. Metz, who was opposed to the embargo and opposed to the dye schedule. There was no favoritism.

I do not think the information we were seeking with regard to the manufacturing processes and conditions of dyes and chemicals and other information was in any way improper information. It was information the committee desired and had a right to have, and the chairman of the committee had a right to invite those men. There was no secrecy about it, and no effort at secrecy. The Senator could have been present had he so desired, and, therefore, I think the Senator is not only unfair but unjust in intimating that there was any collusion of any kind whatsoever.

Mr. KING. The Senator has heard my statement, and whatever implications and deductions are warrantable from it may be drawn. I deny that there was any statement that there was collusion. I did not even use the word "unfair." The Senator used it three times.

What I did say was that in my opinion after the hearings were closed, hearings where the various interests had the right to appear and present their respective views, after the doors were closed against the Democratic Senators in order that the majority might proceed to the consideration of the bill in executive session for the purpose of formulating the schedules—and there is no complaint in regard to that matter—I say, in my opinion, it was not right for the committee to open up the hearings again and hear witnesses either for or against any schedule without giving the minority members a right to be present and hear what was said and to cross-examine witnesses if they so desired.

I want to say in good faith to my friend from New Jersey, who is an able man and a good man and who wants to be a fair man, and aside from questions where his interests are involved I know he is a fair man——

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The Senator damns with faint praise.

Mr. KING. No; I do not intend to damn the Senator. His conduct will do that or save him. Nothing I might say would save or damn him.

I want to say to the Senator as man to man, if I may use the language of the street, that, reposing confidence in the able Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], whose long service entitles him to the confidence of the people and of the country, and in my distinguished friend the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], and other Members upon that side of the Chamber, as well as Members upon this side, the Senate selected them to constitute this great committee, the Committee on Finance of the Senate, which deals with our revenue legislation, with tariff laws, and with a multitude of important measures, perhaps the most important committee in our legislative body. We select members of the Judiciary Committee, lawyers of distinction and ability, that they may pass upon important questions which are committed to their care. When the Committee on the Judiciary report back there is no politics in their report. They sit and listen to testimony for and against measures which are submitted, and when they have heard the testimony they formulate bills and report them back to the Senate.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. May I conclude what I was about to state, and then I shall be very glad to yield to my friend from North Dakota.

The Committee on Finance had referred to it a tariff bill known as the Fordney bill. They elected, as they had the right to do, to have hearings and announced to the country that they were going to have hearings. Men came and spoke for and against many of the schedules in the Fordney bill. The hearings were closed. During the hearings, when the committee was functioning as a committee, Democrats were present. When the hearings were closed it ceased to function as a committee and it became then a partisan part of the committee. I am not complaining; I am merely stating what the fact is. That partisan part of the committee, the Republicans, said they were going into executive session for the purpose of considering the evidence which had been received and preparing a bill to report back to the Senate. They closed the doors and the Democrats were excluded.

Later on, indeed, almost immediately, when I am sure members of the committee wanted to go on with the consideration of the bill and did not want any more testimony, and certainly did not want it in secret, representatives of special interests came here, Mr. du Pont among them, representatives of the Carbide Trust, and others whose names I shall place in the record before I conclude this discussion—every one that I can obtain. They came to Washington and haunted the corridors of the Senate Office Building and camped in front of the door of the committee room day after day and week after week, and some of them went into the committee room and made their statements.

The Democrats do not know what was said. Undoubtedly their testimony had some influence upon the committee. I would not be so blind as to say that their testimony did not influence the committee. When I say it influenced the committee I am saying nothing improper. All testimony is bound to influence those who hear it, whether it is a judicial body or legislative body. The extent of the influence will vary with the importance of the testimony, with the knowledge of the witness, and with the interest which he exhibits. But undoubtedly the persons who testified before the Republican members of the committee had some influence, much or little.

They went into the room for the purpose of exerting influence. They went in there for the purpose of securing something. They went in there for the purpose of trying to have something in the schedule of the bill conform to their views, their wishes, and their interests. I say the Democrats do not know what that testimony was. We have not the advantage of it. We do not know what they said. We do not know what influence it had upon the members of the committee.

After they had concluded the bill was reported.

The complaint I make is not that further testimony was taken, not that further hearings were granted, but that when the doors were opened for more testimony that the minority members of the committee were not notified. It is just like a matter in court. Frequently the case closes, the testimony is ended. Counsel for one side or the other discovers that some testimony was omitted or newly discovered evidence has been brought to his attention, or some new authorities have been found that were not presented in the argument. He thereupon serves notice upon the other side that on a certain day he will apply to the court to reopen the case and offer additional testimony upon a particular branch of the case, or he will move the court to permit him to submit certain authorities to the court and to further argue the case. Opposing counsel, being thus advised, go to the courtroom and then have their say. The court, if it is in the interest of justice, will reopen the case for the purpose of receiving additional testimony or authorities or to hear further arguments by counsel. There is nothing improper in that course. So I submit, Mr. President, in this case that if new testimony was to be taken, if additional witnesses were to be heard, the proper way would have been to advise the minority, so that they could be present in order that they might be informed as to the character of the testimony.

Now, I desire to show the dilemma—and I use a very soft phrase—in which Senators who are not members of this committee are put. I am not a member of the committee; I want to know what has been said before that committee as a basis for the schedules in this bill; I asked for all the testimony taken before the committee in relation to the chemical schedule, and was furnished these two volumes [indicating]. There is further testimony bearing upon other schedules, some of which I have carefully read. From the testimony which I have before me bearing upon the chemical schedule and applying it to the rates, I try to determine whether or not the rates are fair. After the hearings were closed, witnesses went into the committee room and testified, but their testimony is not here. What did they say? What influence did it have upon the rates as finally determined? I do not know. All the testimony I have is what is before me, but Republican Senators who are members of the Finance Committee have other facts or are presumed to possess them. They may be right in their position as to this schedule; I may be wrong in my opposition to it; but, based upon the facts here presented, I think I am right. Republican Senators may be in possession of some cogent arguments, of persuasive testimony which was given after the hearings were closed, to which I have no access, to which my friend the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] has no access; so we are compelled to make up our judgments from extraneous information and from the testimony which we have before us. That is the thing of which I complain. I now yield to my friend the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I thank the junior Senator from Utah for giving me an opportunity at this time to explain away a misapprehension under which the Senator seems to labor and under which others, possibly, may labor as to what occurred in the committee room when the majority of the committee had the tariff bill under consideration, after having closed the testimony. I think we followed the rule which has always been followed; that, while the majority frames the tariff bill, it, nevertheless, allows any Senator, either Republican or Democrat, to come before the committee. In a certain sense some one may say that that is a hearing; but it must be remembered that the Finance Committee is a committee of the Senate, and being a committee of the Senate any Member of the Senate has, in my opinion, the right to appear before it. That has been the rule which I have always understood has been generally followed. That was not for the purpose of obtaining further testimony; it was not for the purpose of opening up a second hearing or anything of that character; but we allowed Senators to come before the committee and, without argument, to state plainly any grounds of dissatisfaction, and that was the end of the matter.

Mr. KING. Let me interrupt the Senator right there to say that I have made no criticism, although I feel I might justly do so, about Senators appearing before the committee. I was not alluding to Senators appearing before the committee.

Mr. McCUMBER. I intend to make a further explanation to the Senator. I think I can also explain the other matter to which the Senator alludes, and I do not think he will find very much fault, at least with the rule which the committee adopted.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota allow me to amplify his statement in one particular?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the senior Senator from Utah?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in the consideration of the Democratic tariff bill in 1913 even a Senator was not allowed to appear before the subcommittees which were framing the bill. No minority member of the committee at that time had anything to say, one way or the other, about fixing the rates, unless, perhaps, it may have been said upon the floor of the Senate. I asked permission to appear before a number of the subcommittees, and I was told that it would be against the rules; that no one would be allowed to appear before the committee or the subcommittee while the bill was being framed unless invited. We have not gone that far in the framing of the pending measure.

There never has been a tariff bill written, as the Senator from North Dakota has stated, but that it has been framed by the party in power, and the party in power has invited people to appear before it in order to obtain information which they thought they could give. I will say to the junior Senator from Utah that the Committee on Finance this year has gone further than any committee has ever previously gone in the matter of hearing Senators and Representatives, for, as the Senator from North Dakota has stated, there has not been a Senator or Representative who ever made a request to appear before the committee who was not allowed to do so.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the junior Senator from Utah may think that it would have been better not to go even so far as the senior Senator from Utah has stated the committee did go in the matter of hearing Senators and Representatives; but remember that Senators are coming before me every day as chairman of the committee. They wish to consult with me about this rate and that rate. Those Senators are from both the Democratic and the Republican sides of the Chamber. They see me and they see other Senators. We had no way of bringing them before the committee. After the close of the hearings, as I remember, the only occasion when the committee permitted anyone to come before the majority of the committee, who were framing the bill, was in a situation like this: Take the case of a Senator who is trying to explain something relative to a three-adjustment watch or a four-adjustment watch, who is not familiar with the technical details of such adjustments, and he says, "There is a man who has been talking to me about these adjustments. Will you allow him to explain the technical meaning for me, because I really can not explain what these adjustments mean?" Our reply has been, "You may bring him in for that purpose only—to explain some technical question." However, if the witness should begin to talk about what the rates ought to be, the chairman of the committee or some other member would say, "The testimony is closed; we are not here now to rediscuss the question of the rates; we are here now in order that you may answer these technical questions, because your Senator or Representative has asked permission for you to explain that which he says he is unable, because of lack of technical knowledge, to explain."

Perhaps such instances occurred in connection with the chemical schedule and also in connection with the textile schedule, as to which Senators on the committee might not thoroughly understand some technical term, what the jacquard process really meant, or something of that kind, and desired some explanation of a technical question. In such a case Senators brought in those who could speak for them; but in each instance we regarded it as the Senator himself explaining a technical question.

I do not think that did any harm. There were no further hearings; nothing was even taken down; no stenographer was present; but mere explanations were made of technical chemical matters which we could not understand, or of some detail involved in the manufacture of textiles, or something of that character. The committee was extremely careful that we should not go into arguments for or against a rate in addition to any arguments which may have already been heard.

Possibly some individual may have started to break over that line and try to make a case, but I do not think there was ever an instance when his attention was not called to the fact that the committee had closed its hearings and would not hear further testimony for or against any specific rate.

I admit that possibly it might have been just as well if individuals had not come in for the purpose indicated, but a Senator had a right to make an explanation. He could go out and consult some one in the anteroom in order to obtain the information and try to explain the matter himself, but possibly, a Senator not having the fundamental knowledge, it would take very much less time for some person who had the technical knowledge to explain the matter before the committee. I repeat there were no further hearings upon the merits of any schedule.

I hope the Senator will accept that as a full and a fair explanation. He may say that the expert knowledge of the persons referred to might have had some influence here or there, but I do not think it did.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Ohio for that purpose.

Mr. POMERENE. Of course, when Senators came before the committee with expert knowledge they were admitted, because the committee thought they would shed light upon the particular subject in the mind of the committee.

Mr. McCUMBER. Not shed light upon the merits of this or that rate, but to explain some technical term.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator knows my regard for him, and I did not mean that in an offensive way; but evidently the subcommittee, including the chairman, felt that they ought to receive information. It might or it might not have influence with him or with the subcommittee. We are all prone to error, and it may be the statement would just fit into a place where additional information was needed.

The junior Senator from Utah and myself come from States which are to a large extent manufacturing States, particularly my own State. My views do not entirely coincide with those of the chairman of the committee on many of these subjects, but the information which the Senator obtained may or may not have had weight with him, and it may or may not have had weight with me. I realize that it is a very difficult thing to draw the line; but it seems to me no matter what the experience has been in the past that there ought to be some memorandum made of such statements. It would be just as easy for a Senator or Representative who appeared before the majority members of the committee to submit his information in the form of a letter or a brief. Then there would be a record of it. I have such high regard for the members of the committee that I would not for the world have anything that I may have said here be construed as a reflection upon their personal integrity. I do not mean that at all.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me say to the Senator right there that there might be cases in which a clearer understanding of what some technical term meant would tend to so clarify the situation as to make us favor or oppose a given proposition. I will admit that, but the Senator must remember that almost the entire tariff bill is highly technical, not only as to the chemical schedule but other schedules as well, so much so, in fact, that when the Democrats formulate their tariff bills they have the aid of experts from the department. In 1913, when the Democrats drafted their bill, they called in experts; they had a half dozen or a dozen all of the time. We did the same. In some instances we might not have had the aid of an expert from the department—and most of the experts came from the Tariff Commission—to give us information on a certain point, or some item may have been brought up out of order, in which event a Senator may have asked that someone else explain a technical matter, just as the experts from the department would furnish explanations as to other questions, but in such case no suggestion was ever ventured as to what the tariff rate ought to be or ought not to be.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, that is touching on another phase of the question.

Mr. McCUMBER. It is exactly the same phase.

Mr. POMERENE. No; I beg the Senator's pardon. I am not complaining about experts advising the committee concerning the technical features of the bill. Of course, that is the reason why we have experts in the department. Of course, that is what we have men in the departments here for, and both sides of the Chamber have been wont to call them in for advice. There is not anything wrong about that at all.

What I am referring to is the man who is representing some special interest, it may be his own; and I say without fear of successful contradiction that in nine cases out of ten the men who came before the committee here and asked for special rates were there for a wholly selfish purpose, and not because they had any interest in the country at large. That is the difficulty.

Mr. McCUMBER. Undoubtedly. Of course, both exporters and importers would be there for their own interest; but those are not the men that were called in, as a rule. They might be out there. The person who wanted an especially high duty upon watches, for instance, might be present, and yet he might have the technical knowledge to explain to the committee what a three-adjustment movement would mean. He has not by explaining that given us any testimony concerning rates; and, as I say, I took great care that no one called in for the purposes I have mentioned should transgress the rule and go into the matter of determining tariff rates, and so forth. I will admit that sometimes a witness, because he had the interest of which the Senator speaks, would attempt to transgress that rule, and we would try quietly and respectfully to inform him that that was not our purpose.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am not complaining, as indicated by the Senator from Ohio, about the employment of experts, the obtaining of information from the Tariff Commission, or technical skill in the drafting of the very complicated schedules which we find in this complicated bill. That is highly proper. That was not what I alluded to. The hearings closed, and I was trying to find the exact day when they were closed, before the Senate Finance Committee. Can the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee advise me when the formal hearings were closed?

Mr. McCUMBER. I think it is in the report—January 9, I am informed.

Mr. SMOOT. January 9.

Mr. POMERENE. I think that is correct.

Mr. KING. My recollection was that it was early in January.

I repeat, the hearings before the Finance Committee closed January 9. Why did they close? The public understood, the minority members understood, and the Senate understood that the hearings were closed to enable the majority members of the Finance Committee to go into executive session to frame the bill. I am not complaining about that. They had the technical right to frame the bill upon any theory they pleased, and to adopt any schedule they pleased; but, notwithstanding the public understood that the hearings were closed, and the various witnesses who had testified and who had hovered for months about the committee rooms understood that the hearings were closed, and Mr. du Pont and the Carbide Trust and other concerns knew that the hearings were closed, yet these same witnesses and representatives of trusts and corporations and beneficiaries of these tariff schedules lingered here in Washington. Why? Why did they not go home where they belonged? They had come here to enlighten the committee, and doubtless did enlighten the committee, as we have in these two volumes their testimony upon the chemical schedule. Why did they stay here? The committee was in executive session. The Democrats were excluded from the room; and I am making no complaint of that, let me repeat. They stayed here for some purpose, Mr. President. What was the purpose? I leave it for Senators and the public to determine what the purpose was.

As bearing upon the question of the purpose, as throwing some light upon the object of their protracted stay in Washington, we find them day after day and week after week and month after month haunting the corridors of the Senate Office Building, where the majority members of the Committee on Finance were in executive session. Now, why were they here?

Why were they in Washington? If they were in Washington, why were they in the building where the committee meets? And why in the corridors and in the anterooms of the Committee on Finance?

I recall going to the committee room for the purpose of obtaining copies of the testimony, and I could scarcely effect an entrance into the anterooms and scarcely get along the corridors at times, because of these representatives of the predatory interests and of the beneficiaries of these high-tariff schedules. They were there in the anterooms and in the corridors. What were they there for? Some of them went into the committee room, and when they went in there doubtless they talked; they said something. Of course, I am making no imputation whatever as to the integrity of the members of the committee, because they are men of the highest character, and I have no doubt that whatever they did they conceived to be eminently proper. I am merely calling attention to the fact that whatever the witnesses did say, whether it was much or little, was said for some purpose, and I think we are entitled to know what they said. There ought to have been a stenographic report of it. My good friend the Senator from North Dakota said that there were no minutes, that there was no stenographic report. That is what I am complaining about. When they invited them in after the hearings were closed they ought to have invited the Democrats to be present, or, if they did not invite the Democrats to be present, then I respectfully submit that there should have been a stenographic report of the statements which were made.

My friend said that they came to give the committee advice upon technical subjects. Everybody knows that Mr. Irenée du Pont is not a technician in dye production. Mr. Morris Boucher, of the dye monopoly, is an expert. Doctor Herty claims to be an expert upon dyes, and others claim to be, and some are. If it was expert testimony that Mr. Irenée du Pont went in there to give his visit was futile.

That was evidenced from his testimony before the House committee when the dye embargo bill was first reported. He went in there and brutally stated that they wanted an embargo, and, as I recall, he made a similar statement before the Senate committee. At any rate, in one of the hearings he said: "Senator Penrose asked us what we wanted, and I said to him, 'We want these high-tariff rates, and then we want an embargo, and then we want the Sherman antitrust law suspended as to the dye interests, so that in the event that its terms shall be transgressed and violated we will not be prosecuted for maintaining a monopoly.'" He was very frank about it. He was before the committee, as were other gentlemen interested in this bill.

Mr. President, I leave that matter now. The fact is that these representatives of big business were in the corridors and in the anteroom and in the committee room. I shall put into the RECORD before this debate is concluded the names of perhaps 50 of them that were there for weeks and months after the hearings were closed. I feel sure that they did not influence to the prejudice of the country the distinguished Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] or my friend from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] or other members of the committee, but I think the fact that they were there and are still here in itself is rather unfortunate, because deductions and conclusions and speculations and surmises are bound to follow therefrom.

Mr. President, I was reading this letter from a person engaged in the chemical business in the United States. Let me repeat. He states that the rates in this bill are so high that they will in effect permit the chemical industry to charge the enormous prices that were imposed during the war. He was discussing strychnine. He said:

> We do not know of any logical reason as to why the American manufacturers of strychnine insist upon a 15 cents per ounce duty.
> Fifteen cents per ounce!
> Strychnine is an alkaloid extracted from nux vomica. Nux vomica comes from India, and, strange as it may seem, it is laid down in New York at a slightly lower price than in Germany, Switzerland, or England. The freight rate to continental ports of Europe figures about one-eighth of a cent per pound higher than to New York. The work of extracting strychnine from nux vomica is done almost entirely by machinery. Labor enters very little into the cost of production.

I showed yesterday, Mr. President, from the figures which at great labor I had extracted from multitudinous reports, that the labor costs before the war, with respect to the items in the chemical schedule, were only 8½ per cent, and that now they are only 8 per cent, so that alleged high price of labor can not be honestly urged as a reason for these high rates. Labor gets only 8 per cent of the selling price of these commodities. Before the war labor received 8½ per cent, but now only 8 per cent. So when they urge high labor costs as an excuse for these stupendous rates they are trying to deceive the American Senate and the American people.

> Strychnine has been on the free list since 1914. Nux vomica has been free of duty in the last three tariffs. Strychnine is a commodity which has been manufactured for years by four very large chemical manufacturers of this country. The following figures of importation of nux vomica against the importation of strychnine will show that the American manufacturers are not in need of protection. You will please note that the importation of strychnine is not embargoed, and yet the quantities imported since the war are comparatively small, whilst the importations of the last three years of nux vomica represent the highest on record.

Of course, what they want is to get nux vomica as cheaply as possible, and then a tariff on the finished product, on strychnine, so as to compel the American consumer to pay tribute to this branch of the Chemical Trust.

I read further from this letter:

> If the proposed 15 cents per ounce duty goes into effect it will practically put an end to all foreign competition which now acts as a curb to the price aspirations of domestic manufacturers. The result obviously will be that the western farmer will eventually pay considerably higher prices for strychnine, which is so essential in safeguarding his agricultural pursuit against the continual menace of rodents.

I commend this letter to the chairman of the tariff bloc [Mr. GOODING] and to my friend from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER], the chairman of the agricultural bloc. Of course, when we consider tariff legislation now we do not appeal to the Finance Committee, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], or my friend from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]. It is the "tariff bloc" and the "agricultural bloc" and the "manufacturers' bloc." So I say to the Senator from Kansas, who honors us with his presence, that his bloc is going to suffer. The farmers whom they claim to have taken under their protective wing by this bill—to which they have given their O. K.—are to be robbed and plundered by the Chemical Trust which demands this extortionate tariff upon strychnine, four-fifths of which is used by the farmers of the United States.

I suppose, Mr. President, that kissing goes by favor, and there have been kissing matches all around by these beneficiaries of the tariff bloc and the agricultural bloc and the manufacturers' bloc, and they have come to a perfect and happy accord.

Perhaps all our efforts here for the purpose of placing before the people just exactly what these rates are will be futile, but I say to the Senator from Kansas that we are going to get them to the public if it takes all summer. They are going to know what the rates are upon the items in this bill, and what the rates mean, and who are to be the beneficiaries of this deformed measure, and who will suffer as a result of its provisions. General Grant said he would fight it out on the line which he then held "if it took all summer." We are going to fight this out on this line if it takes all summer.

Mr. President, when I yielded the floor yesterday I was stating the articles on which the rates were higher than under the Underwood law. I had called attention to the changes made by the Underwood law in the Payne-Aldrich Act, and the increased rates shown in the pending bill. I also called attention to articles, giving their names, on which the rates have been increased over the Underwood law, and to other phases of the bill. I read a large number of names, and had reached the product calcined magnesia (medicinal). I will go on with that list. It includes:

> Manganese borate, manganese resinate, manganese sulphate, other manganese compounds, synthetic camphor, sod oil, seal oil, herring oil, menhaden oil, whale oil, sperm oil, other fish oils, crude wool grease, castor oil, linseed oil, hempseed oil, olive oil, poppy-seed oil, coconut oil (refined), peanut oil, alizarin assistant, combinations of oils except essential, lemon oil, orange oil, clove oil, eucalyptus oil, peppermint oil, patchouli oil, sandalwood oil, cocaine and salts of cocaine, ecgonine and salts of, castoreum, civet, musk, anathol, citral, geraniol, heliotropin, ionone, rhodinol, safrol, terpineol, vanillin; perfumery, cosmetics, and toilet preparations; bay rum, plasters, artists' paints and colors, paints, barytes (crude ore), barytes ore (ground), barium sulphate, blue pigments, ultramarine, chrome yellow, chrome green, chrome colors, gas black, lampblack, other black pigments, litharge, red lead, white lead, other lead pigments, ochers, siennas, umbers; ochers, siennas, and umbers, washed or ground; other iron-oxide pigments, spirit varnishes, all other varnishes, vermilion red containing quicksilver, zinc oxide (dry), zinc oxide (ground in oil), lithopone, potassium chromate, potassium bichromate, potassium chlorate, red prussiate of potash, yellow prussiate of potash, potassium iodide, potassium bicarbonate, potassium nitrate (refined), potassium permanganate, castile soap, perfumed toilet soap, unperfumed toilet soap, sal soda, sodium chlorate, yellow prussiate of soda, caustic soda, sodium nitrate, sodium sesquicarbonate, sodium sulphide, sodium sulphite, sodium thiosulphite, sodium hydrosulphite and compounds, potato starch, all other starches, dextrin from potato flour, British gum, strontium carbonate, strontium nitrate, sodium oxide, thorium nitrate, other salts of thorium, cerium nitrate, cerium fluoride, other salts of cerium, gas-mantle scrap, tin bichloride, tin tetrachloride, other compounds of tin, titanium potassium oxylate, all other compounds of titanium, zinc chloride, zinc sulphate, and zinc sulphide.

Mr. President, in the bill now before us the following commodities are subjected to the same rates which were imposed by the Payne-Aldrich Tariff Act of 1909. I have shown certain articles the rates on which have been raised above those of the Payne-Aldrich law, and those the rates on which were raised above duties levied by the Underwood law; those which have been taken from the free list in the Underwood Act and transferred to the dutiable list, and the general items in which there have been transfers, the number being slight, from the dutiable list in the Underwood law to the free list, as shown by the McCumber-Fordney bill. The following commodities are subjected in the bill now before us to the same rates which were imposed by the Payne-Aldrich Tariff Act of 1909:

Acetic acid, gallic acid, acetone, acetone oil, ethyl methyl ketone, chemical salts and compounds, ammonium carbonate, liquid ammonia, rochelle salts, cream of tartar, barium dioxide, blackings for cleaning and polishing, compounds of caffeine, calcium carbide, carbon tetrachloride, putty; salts and compounds of gold, platinum, rhodium, and silver; chemicals, drugs, etc., put up in tablets, pills, etc.; flavoring extracts, glycerin (crude), lead acetate (brown), calcined magnesia (medicinal), manganese borate, manganese resinate, manganese sulphate; other manganese compounds; synthetic camphor; olive oil, combinations of oils, except essential, clove oil, eucalyptus oil, patchouli oil, sandalwood oil, floral waters, plasters, blue pigments, litharge, white lead, ochers, siennas, umbers; ochers, siennas, and umbers, washed or ground; precipitated sulphate, all other varnishes, potassium chromate, potassium bichromate, yellow prussiate of potash, potassium iodide, potassium nitrate (refined), perfumed toilet soap, sodium arsenate, soda ash, sodium chlorate, yellow prussiate; soda, caustic sado, sodium sesquicarbonate, Glauber salts, sodium sulphide, sodium silicate, sodium thiosulphite, potato starch, all other starches, tin bichloride, tin tetrachloride, and other compounds of tin.

The following commodities are subjected to rates in the pending bill which are higher than the rates imposed by the Payne-Aldrich Tariff Act of 1909.

I am not giving now, of course, the various items in paragraphs 25 and 26, which number approximately 110, nor the unnamed thousands found within basket clauses. The first item is acetic anhydride. That will be one of the items we will vote upon this afternoon, I hope.

The next is citric acid. There is a story to be told about that item, and the enormous increase in the rate as shown in this bill. Then there are lactic acid, tartaric acid, formic acid, oxalic acid, amyl alcohol, buthyl alcohol, fusel oil, wood alcohol.

I wish I had time to pause to comment upon these various items. Think of increasing the tax on wood alcohol, which is so important in our industrial life at the present time. Yet, Mr. President, one may go through this list item by item and he will find that with respect to the majority of them those which particularly affect the welfare of the people, the industrial and economic life of the people, the rates have been increased to limits which, it seems to me, the avarice and cupidity of men could scarcely conceive of.

It would look as though this bill not only sought to give a grip to the Chemical Trust upon these products, but to permit them to offer impediments to the industrial development of the Nation along other lines which are dependent upon these chemical products for their expansion and success. You can not construct a house without a foundation. You can not build up a manufacturing system without chemicals. The chemical schedule is the foundation of our industrial life, and if there is any schedule in the bill which calls for low rates and for a liberal extension of the free list it should be the chemical schedule.

I repeat, I am not here, nor is any Senator on this side of the Chamber, advocating free trade. I am advocating the industrial and economic development of our country. I am pleading for the laboring man, for the growth of our manufacturing enterprises, for greater industrial growth and progress, not for less. I am pleading for the extension of our trade and our commerce. I am pleading for the American flag to be put on every sea, and for our products to be carried to every port. I am protesting against this narrow and bigoted and "die-hard" theory of protectionism which has run mad, and which finds expression in many of the cruel, harsh, and greedy schedules of this bill.

We will have factories when we can have products necessary for their operation; but if we offer obstacles to the acquisition of such products, to that degree we are interposing impediments to the economic and industrial development of our country; and when we place obstacles in the way of industrial development then we are preventing the building of factories and the operation of those already built, which will result in turning men into the streets for lack of employment. Men will go from the category of the unemployed to the position of contented employees when our industries function as they should and develop as they should along just and rational lines.

I return to the reading of the schedule, showing the higher rates imposed by the bill over the odious, the malodorous Payne-Aldrich tariff, which had been damned by public opinion, and buried, as we hoped, beyond any possible power of resurrection; but it was resurrected, regalvanized, and made more hideous and oppressive by the pending bill:

Aluminum hydroxide, potash alum, ammonia alum, aluminum sulphate, ammonium chloride, antimony sulphide, antimony salts, argols, barium carbonate, barium chloride, barium nitrate, caffeine, calomel, corrosive sublimate, other mercurial preparations; tetrachloroethane, trichloroethylene, chalk, billiard and tailor's chalk, salts and compounds of bismuth.

Bismuth, so important in our pharmaceutical tabulations. The tariff upon bismuth, that enters into the homes of the sick of the land, is raised above the rate provided in the Payne-Aldrich Act.

Chloral hydrate, turpin hydrate, thymol, urea, glycerophosphoric acid, salts and compounds of glycerophosphoric acid; coal-tar intermediates; coal-tar dyes, medicinals, and other finished coal-tar products—

Always medicines, always drugs and medicinal compounds. The manufacturers of the drugs and of the medicines are taken care of in the bill. The people will pay for it.—

Cobalt sulphate, cobalt salts and compounds, coca leaves, diethyl sulphate, dimethyl sulphate, chestnut extract, cutch extract, chlorophyll extract, divi-divi extract, fustic extract, hemlock extract, Persian berry extract; logwood, mangrove, oak extract, quebracho extract, sumac extract, saffron extract, safflower, saffron cake, valonia extract, wattle extract, all other extracts; fruit esters, oils, and essences; glue, fish glue, glue size, glycerin refined, ink and ink powders, lead nitrate, megnesium chloride, Epsom salts, sperm oil, crude wool grease, adeps lanæ, linseed oil, hempseed oil, poppy-seed oil, coconut oil refined, peanut oil, lemon oil, orange oil, peppermint oil, cocaine and salts of cocaine, ecgonine and salts of ecgonine, laudanum, anathol, citral, geraniol, heliotropin, ionone, rhodinol, safrol, terpineol, vanillin, bay rum, artists' paints and colors, paints—

Artists' paints and colors! The artists are to pay. Young boys and girls who are taking lessons in painting must pay more, of course. They must pay tribute to some of these corporations which have a capital stock of $300,000,000 and more. They are such poor little infant industries that the boys and girls who want to study painting must pay tribute to them.

Barytes (crude ore), barytes ore (ground), barium sulphate, ultramarine, chrome yellow, chrome green, chrome colors, gas black, lampblack, other black pigments, red lead, other lead pigments, spirit varnishes, vermilion reds containing quicksilver; zinc oxide (dry), zinc oxide ground in oil, lithopone, potassium permanganate, santonin, castile soap, sal soda, sodium chloride (common table salt).

We even have to pay a tariff tribute upon salt.

Sodium nitrite, sodium hydrosulphite and compounds, dextrin from potato flour, strontium carbonate, strontium nitrate, sodium oxide, sodium nitrate, other salts of sodium, cerium nitrate, cerium chloride, other salts of cerium, gas-mantle scrap, titanium potassium oxalate, other compounds of titanium, zinc chloride, and zinc sulphide.

The following commodities are the only ones reported, as I read the bill, in the chemical schedule which bear the same rates as imposed in the Underwood Tariff Act of 1913:

Pyrogallic acid, liquid ammonia, calcium tartrate (crude), copaiba balsam, Canada balsam, Peru balsam, tolu balsam, styrax, other balsams, gum amber, amberoid, gum arabic or senegal, tea waste, compounds of caffeine; chemicals, drugs, etc., put up in tablets, etc., crude chicle, refined chicle, crude drugs advanced in value by grinding, crushing, etc., buchu leaves, coca leaves, gentian, sarsaparilla roots, ergot, ethyl ether, glycerin (crude), menthol, crude camphor, adeps lanæ, rapeseed oil, opium, laudanum, ambergris, floral waters, medicinal soap, all other soaps, sodium bicarbonate, sodium borate (refined), Glaubers' salts, vanilla beans, and tonka beans.

Mr. President, I regret that interruptions and adjournments have prevented a more systematic presentation of this matter. I have been compelled to yield the floor upon a number of occasions and several days have intervened in the discussion of matters referred to, so that my observations will appear somewhat disconnected and possibly discursive.

Mr. President, I have completed the general analysis of the chemical schedule somewhat as I desire, although there have been interruptions and digressions which will show discontinuity in the analysis.

Before proceeding to the first item, acetic acid, in the chemical schedule which has been amended by the Senate Finance Committee, and upon which I hope we shall have a vote to-day——

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say to my colleague that there is no change in acetic acid, and that committee amendments are to be considered first.

Mr. KING. What I had reference to was "acetic acid containing by weight not more than 65 per cent of acetic acid, three-fourths of 1 cent per pound." There is a change made in the House bill by the Senate committee, not in the rate but as indicated in the words just quoted.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true.

Mr. KING. By adding the words "by weight."

Mr. SMOOT. That is true.

Mr. KING. That is a proper amendment, and I shall offer no objection to it, and will pro forma, when I submit a few observations, agree to the amendment. I think the amendment is in the interest of clarity and definiteness. But before adopting the amendment I wish to take a few moments to discuss acetic acid, because it is the base of some of the other commodities which are found in this schedule.

The tariff upon acetic acid, if it is desired at all, is desired by the Carbide Trust. I have gone through the record carefully to find out who asked for a tariff on acetic acid. I repeat, if there are interests seeking rates on carbide and acetic acid they are connected with the Carbide Trust and its subsidiary organizations.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I rather think my colleague is mistaken there. Carbide is manufactured in Canada, and they wanted it admitted free, of course, and demanded that it be admitted free. They were the ones who desired it free. The wood-alcohol people, who have an industry in the United States, desired to have protection upon it against the Carbide Trust of Canada.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think my distinguished colleague is in error. The United States Carbide & Carbon Corporation I denominate a trust. It has a capitalization, on the basis of 6 per cent, of more than $257,000,000. It controls 83½ per cent of the calcium carbide trade in the United States. Next to the United States Steel Corporation, and probably the Du Pont organization, it is one of the largest in the United States, if not in the world.

Mr. SMOOT. My colleague must know that they do not make one pound of acetic acid.

Mr. KING. I understand they do not make acetic acid. I agree with my distinguished friend in that. They want a tariff, and why? I will show to my friend and to other Senators before we get through that there are a large number of items in this bill where there is not a pound of the product made in the United States, and yet duties are levied under the bill. Some one wants a tariff. I ask again, Why? Paragraph 2 of the bill contains "acetaldehyde, aldol or acetaldol, aldehyde ammonia, butyraldehyde, crotonaldehyde, paracetaldehyde, ethylene chlorohydrin, ethylene dichloride, ethylene glycol, ethylene oxide, glycol monoacetate, propylene chlorohydrin, propylene dichloride, and propylene glycol, 6 cents per pound and 30 per cent ad valorem," and as I understand the facts, none of these products is manufactured in the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is mistaken there, because the very carbide people of whom he speaks manufacture a great many of those items.

Mr. KING. I think the evidence will show that the commodities in paragraph 2, if they are made in the United States at all, have been produced but recently, and that the Carbide Trust is seeking this tariff rate in order that it may, if it cares to, engage in the enterprise and, of course, keep out any competition and thus subject the American consumer to extortionate prices.

Mr. SMOOT. Why, Mr. President, the whole chemical schedule has grown out of war conditions. As to most of the items which the Senator has been criticizing, not a pound was made in the United States before the war, not a single pound; yet during the war and because of the war they developed into industries in this country.

Of course, Mr. President, some of the rates in the chemical schedule are higher than they were before the war, because previous to that time they were imposed simply for revenue purposes; they were not imposed for any other purpose.

Mr. KING. Does my colleague refer to the rates which are found in the pending bill?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I do not refer to the rates which are contained in this bill; I refer to those which were imposed in previous tariff laws. Mr. President, I can begin with the items in the first schedule, as to which my colleague has complained that the rates are higher than those which are imposed by the present law, and show that there is a reason for every one of those increases. That reason is that if we are going to establish and maintain these industries in this country—for they were started during the period of the war and for war purposes—it will be necessary for us to increase the rates and to make them protective rates rather than revenue rates, as was the case in the Payne-Aldrich law and also in the Underwood-Simmons law.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I merely desire to say one word further and then I will yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. SMOOT. As the items are reached in the bill, of course, I shall be willing to discuss them and show why the rates were increased or why they were decreased from the rates found in the bill as it came from the other House. There is, however, a good reason for each one of these increases, I will say to my colleague. It becomes a question of policy, and that question of policy is whether we shall manufacture these goods in the United States or whether they shall be imported here, as they were before the war. There is no question but that they will be imported here as they were before the war unless the protection shall be given to them which we propose to give in this bill. If we do not do that, the laboring man will have no chance at all to make those goods in this country, and there will be a great many more than at present who will be unemployed throughout the United States.

As to all other schedules in this bill, so far as the items themselves are concerned, outside of paragraphs 25 and 26—that is, as to the intermediates and the dyestuffs in the chemical schedule—the rates found in the bill may be justified without a question with, perhaps, three or four exceptions, as to which I myself feel the rates are exceedingly high.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I regret that my colleague has planted himself among the embattled hosts of the "die-hards." I had hoped that he had become more liberal in his views respecting tariff rates. My colleague, Mr. President, if I understood him correctly, states that nearly all the items in this schedule were the result of the World War. I submit that my friend, if he goes through the schedule, will find that he is in error.

Mr. SMOOT. My colleague must have misunderstood me. I said that as to the rates which have been increased over and above those of the Payne-Aldrich law in nearly every case the increase has been the outgrowth of the war. I did not say that rates on common, ordinary sulphur black and many other items found in this schedule are the outgrowth of the war, but I did say that wherever there is a rate which has been increased above the rate in the Payne-Aldrich law there is a good reason for such action. The reason will generally be found to be that the growth of the industry was due to the war and that its development was brought about because of the fact that an article not theretofore produced in this country became absolutely necessary during the war.

When I refer to paragraphs 25 and 26, the junior Senator from Utah knows that they cover many different products which are found in this schedule. The Senator will also notice that the rates on some of the items in this schedule have been reduced, some of them more than one-half below the figures of the present law, but I have tried, so far as I could do so, to give absolute protection to new industries which I felt ought to be maintained in the United States by according to them such protective tariff rates as, after the most careful consideration, I decided in my own mind were absolutely necessary. That, however, Mr. President, does not apply to many of the items which are found in this bill, as I have already said; but when it comes to the maintenance of an industry in the United States which I am convinced in my very soul it is necessary to maintain, I am not going to hesitate a moment to vote to provide the necessary duty, particularly when it is an industry of importance such as some of the industries which have been established and which are absolutely necessary if we should again become involved in war.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I was going to comment on the statement of the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] very much as the present occupant of the floor, the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], has done. From what study I have made of this bill—and I may say that it is more than a casual study—I have found many instances which do not support the general statement which has been made by the senior Senator from Utah. I was glad to have him, however, modify his general statement and concede that as to many items in the bill his general statement would not apply. I merely wish to observe that from my study of the bill the exceptions will come from just the opposite side of the question.

Mr. SMOOT. In order that there may be no misunderstanding, Mr. President, about the matter, let me take the very first item which the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] has criticized; that is, acetic anhydride. The House of Representatives provided a protective rate of 8 cents, which the Senate committee cut to 5 cents a pound. In the Payne-Aldrich bill on acetic anhydride the duty was 2½ cents a pound; in the Underwood-Simmons law it was 2½ cents a pound. Why did the committee raise that rate 100 per cent; and is that increase actually necessary? I wish more Senators were present, for I think I could convince every Senator that it is absolutely necessary for that article to be protected by a duty of at least 5 cents a pound if we are going to continue to manufacture it in this country. It was never made here previously to the war; up to that time there was no such industry in the United States; and I need not remind the Senate how we suffered during the war because of that fact.

I am not going to take the time of the junior Senator from Utah now, but when that item is reached in the bill, and before the vote is taken upon it, I want to occupy a few moments to tell the Senate why that rate was increased and how necessary that commodity became to us during the war, when we were deprived of importations of it from foreign countries and had to depend on what we could produce in the United States. We were absolutely unprepared in every way.

I am positive that the American people under the circumstances are never going to object to the rate provided by the bill on this commodity; but I know that it devolves upon the committee or some member of the committee to explain it. When it is explained, all the speeches in the world claiming that this duty constitutes 100 per cent increase over the rate in the Payne-Aldrich bill will amount to nothing, because under the Payne-Aldrich bill the rate which was imposed was not for protection, for we did not make any of the commodity in this country at that time; its manufacture was unknown in America; and the 2½-cent rate was merely put on for revenue purposes and for nothing more nor less. So, when the Underwood-Simmons bill was enacted, exactly the same rate was imposed as was imposed by the Republicans in the Payne-Aldrich bill; and a rate of 2½ cents a pound was put on it. What for? For protection? No; but for revenue. Since the war the manufacture of acetic anhydride has become an industry of the United States; we are making over 1,250,000 pounds of it every year; and after full hearings we thought that a rate of 5 cents a pound should be imposed. The House, after full hearings, imposed a duty of 8 cents a pound on the commodity, but your committee figured just as closely as could be figured upon the testimony, weighing the arguments both for and against the rate, and came to the conclusion that a duty of 5 cents a pound would be sufficient; so they cut the rate from 8 cents to 5 cents.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, this is a digression from what I was about to consider. My colleague has emphasized so much the last item, acetic anhydride, that I am tempted to briefly call attention to the hearings. As I understood the last statement made by my colleague, it was to the effect that the committee had weighed the testimony for and against and had reached the conclusion that the rate of 5 cents per pound, or 100 per cent increase, is justifiable. I have gone through the record, I think very carefully, and the only testimony that I can find relative to acetic anhydride is on page 21 of the general hearings of the tariff revision before the Committee on Ways and Means. Let me read what is said. I read from the brief of the Dow Chemical Co. of Midland, Mich., as follows:

Paragraph 2, acetic anhydride: Present rate, 2½ cents per pound; suggested rate, 10 cents per pound, based on 100 per cent strength.

Acetic anhydride is used in the manufacture of acetyl salicylic acid (aspirin)—

That is aspirin, which is so important in medicine—

also in the manufacture of cellulose acetate, a noninflammable substance used in moving-picture films, and as a "dope" or varnish for airplane wings. The present duty of 2½ cents per pound has been in effect since 1909.

Senators should bear in mind that the extract I am reading is from the brief of a chemical company which is a very large concern and has been in existence for at least 30 years. It is an interested party and seeks benefits at the hands of Congress. I do not assert that during that entire period it has been engaged in the manufacture of acetic anhydride; indeed, it is stated in the beginning of the brief that—

The Dow Chemical Co. has been manufacturing bromine and bromides for 30 years, and chlorine and chlorine compounds for nearly 25 years. The plant started on a small scale and has increased its capacity from time to time.

I recall that it states with respect to one or more commodities it has competed with Germany, but I shall not refer to that at the present time. I recur to the extract dealing with acetic anhydride:

The present duty of 2½ cents per pound has been in effect since 1909, but did not result in the firm establishment of an acetic anhydride industry in this country—

I will return to that sentence in a moment.

The war made its manufacture here imperative, and sufficient production was achieved to supply all needs of the country. During the war the Government price was 85 cents per pound for 85 per cent strength. The market price at present is about 45 cents per pound. Its importance in the production of "dope" and in the manufacture of aspirin should warrant ample protection being given to this industry, new in the United States, in order that these products may continue to be manufactured in this country rather than imported.

So far as I have discovered that is the only testimony before the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I know that there is not anything in this record of the history of this particular item; but Dow, I think, is the manager of the Midland Chemical Co. In 1908 and 1909, about the time these people started to make this product in the United States for the first time, Mr. Dow bought up a great deal of this product from Germany and shipped it into this country. They were dumping it into this country at the time for the very purpose of stopping any manufacturing of this article in the United States. He bought a great quantity of the German product and then reshipped it back into Germany, and it broke the German market.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator is in error. If he will pardon me, I will call his attention to just what the Dow Co. said:

The Dow Co. continued exporting bromides.

Mr. SMOOT. That was the bromide which was made from this article, which is the basis of it.

Mr. KING. He was speaking of bromides, not acetic anhydride.

Mr. SMOOT. I know it; but, I say, it is the basis; and at that particular time, after that was done, an agreement was reached between the Michigan people and the German people upon the question of bromides. A great many of these chemicals are related to one another, and anything that affects one affects the others, and unless one has studied the matter very carefully he hardly knows what effect a rate upon one of them would have upon 30, 40, 50, or 100 others. If this Chamber were a schoolroom, I know that we could get a chart and follow them clear through in every step from the raw material down to the last refined product; but I will say that I feel quite sure that the rates that I have spoken of on these items that have been created since the war can be justified without a question of a doubt.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in view of my colleague's statement, I want to call attention to what the brief says. It may be, as my colleague says, that there is some relation between bromides and acetic anhydride, but I doubt it.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I call the Senator's attention to the report of the Tariff Commission as to that. I find in that report this statement:

Acetic anhydride, a colorless liquid with a strong acetic odor, is derived from acetic acid by the removal of water.

Mr. KING. "Anhydride" means the expulsion of the water.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Yes; the elimination of the water from the acetic acid.

Mr. KING. That is not a bromide.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Not at all.

Mr. KING. And what the statement submitted by the Dow Chemical Co. referred to was German competition in bromides and not acetic anhydride. This is the record:

The Dow Co. continued exporting bromides, and some time after the visit of the Germans consignments of bromides were landed in New York—

That, I suppose, is what my colleague was referring to—and distributed at 15 cents per pound, the price in Germany being approximately 49 cents per pound, and the import duty 25 per cent ad valorem. The price in the United States at that time was about 30 cents per pound. Many jobbers stocked up on the German bromides, the Germans selling all they could at 15 cents per pound, and then reducing to 14 cents, to 13 cents, and the lowest offer being at 11 cents. This extended over a period of about three and three-fourths years, and the Dow Co. in the meantime had entirely ceased selling bromides in the United States, but continued to sell moderate amounts abroad, and during the last year of that period sold more bromides in Germany than the Germans sold in the United States, and it netted to Dow Co. very much more than the American price.

So that this competition from Germany, and the unfair practices of the German manufacturers and vendors, proved to be bread cast upon the waters so far as the Dow Chemical Co. was concerned, and augmented their exports and increased their profits.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I desire to call attention to the summary of the Tariff Commission's report regarding the production of acetic anhydrite. It is stated here:

Acetic anhydrite is made by treating anhydrous sodium acetate with phosphorus chloride or sulphur chloride. Prior to the war little, if any, was made in this country. The war demand for airplane "dopes" and the expiration of the patents on aspirin caused a great stimulus to the industry. The production in 1919 (preliminary figures) was 1,213,200 pounds, valued at $578,600.

That is the present production.

Imports prior to 1915 were from Germany—

That is when the patent on aspirin expired—and amounted to about 1,200,000 pounds in 1910 and 1911. They declined to about 300,000 pounds in 1913 and during the war were negligible. There have been no imports from 1919 to September 30, 1921, inclusive.

Mr. KING. Exactly.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Showing that since the war and after the expiration of the patent the production of this commodity has continued, and there were no importations of it from 1919 to September, 1921, which was the last date of this compilation of information.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, does the Senator know the reason why there was no importation?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I take it that they are producing plenty of it in this country now.

Mr. SMOOT. No; the embargo says that they can not import it here. That is the reason why there has been no importation since 1919.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator may possibly be right about that. I do not know.

Mr. SMOOT. I am quite sure I am right, Mr. President.

Mr. KING. The embargo was not put into effect in 1919.

Mr. SMOOT. The emergency tariff bill extended that embargo and the embargo is in force to-day, and as long as they can make aspirin in this country they will not allow any of it to come in from any other country.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. What provision of the embargo act includes this item?

Mr. SMOOT. I have a copy of it here, and I will send it to the Senator, and if he will read Title V of the tariff act he will find the extension of the life of the embargo.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. But I did not understand that that embargo included acetic anhydride.

Mr. SMOOT. It includes all of these chemicals, Mr. President.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. SMOOT. It includes every organic chemical.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Oh, no.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator says, "Oh, no," but I can read it.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. At least, I do not so understand. Of course I may be mistaken about it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there is not a synthetic organic chemical made to which the embargo does not apply, and I think it so specifically states in Title V.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. But acetic anhydride is not a synthetic chemical, as I understand.

Mr. SMOOT. Aspirin is, and that is what we were talking about; and so is acetic acid, as far as that is concerned.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Acetic acid is made by both processes; that is quite true; but acetic anhydride is made simply by taking the water out of the acetic acid, and is not included in the embargo act, if I have correctly understood it.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is mistaken. It is included in the embargo act, as he will see if he will look under Title V.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I understand that the Senator from Utah is possessed of a great deal of information; but he admitted a while ago that he was speaking in general terms, and I should like to have him point out specifically the provision in the embargo act which includes acetic anhydride.

Mr. SMOOT. It includes every synthetic organic chemical, and acetic anhydride is a synthetic chemical, and has been so held by the Government of the United States. There have been no importations into the United States since the first embargo act was passed, and there will not be as long as that embargo is in force, and that is why there have been no importations into this country.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if what the senior Senator from Utah says is correct, then I charge that the embargo bill which was driven through the Senate was not only an outrage that calls for the condemnation of every patriotic American but it was a shameful fraud perpetrated upon the Senate, upon the House, and upon the country. Under the guise of protecting the dye industry, and against the judgment of many Republicans of national standing and of high standing in this body, a majority of the majority party in the House and Senate drove through the dye embargo, claiming that it was necessary to save the dye industry, which was essential to the national defense. The able Senator from Pennsylvania, Mr. Knox, whose demise is so much deplored, standing at his desk, made a brief speech in favor of the dye embargo, and contended that its maintenance was essential to the perpetuity of the dye industry, and that this industry was necessary in defense of the country. I stated then that Senators were hiding behind the ramparts of our soldiers in fighting for the dye embargo; that it was unnecessary, and that an embargo was in the interest of a powerful monopoly. I charge it now. It was a wrong and a patent fraud upon the people.

Now, my distinguished colleague says that the embargo went farther and extended to all synthetic organic chemical compounds, and includes acetic acid and acetic anhydride and aspirin as one of the products of acetic anhydride.

I shall not stop to analyze that statement, but I repeat what I said a moment ago—that if the embargo is so comprehensive, then a fraud was perpetrated upon the Senate and upon the American public. I believe that not all of the Senators and I think not a majority of them when they voted for the emergency tariff bill, including the dye embargo, understood that the embargo provision was to act as a prohibition of the importation of all the products which seem to be embraced within the category referred to by my distinguished colleague.

Mr. SMOOT. This is what the law says:

And no synthetic organic drugs or synthetic organic chemicals shall be admitted to entry or delivered from customs custody in the United States or in any of its possessions unless the Secretary determines that such article or a satisfactory substitute therefor is not obtainable in the United States or in any of its possessions in sufficient quantity and on reasonable terms as to quality, price, and delivery, and that such article in the quantity to be admitted is required for consumption by an actual consumer in the United States or in any of its possessions within six months after the receipt of the merchandise.

The Senator knows, of course, that I voted against it.

Mr. KING. I know that; the Senator and I were in accord on that measure.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no question but what acetic anhydride is a synthetically produced chemical, and they could not hold otherwise in the department than that it is, under the provision of the law I just read.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CAPPER in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The language of the statute uses just the general expression "no synthetic organic drugs or synthetic organic chemicals." I do not understand that acetic anhydride is a synthetic drug or chemical. The crude product made in this country is made from distillation of hardwood. From that you get three products. You get alcohol, you get acetate of lime, and you get charcoal. Acetate of lime is the crude material from which is produced acetic acid, and from the acetic acid the water is taken, and that produces acetic anhydride.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the bold statement that is made here, but there is another acid necessary in order to make acetic acid into acetic anhydride.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Acetic acid is now made by a synthetic process at Shawinigan Falls, in Canada, and that is the only place where acetic acid is made by the synthetic process; but the acetic anhydride is not made by a synthetic process, as I understand the term. Acetic acid, the product from which the acetic anhydride is derived, is made by both processes, acetic acid by the synthetic process in Shawinigan Falls, and acetic acid made from acetate of lime through wood distillation.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that if he will ask the Tariff Commission they will tell him that acetic anhydride is produced by a synthetic process. It is not a question of just taking out the water, as the Senator said. The acetic anhydride is made from acetic acid, as the Senator said. There is no doubt about that. But another acid is necessary in order to transfer the acetic acid into acetic anhydride, and therefore it becomes a synthetic process. That is why the department classifies it as a synthetic chemical, and it is prohibited from coming into this country under the law.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I should like to call the Senator's attention to another provision of that statute. I will read it again:

That on and after the day following the enactment of this act for a period of three months no sodium nitrate, no dyes or dyestuffs, including crudes and intermediates, no product or products derived directly or indirectly from coal tar, including crudes, intermediates, finished or partly finished products, mixtures, and compounds of such coal-tar products, synthetic organic drugs or synthetic organic chemicals, shall be admitted to entry or delivered from customs custody in the United States or in any of its possessions unless the Secretary determines that such article or a satisfactory substitute therefor is not obtainable in the United States or in any of its possessions in sufficient quantity and on reasonable terms as to quality, price, and delivery, and that such article in the quantity to be admitted is required for consumption by an actual consumer in the United States or in any of its possessions within six months after the receipt of the merchandise.

I call attention to the fact that that section of the act could not have applied in this case unless there was a lack of that commodity in the United States. Therefore, at the time of the passage of this act there was being produced in this country sufficient acetic anhydride to meet all demands, and it was not made by any synthetic process.

Mr. SMOOT. I will state to the Senator that if he will ask any of the tariff experts or if he will call up the Treasury Department on the telephone they will tell him it is a synthetic chemical and made by a synthetic process. The very reason the embargo applied was because of the fact that at the time of the passage of the act containing the embargo provision we were making enough in this country to supply the demands of America.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Referring to another phase of the situation, the information which we have is that none of it was produced in this country because of a patent on the process, and that patent has expired.

Mr. SMOOT. There was no patent on this process, but there was a patent as to aspirin.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I refer to the production of aspirin.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator's statement is correct as to that.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. In the production of that article this product is used, and that was a patented process, and that is the reason why there was no production in this country beforehand. I suppose the senior Senator from Utah will make inquiry as to why this duty is imposed in this amount, even though its importation at this time is prohibited by the embargo act. But I should really like to know whether there is a ruling of the department that this acetic anhydride is the result of a synthetic process.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator can find out in five minutes by going to the phone and calling up the Treasury Department.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I supposed the Senator from Utah would have the information at hand.

Mr. SMOOT. I have it at hand, and I will say to the Senator that there is no question but that it is the ruling of the Treasury Department that it is a synthetic chemical and is embargoed from coming into the United States. That is the reason there is no importation.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Treasury Department makes that ruling with respect to the article under discussion, acetic anhydride, made as a product from the distillation of wood, they are violating the law. I affirm the accuracy of what the Senator from New Mexico has stated.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator is wrong in inferring that it is a direct product from the distillation of wood. It is not a product of the distillation of wood. Acetic acid is; but another chemical is needed in order to make acetic anhydride, and therefore it becomes a synthetic process, and I think the decision of the Treasury Department is absolutely correct. If it were made from a distillation of wood, then my colleague would be correct and the Senator from New Mexico would be correct; but it is not. It is made by the addition of another chemical to acetic acid, and therefore it becomes a synthetic process.

Mr. KING. I have been diverted, and I intend to get back to the Dow brief before I get through. But I repeat what I was stating when the senior Senator from Utah last addressed the Chair. Acetic anhydride when not made as it is made in Canada, by a sort of electric process and from carbide, but made as it is made by the Dow Chemical Co., does not come within the category of a synthetic chemical product, so as to be entitled to the benefits of the injunction imposed by the emergency tariff law.

Mr. SMOOT. Acetic anhydride is not made from calcium carbide.

Mr. KING. I did not say it was.

Mr. SMOOT. It can not be made in that way.

Mr. KING. I did not say it was made that way in the United States. I said, in effect, that if it were made from calcium carbide, then there might be merit in the contention made by my colleague, but to repeat, reading from the tariff summary, what the Senator from New Mexico read a moment ago:

Acetic anhydride, a colorless liquid with a strong acetic odor, is derived from acetic acid by the removal of water.

It is used in the manufacture of acetyl salycylic acid (aspirin) and cellulose acetate.

Acetic anhydride is made by treating anhydrous sodium acetate with phosphorous chloride or sulphur chloride.

The Dow Chemical Co. make it, and make it, as I understand, from a distillation of wood; but when we reach this item there may be further discussion upon this matter.

I was calling attention to the brief submitted by the Dow Chemical Co. of Michigan. The brief refers to the competition from Germany with respect to bromides, not acetic acid or acetic anhydride.

Referring to the suggestion of my colleague that we telephone the Treasury Department, I left the Chamber for a moment and had the Treasury Department called, and this message has just been handed to me:

The dye and chemical control section of the Treasury Department have never ruled on acetic anhydride. It has not been embargoed under the provision covering synthetic organic chemicals in the emergency tariff act.

So my colleague, or the Treasury Department, one or the other, is wrong.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know how that question was put to the Treasury Department. I say that I can go to the Treasury Department and ask for a decision as to whether that is a synthetic chemical or not, and I know they will say it is a synthetic chemical. It may be true that no one has ever asked that it be ruled upon, but I say now that any chemical manufacturer knows that it is a synthetic process. Perhaps no request for a ruling has ever been made of the Treasury of the United States. That does not mean that it is not a synthetic chemical. That message says that a ruling has never been made, but anybody in the United States who makes it knows that it is a synthetic process and falls under the embargo.

Mr. KING. My distinguished colleague said in his answer to the Senator from New Mexico, and in his general discussion, as I understood him, that the Treasury Department had ruled upon it, and that the reason why there were no importations was because acetic anhydride was covered by the embargo.

Mr. SMOOT. This is the statement I made, that if they would ask the Treasury Department as to whether this was a synthetic chemical or not I am sure they would say that it is, and that the reason why there had been no importations of it into the United States was because of the embargo. I feel just as sure as I live that that is right. The Dow Co. of Michigan do not make any distillation of wood. They buy acetic acid and put in the other acid in order to make it into acetic anhydride. That very process makes it a synthetic product. It is not made from the distillation of wood, in the first place. It is made into acetic acid first, and from that it is made into acetic anhydride.

Mr. KING. My colleague stated that one reason why there were no importations was because acetic anhydride came within the terms of the embargo.

Mr. SMOOT. And I say so again.

Mr. KING. If that be correct, then doubtless there must have been some effort to import it and there must have been some ruling.

Mr. SMOOT. Not necessarily, because of the very fact that every manufacturer knows that it is a synthetic product. Why should they bring up a question upon which they know the ruling would be against them?

Mr. KING. There has been no ruling, as I am advised by the department. If there has been no ruling, of course, I can not say what the Treasury Department might do, and prophecy would be of no utility. It is dangerous to predict as to what appears to be matters of certitude. The law is supposed to be a fixed science, and yet we are unsafe in hazarding opinions as to what the decision of a court will be. I do not know what the decision of the Treasury Department will be if it has not already ruled, and the matter should be submitted for its determination. But I do say this, that if the Treasury Department should rule that acetic anhydride, which is or may be the product of wood distillation, was a synthetic organic chemical product which came within the terms of the emergency tariff act, in my humble opinion their decision would be wrong.

Of course, what my judgment may be upon the matter is wholly immaterial. I am not a chemist. It would be the height of vanity for me to stand here and claim that I know all about these chemical compounds. I do not. I have only a general and, indeed, limited knowledge. I have tried to study the schedule under consideration and to reach the sources of information bearing upon the various products. I seek only the truth and the facts to enable me to exercise an honest, intelligent, just, and righteous judgment upon these important questions. I have no interest other than that. I have no client to service. I have no one whom I wish to please. My own conscience and my own judgment are the only guide that I have or will have in the consideration of this schedule, or any question which comes before this body. I shall respect the opinion and judgment of others, and seek all possible light, but when action is to be taken I must act upon my own responsibility. I shall vote upon this and upon all schedules as I see the light and as I understand the truth.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, does my colleague hold that camphor is a synthetically produced article?

Mr. KING. When we come to camphor I may discuss that question.

Mr. SMOOT. I only want to make a comparison. I do not think anyone will say that that has not been ruled by the Treasury Department as a synthetic chemical, and the embargo absolutely is against it and was against it, I will say to my colleague, when we were exporting hundreds of thousands of pounds of it. Now, synthetic camphor is made from what? It is made from the extract of turpentine coming from a tree. That turpentine is not a synthetic chemical any more than acetic acid is, but when it is made into camphor it is done by a synthetic process, and it is embargoed, just the same as acetic anhydride is made from the extract of a wood, first into acetic acid, and acetic acid is then made into acetic anhydride. That is a synthetic process and it is a synthetic chemical. One is from wood and the other is from turpentine.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, we have had the views of the senior Senator from Utah. I have expressed what I understand to be the attitude of the Treasury Department. I have with some temerity suggested that in my opinion it was never intended by the Senate that the emergency tariff law which we passed was going to operate to enable the Chemical Trust and the dye monopoly of the United States to inhibit the introduction into the United States of all these items which, as I understand my distinguished friend, are subject to the terms of the embargo.

I can only repeat that if the embargo act means what my able and distinguished colleague says it means, it emphasizes—I was about to say and I hope it is not unparliamentary—its damnable iniquity. Under the guise of helping the du Pont corporation and other corporations engaged in making dyes, we passed what all thought to be a "dye embargo act." Now we are to understand that it has been extended in its operations and has been interpreted or will be interpreted by the Treasury Department to inhibit the importation of camphor and all sorts of medicines and drugs and compounds, such as acetic acid and camphor and hundreds of others that will readily suggest themselves to the minds of Senators. My friend may be right. It may be so interpreted.

I can only repeat, and I want to emphasize it, that if it is so interpreted, then it proves how greatly the Senate was imposed upon, how the country was imposed upon, and it shows the necessity for scrutinizing every word and comma and paragraph in the pending bill. There may be jokers and dangers lurking in each paragraph. Mr. President, when this bill becomes a law the American people will be bound and gagged and dragged behind the chariot of corporations, and trusts, and combines, and dye monopolies which are trying to strangle competition and to plunder the American people.

We will find in the galleries now representatives of some of these trusts and combines and the dye monopoly. We will find them in the corridors. They will be found in the city waiting for the passage of this bill to prey upon the American people. We are going to drive them out if we can and expose the evils of this bill which is now before us.

Now, Mr. President, I am going to finish the Dow statement "if it takes all summer." The position was taken by my colleague that there were such enormous importations of acetic acid that it practically destroyed the industry in the United States. I was calling attention to the Dow Co.'s brief on page 21 of the hearings. There is not a word about competition in the manufacture of acetic anhydride; the competition relates to bromides; there was competition from Germany in bromide, not in acetic anhydride. I read from the brief:

The Dow Chemical Co. has been manufacturing bromine and bromides for 30 years, and chlorine and chlorine compounds for nearly 25 years. The plant started on a small scale and has increased its capacity from time to time.

I venture the assertion, if we had all the facts, that there has not been a single dollar of new capital put into the corporation for years, but the expansion has been the result of the profits which have been made. As to that I make no positive statement, nor am I complaining.

About the year 1905 the production of bromides in this country was in excess of the consumption.

They were able to compete with Germany and the production was greater than the consumption. Of course, they had to seek markets in the world, all of which shows that the American chemist and the American manufacturer and the American men of genius can meet most world competition. They do not have to play the baby act as some now are, who are crying and whining for embargoes and prohibitory tariffs so as to prevent any possible foreign competition in order that they may have control of the domestic market and be in a position to exploit the American people.

I continue reading from the Dow brief:

About the year 1905 the production of bromides in this country was in excess of the consumption and we made some shipments of bromides to England. This act incurred the displeasure of the German producers, who dispatched an agent to this country.

Then comes what my colleague referred to, and then follows this statement:

The Dow Co. continued exporting bromides, and some time after the visit of the German consignments of bromides were landed in New York and distributed at 15 cents per pound, the price in Germany being approximately 49 cents per pound and the import duty 25 per cent ad valorem. The price in the United States at that time was about 30 cents per pound. Many jobbers stocked up on the German bromides, the Germans selling all they could at 15 cents per pound, and then reducing to 14 cents, to 13 cents, and the lowest offer being at 11 cents. This extended over a period of about three and three-fourths years, and the Dow Co. in the meantime had entirely ceased selling bromides in the United States, but continued to sell moderate amounts abroad, and during the last year of that period sold more bromides in Germany than the Germans sold in the United States, and it netted to Dow Co. very much more than the American price.

So, as I said a moment ago, before these colloquies occurred it was like bread cast upon the water. They profited by the German invasion of the domestic market.

The only thing that prevented the Dow Co. from being eliminated from the bromide business was the high tariff, which handicapped the Germans to such an extent that they ultimately gave up the fight.

The Dow Co. increased in size and gradually took up the manufacture of other products, including various insecticides, chloroform, and carbon tetrachloride. A few years before the beginning of the war research and development work was started for producing magnesium compounds and a plant installed, which was nearing completion when the war broke out. We were thus able to produce Epsom salts and magnesium chloride in large quantities. A change was made in the design of the electrolytic cells producing chlorine, so that caustic soda was also made, and a large plant was built to furnish this product on a commercial basis.

I pass to acetic anhydride, which I read a few moments ago, and in which it was said that—acetic anhydride is used in the manufacture of acetyl salicylic acid (aspirin); also in the manufacture of cellulose acetate, a noninflammable substance used in moving-picture films, and as a "dope" or varnish for airplane wings.

The present duty, as stated in the Dow brief, is 2½ cents a pound.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] called attention a few moments ago to the fact that in 1913, which was before the war, before the embargo act, when Germany was supposed to be omnipotent and regnant in the chemical field of the world, the production in the United States had assumed considerable proportions.

Mr. President, that is all I find in the hearings about acetic anhydride. I recall that the American Carbide and Carbon Trust, with its more than $230,000,000 capital, did not appear in the hearings at the outset, but later on, as I recall, they filed a statement by way of reply to the Dow brief from which I have been reading.

I was calling attention, Mr. President, to this Carbide Trust because, I respectfully submit, the facts will demonstrate before we get through with this debate that the Carbide Trust, directly or indirectly, is back of the demand for a tariff upon acetic anhydride and acetic acid and synthetic or other products that have been or may in the future be produced by this great organization and its subsidiary companies.

I referred a moment ago to paragraph 2 of this schedule. Undoubtedly it is the Carbide Trust that is back of the demand for a tariff upon the articles mentioned in paragraph 2. We shall discuss them when they are reached; permit me to call attention to the Carbide Trust for a moment, so that we may have a proper background and get the proper atmosphere.

The Union Carbide & Carbon Corporation has a large number of subsidiary corporations with interlocking directorates. One of its subsidiaries, the Union Carbide Co., was organized in 1898 with a capital of $14,000,000, all common shares with a par value of $100. The dividends which have been reported—

I do not know whether or not they comprise all the dividends—were: In 1905, 5 per cent cash; in 1906, 5¾ per cent cash; in 1907, 6 per cent cash; in 1908, 6 per cent cash and a 40 per cent stock dividend; in 1909, 6 per cent cash; in 1910, 6 per cent cash; in 1911, 8 per cent cash; in 1912, 10 per cent cash; in 1913, 10 per cent cash and 12½ per cent in common stock of the Oxweld Acetylene Co.; in 1914, 10 per cent cash and a 40 per cent stock dividend; in 1915, 8 per cent cash; in 1916, 8 per cent cash and again a 40 per cent stock dividend—an 80 per cent stock dividend in the two years besides the enormous cash dividend—in 1917, 8 per cent cash; and in 1918, 8 per cent cash.

In 1912 the stockholders of record were given the right to subscribe at par to 10 per cent of their holdings, or $1,089,780. The capital stock, by various processes which I shall not pause to discuss, was enormously increased.

In 1918 the Union Carbide Co. was absorbed by the Union Carbide & Carbon Corporation.

I have examined Moody's Manual and I also have here the Directory of Directors in the City of New York, 1919–20, which seems to be an accepted authority. Moody's Manual shows that in 1920—this information is from the industrial section of that manual—that the Union Carbide & Carbon Corporation and affiliated concerns had the enormous capital of which I have spoken. These are the officers of this great corporation and some of its subsidiaries: Myron T. Herrick, of Ohio, is chairman of the board and a director. He is also a director of the National Carbon Co., one of the subsidiaries. George O. Knapp is president and director, and also vice president of the Electro-Metallurgical Co.

Recurring to Mr. Herrick, he is also chairman of the board of directors of Bonbright & Co.; a director of the Cleveland Hardware Co.; vice president and director of the Degnon Contracting Co.; a director of the Degnon Realty & Terminal Improvement Co.; a director of the Erie Railroad Co.; a director of Herrick-Parmelee Co.; a director of the National Surety Co.; a director of the New York Life Insurance Co.; of the Society for Savings, Cleveland, he is president and trustee; and of the Union Carbide & Carbon Corporation he is chairman of the board of directors, as I have indicated.

Mr. Knapp—and I read from the Directory of Directors—George O. Knapp, 30 East Forty-second Street, Kings County Lighting Co., director; Lake George Real Estate Co., director; Memphis Consolidated Gas & Electric Co., director; Union Carbide Co., president and director.

Reading further from the Directory of Directors, Edgar F. Price, vice president and general manager of Union Carbide Co., 30 East Forty-second Street, New York; Electric Furnace Products Co. (Ltd.), president and director; Electro-Metallurgical Co., president and director; Michigan Northern Power Co., president and director; Northern Industrial Power Co., president and director; Northern Terminal Railways, president and director; Union Carbide Co. of Canada (Ltd.), president and director. He is likewise, as stated, vice president of the Union Carbide & Carbon Corporation and president and director of the National Carbon Co., director of the Prest-O-Lite Co. I think that comprises all of the information as to him which I have collated.

Mr. M. J. Carney, vice president of the Union Carbide & Carbon Corporation, 30 Forty-second Street, New York; Gamewell Fire Alarm & Telegraph Co., director; National Carbon Co. (Inc.), director; Oxweld Acetylene Co., president and director; Oxweld Railroad Service Co., president and director; Prest-O-Lite Co. (Inc.), president and director.

Nicholas F. Brady is director of the Union Carbide Co., and is also president and trustee of the New York Edison Co.; director of the Anaconda Copper Co.; director of the Argus Co.; director of the Astoria Light, Heat & Power Co.; director of the Atlantic & Gulf Petroleum Co.; director of the Broadway Subway & Home Borough Car Advertising Co.; president of the Brooklyn Edison Co. and chairman of the board of directors; director of the Brooklyn Heights Railroad Co.; director of the Brooklyn, Queens County & Suburban Railroad Co.; chairman of the board of directors of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Co.; director of the Central New York Power Co. I will not read further. There must be 10 or 15 or more companies with which he is affiliated, found on page 83 of the Directory of Directors in the City of New York, 1919–20.

Cornelius K. G. Billings, 30 East Forty-second Street, New York City, director Kings County Lighting Co.; director of the Union Carbide & Carbon Corporation; director of the Union Carbide Co., which, of course, is one of the affiliated organizations or subordinates of the huge company which has absorbed so many other organizations.

I have here, Mr. President, the names of all directors of this corporation and its subsidiaries and the various other positions which they occupy in the financial and industrial world. In order not to show any invidious distinction I will put in the RECORD the names without giving all the positions which they occupy.

Mr. J. J. Ricks is vice president of the parent company, the Union Carbide & Carbon Corporation. He is also director of the subsidiary Union Carbide Co., which has been swallowed up; director of the National Carbon Co., the Electro-Metallurgical Co., vice president and director of the Michigan Northern Power Co.

Mr. Giles W. Mead is vice president and treasurer of the parent organization, and vice president and director of the Union Carbide Co.; vice president and director of the National Carbon Co.; vice president and director of the Linde Air Products Co.; director Prest-O-Lite Co.; director of the Electro-Metallurgical Co., and director of the Michigan Northern Power Co.

I will merely state the remainder of the names, without giving all of their associations:

Charles A. Coffin, New York; G. W. Davidson, New York; F. C. Walcot, New York; Walton Ferguson, New York; James Parmelee, Cleveland; James A. Allison, Indianapolis; Andrew Squire, Cleveland; E. S. Whitney, P. A. Rose, W. M. Beard, W. F. Barrett, B. O'Shea, F. A. Wilson, and W. J. Knapp.

The subsidiary companies that have been absorbed by this parent company are, as I recall them, Union Carbide Co., National Carbon Co., Electro-Metallurgical Co., Prest-O-Lite Co., Oxweld Acetylene Co., Linde Air Products Co., and Oxweld Railroad Service Corporation. All of those companies, I should state, the parent company does not wholly own; that is, it controls some of them, and it owns some; and it controls the Michigan Northern Power Co., the Union Carbide Co. of Canada (Ltd.), the Electric Furnace Products Co. (Ltd.), the Oxweld Railroad Service Co., the Haynes Stellite Co., and the Dominion Oxygen Co. (Ltd.).

So, Mr. President, this Union Carbide & Carbon Co., with its more than $230,000,000 of capital, and with its subsidiary organizations, in my opinion is not in a very advantageous position to appear here demanding these extortionate tariff rates; and yet it is directly and indirectly to be benefited by this bill, and directly and indirectly benefited by this enormous increase in the tariff rates fixed upon acetic acid, and in the end upon acetic anhydride.

Mr. President, I am willing at this time that a vote shall be taken upon the first amendment to the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The first amendment has been agreed to.

Mr. KING. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The next amendment of the committee will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 2, line 7, after the word "containing," it is proposed to insert the words "by weight."

Mr. KING. I do not ask for a record vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 2, line 8, after the words "acetic anhydride," to strike out "8" and insert "5," so as to read:

Acetic anhydride, 5 cents per pound.

Mr. GERRY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Broussard	Jones, Wash.	Oddie	Stanley
Calder	Kellogg	Overman	Sterling
Caraway	Keyes	Page	Townsend
Curtis	King	Phipps	Trammell
Fletcher	La Follette	Pittman	Underwood
Gerry	Lenroot	Poindexter	Wadsworth
Glass	Lodge	Robinson	Warren
Harris	McCumber	Sheppard	Watson, Ga.
Heflin	McNary	Simmons	Williams
Hitchcock	Moses	Smoot	Willis
Jones, N. Mex.	Newberry	Spencer

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present. The Secretary will call the names of the absentees.

The reading clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and the following Senators answered to their names when called:

Ball	Gooding	Myers	Swanson
Bursum	Hale	Nicholson	Walsh, Mont.
Capper	Harreld	Norbeck	Watson, Ind.
Cummins	Harrison	Pomerene
Dillingham	Kendrick	Rawson
Frelinghuysen	McKellar	Sutherland

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I move to amend the amendment offered by the committee by striking out the figure "5" and inserting in lieu thereof the figures "2½," so that it will read:

Acetic anhydride, 2½ cents per pound.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 2, line 9, it is proposed to amend the committee amendment by striking out "5" and inserting "2½."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, just a few words.

This commodity is obtained from anhydrous sodium acetate, which is obtained from acetic acid. Acetic anhydride is used in the manufacture of aspirin, which, as Senators know, is a widely known medicinal preparation used for the treatment of colds, influenza, and pneumonia. It is also used in the manufacture of cellulose acetate, which during the war was employed for covering the wings of airplanes.

I know that Republican Senators are going to vote for the committee recommendations, and that any argument would be wholly unavailing; but I want them to know what they are voting for.

Acetic anhydride of 85 per cent strength was selling on the 10th of April at from 37 to 55 cents per pound. The pre-war price quoted was 15 cents per pound. The domestic trust has maintained these high prices, and during the war it imposed varying prices, reaching as high as $2 per pound, until the Government fixed the price at 85 cents a pound. From 13 to 15 cents prior to the war was the wholesale price, and now we have these enormous prices—37 to 55 cents a pound—for 85 per cent pure.

The tariff rates in the Senate bill are fixed at 5 cents per pound, 100 per cent more than the rates fixed in the infamous Payne-Aldrich Tariff Act—100 per cent more, with an industry established, with prices now 300 per cent or more above pre-war prices—and yet the Republican Finance Committee proposes to increase the tariff rates 100 per cent.

Mr. President, nothing more need be said. It is proposed by this bill that the people be turned over to be plundered by the chemical trusts and by other combinations which are oppressing and seek opportunity to continue their oppression of the American people.

I am ready for a vote.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, before voting I also desire to have not only the Republican side but the Democratic side understand exactly what the committee has done.

As the House sent the bill to the Senate it provided 8 cents per pound on this product. The Senate committee cut it from 8 cents to 5 cents per pound. The present price is about 37 cents per pound. Five cents, therefore, is the equivalent of a 14 per cent ad valorem duty, which I think we must all admit is a low duty.

The importation of this article was stopped by the dye control. The present wholesale price, as I have stated, is 37 cents. The duty will be 5 cents a pound, the equivalent of 14 per cent on the basis of 37 cents per pound.

Mr. KING. The Senator speaks of 8 cents as being the House rate. Of course, that was based upon the American valuation plan?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; this is a specific duty. Let us see what the importations were and what they are likely to be and see if 14 per cent ad valorem duty is an excessive duty. The production in the United States in 1919, the last year for which we have figures, was 1,213,200 pounds, valued at $578,600, or 48 cents per pound.

In 1910, with a 2½-cent per pound rate, which was the rate in the Underwood law, 1,200,000 pounds were imported. There was more imported than was produced in the entire United States in 1919. That was valued at $248,000, or 19 cents per pound.

In 1911, at a 2½-cent per pound rate, 1,200,000 pounds were imported, valued at $219,000, or 19 cents per pound.

So, Mr. President, we see that such importations of this commodity as came in under the old tariff law would undoubtedly drive everything out of the market at the present prices. It is true that the prices of all commodities are very much higher than they were in 1914, and therefore, in order to have a protective tariff, the rate must be somewhat higher than in 1914, but with the rate we have placed upon it, the equivalent of 14 per cent ad valorem, we thought that the American manufacturer will have about an even chance in the American market.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from North Dakota that in 1914 and 1913, before the war, we manufactured none of this chemical in the United States. The industry was entirely built up by the war. The rate in the Payne-Aldrich law was 2½ cents a pound, and that was a revenue measure. The Underwood-Simmons law contained exactly the same rate. We did not make it in this country. In order to make it here, as a war product entirely, we would have to have a rate of at least 5 cents a pound.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the statistics show that whereas the importations were 1,200,000 pounds in 1910 and in 1911, they declined to about 300,000 pounds in 1913, and during the war they were negligible. They actually declined in 1913 to 300,000 pounds, when the rate was 2½ cents a pound.

Mr. SMOOT. There was a reason for that. The decline in the consumption of acetic anhydride was due to the abandonment of the manufacture of cellulose acetate for photographic purposes during that year. That is why the importation fell off. There are no importations now, because there is an embargo against it. They do not allow it to come in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I desire to ask the Senator from North Dakota if he has any information as to the amount of the profit which is being made by the manufacturers of acetic anhydride at the price which he has quoted?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I have no definite information, of course, as to what profit is being made. The only evidence we have before the committee at the present time is that they are making practically no profit under present conditions. This, as the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has stated, is an industry that was created during the war. We had no manufactures of acetic anhydride until it was protected under the war legislation and afterwards under the embargo. Now, we are producing all we need for our home consumption, and, while I have not the figures right before me now, I think that we are paying about one-fifth of what we paid during the war for this commodity. There has been a great reduction in all these chemicals since the embargo was placed against the importation of them.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I am not going to consume any length of time, as we will vote in just a minute, I hope, but I want to make this observation: Acetic anhydride is used in the making of aspirin, a medicine which is known to everybody. It was not manufactured in this country prior to the war because it was a patented process. The patent expired, but it did not expire before the war, so that aspirin could be made in this country. Therefore we have no statistics at all as to the cost of the manufacture of aspirin now in this country or in any other country. There is not a word of evidence as to the cost of production. It may be a very cheap, simple process, for all I know. There is nothing in the way of evidence in this case on one side or the other. We have not even been furnished with the prices of aspirin in Germany, where it was made prior to the war under the patented process, so far as I am advised, and all in the world we have is the fact that aspirin is now kept out of this country by reason of the embargo act, and that the present price in the United States is 37½ cents per pound. We know nothing about the profit which is made, except the very general statement which the Senator from North Dakota has just made, that these companies, producing a variety of articles, are not making money; and we do not know where that statement comes from.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, with respect to this particular item, the only testimony in the record is found on page 21 of the hearings before the House Committee on Ways and Means. We find a brief submitted by the Dow Chemical Co., and there is in it just one paragraph relating to this particular product. There is not a single word in the brief to the effect that they are not making profits. So, when the Senator from North Dakota says the business is unprofitable, I submit there is not a thing in the record to justify that statement.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The testimony to which the junior Senator from Utah has just referred was taken in the House hearings, I believe. In the Senate hearings the words "acetic anhydride" were not mentioned in the testimony from one end of the record to the other. In the so-called Reynolds report as to prices, and so on, no prices were obtained as to acetic anhydride.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say while the Senator is present that there is nothing in the Reynolds report referring to any specific duty in the bill. It referred only to ad valorem duties. The only reason why those people did not come before the Senate committee was that the House gave them 8 cents a pound, and they were perfectly satisfied with that, but we cut it from 8 cents to 5.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. That, I think, is a very flimsy reason for the action of the Senate committee. The House, without any evidence before it upon which to base a rate, raised the duty from 2½ cents to 8 cents, and when the bill came into the Senate Finance Committee, without taking any other testimony, they arbitrarily reduced it to 5 cents, I suppose just on the general principle that the House rate was too high. There is no rhyme or reason in connection with this action of the Senate Finance Committee.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask to have inserted in the RECORD what I think is a complete refutation of the arguments in favor of the rate submitted by the committee, the report found in one of the Tariff Information Surveys issued by the Tariff Commission under the head of "Acetic anhydride." It comprises two and a fraction pages. There is a vast amount of information as to the entire subject in it, and I ask that it be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ACETIC ANHYDRIDE.

[Paragraph 2, act of 1913, 2½ cents per pound.]

GENERAL INFORMATION.

Description and uses: Acetic anhydride, acetyl oxide, acetic oxide, or so-called "anhydrous acetic acid," is a chemical compound derived from acetic acid by the removal of water. It has the chemical formula $(CH_3CO)_2O$. Acetic anhydride is a colorless liquid which has a strong acetic odor. It has a specific gravity of 1.08 and boils at about 138° C. The vapors of acetic anhydride have an irritating effect on the eyes which causes a copious flow of tears. Acetic anhydride is corrosive in its action on the skin and should be handled with care.

A good grade of acetic anhydride should be water-white, should contain no chlorides, should not destroy the color of permanganate, and should leave a nonweighable residue on evaporation. The commercial grade contains about 90 per cent of acetic anhydride, the remaining percentage being chiefly acetic acid.

Acetic anhydride combines with water to form acetic acid. This combination proceeds very slowly in the cold but is greatly hastened by warming. The vapors of acetic anhydride have a very destructive action on most of the metals.

It is used chiefly in the manufacture of acetyl salicylic acid (aspirin) and cellulose acetate. It also has minor uses in organic analysis and synthesis.

SALT OF SODIUM.

Raw materials: Acetic anhydride on an industrial scale is manufactured from an alkali acetate, usually sodium acetate, as the basic raw material. Phosphorous chloride or sulphur chloride are also used in the process of manufacture. (See report on sulphur chloride.) It is usually produced in conjunction with other chlorine products or by manufacturers of pharmaceutical chemicals such as acetyl salicylic acid (aspirin).

Process of manufacture: Acetic anhydride on a commercial scale is made by the action of sulphur chloride on fused sodium acetate. The sodium acetate as usually purchased on the market contains water of crystallization. The sodium acetate is, therefore, thoroughly dried, usually by fusing. The fused sodium acetate is then ground to a powder and subjected to the action of the phosphorous chloride or sulphur chloride in an iron retort. The sodium acetate is converted into acetic anhydride, which is then distilled out of the retort, usually under a vacuum. The crude acetic anhydride is then redistilled, usually in a glass-enameled still, the distillate coming over between the temperatures of 130° and 140°, being taken as acetic anhydride.

Phosphorous chloride is used in the above process instead of the sulphur chloride when a very pure product is desired. However, phosphorous chloride is a more expensive reagent than the sulphur chloride. There are many patents on the manufacture of acetic anhydride, but the above is the general method of manufacture in the United States.

Acetic anhydride is produced at Midland, Mich.; Charleston, W. Va.; Carteret, N. J.; and St. Louis, Mo. At St. Louis it is manufactured as the raw material for pharmaceutical chemicals, while at the other plants it is manufactured as one of several chlorine products.

History of the industry: Prior to the war the acetic anhydride used in this country was imported from Germany. It was then used for the manufacture of cellulose acetate for photographic purposes. The imports amounted to something over 1,000,000 pounds annually. During the fiscal year 1912 the imports of acetic anhydride dropped to one-fifth the amount imported prior to that year. The Journal of Industrial and Engineering Chemistry, 1912, page 311, contains the following comment on the situation:

"This sharp decline in the consumption of acetic anhydride is probably due to abandonment of the manufacture of cellulose acetate for photographic purposes."

Since the outbreak of the European war the imports of acetic anhydride have been practically negligible. At the same time there has been a new demand created for acetic anhydride, namely, for the manufacture of airplane "dopes." Acetic anhydride enters into the manufacture of airplane dopes in the manufacture of cellulose acetate, which is then dissolved in a suitable solvent, such as amylacetate, to form a varnish or "dope" for protecting airplane wings. This has resulted in the establishment of plants for the manufacture of acetic anhydride in this country. In addition with the expiration of the patents on the manufacture of "aspirin" other firms have entered the production of this article, which requires acetic anhydride as one of the raw materials. This has caused a corresponding increase in the demand for acetic anhydride.

Owing to these increased demands for acetic anhydride and the fact that manufacturers in this country were inexperienced in its manufacture, acetic anhydride has been quoted at price of $1.90 to $2 per pound. Since January, 1918, the price has declined, slightly due to the increased production and the effect of the Government fixing the price at 85 cents per pound for a product containing 85 per cent acetic anhydride.

COURT AND TREASURY DECISIONS.

Acetic acid anhydride, while not chemically an acid, was held to come within the provision for acetic acid in the act of 1897. (Lueders v. United States, T. D. 26460, reversing G. A. 5051 (T. D. 23426); followed in G. A. 6101 (T. D. 26590); T. D. 26548.)

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah to the amendment of the committee reducing the rate from 5 cents to 2½ cents.

Mr. KING. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll:

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CROW] and vote "no."

Mr. STANLEY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. ERNST]. In his absence, being unable to obtain a transfer, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STANFIELD] and vote "nay."

Mr. WATSON of Georgia (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. CAMERON], which I transfer to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HARRIS. I have a pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. PHIPPS. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] to the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER] and vote "nay."

Mr. HARRISON. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and vote "yea."

Mr. McKELLAR (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW]. In his absence, being unable to obtain a transfer, I withdraw my vote. If I were permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. JONES of New Mexico (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia (after having voted in the affirmative). Since I voted I have learned that the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] has a general pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. Therefore I am compelled to withdraw my vote.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. Being unable to obtain a transfer, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CARAWAY (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. McKINLEY]. He is absent and I am unable to obtain a transfer. I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, has the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. MYERS. I have a pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN]. I am unable to obtain a transfer, and therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. EDGE]. He is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 37, as follows:

YEAS—21.

Ashurst	Hitchcock	Pomerene	Walsh, Mass.
Fletcher	Jones, N. Mex.	Robinson	Walsh, Mont.
Gerry	King	Sheppard	Williams
Glass	La Follette	Simmons
Harrison	Overman	Swanson

So Mr. KING's amendment to the committee amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. KING. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. McKELLAR (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN], who is absent. I am unable to obtain a transfer, and therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. PHIPPS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. STANLEY (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer as on the last vote, I vote "yea."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I inquire if the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. WARREN. I have a pair with the junior Senator from North Carolina, which I transfer to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLER], and vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON of Georgia (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CURTIS. I was requested to announce the necessary absence of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN]. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. CARAWAY. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. McKINLEY]. I am unable to obtain a transfer, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. HARRISON. I have a pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I have a pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD], and withhold my vote.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. EDGE], who is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. If my colleague were present he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 47, nays 2, as follows:

YEAS—47.

Ashurst	Hale	Nelson	Spencer
Ball	Heflin	Newberry	Stefling
Broussard	Jones, Wash.	Nicholson	Sutherland
Bursum	Kellogg	Oddie	Swanson
Capper	Kendrick	Page	Townsend

So the committee amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, Schedule 1—Chemicals, oils, and paints, paragraph 1, line 9, before the word "cents," to strike out "2" and insert "1½," so as to read:

Boric acid, 1½ cents per pound.

RECESS TO 11 O'CLOCK TO-MORROW.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from North Dakota if we might not now take a recess until the time which he suggested to-morrow? I understand that to-morrow it is the Senator's desire that the Senate shall meet at 11 o'clock.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator from Utah will yield to me, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business to-day it take a recess until to-morrow at 11 o'clock a. m.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I do not like to object to the Senate meeting at the hour of 11 o'clock; I am perfectly willing to go ahead in any reasonable way; but I think we are progressing in a very satisfactory manner. Some of us, at least, have to do a good deal of study of the pending measure outside of the hours that are taken up in the sessions of the Senate. So I object to fixing the hour of meeting at 11 o'clock. I am willing that the Senate shall meet at the hour of 12 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection to the request of the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then I move that when the Senate concludes its session to-day it take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Dakota.

The motion was agreed to.

PETITION FOR PASSAGE OF SOLDIERS' BONUS ACT.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, it is desired that there shall be a short executive session, but before moving an executive session I ask unanimous consent to present the first page or leaf of a petition containing 1,072,000 names. This is a petition in favor of the passage of the soldiers' compensation bill. The entire petition containing 1,072,000 names is merely the first installment of the petition. The number of signers will probably swell to ten or fifteen millions before the signatures cease. I present the petition at this time and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. FLETCHER. Should not the body of the petition, without the names, be printed in the RECORD? The petition is not very long, is it?

Mr. McCUMBER. I assume that the body of the petition will be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think it should be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The petition was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PETITION FOR SOLDIER BONUS AND SALES TAX.

We respectfully petition Congress to pass the soldiers' bonus act without further delay, and also to levy a sales tax to obtain the money to pay the bonus.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 268) extending the operation of the immigration act of May 19, 1921.

The message also announced that the House agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10730) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes; that the House receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 40, 41, 42, 50, and 57 to the said bill; and that the House receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 51 and 58, and concurred therein each with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened; and (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.), under the order previously entered, the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Wednesday, May 3, 1922, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, May 2, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

The testimonies of the Lord are true and righteousness altogether. Abundant art Thou in wisdom and wonderful in compassion! O become to us the first and the last; be our earth and the sun in our sky. Breathe upon us and may Thy touch stir our natures into the sweetest harmonies. May ideal truth, purity, and honor grow brighter and clearer to us. Direct our President and all associated with him in authority. Be pleased, dear Lord, to give us understanding that we may always perceive the truth and the way of duty. In Thy name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MISSISSIPPI FLOOD SUFFERERS.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 319) making available funds for preserving and protecting, in the present flood emergency, the levees on the Mississippi River, its tributaries and outlets, not under the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission.

Resolved, etc., That a sum not to exceed $200,000, from funds heretofore appropriated for improvement of rivers and harbors and which remain in the Treasury unexpended because the works or projects for which the same were appropriated have been completed or have been recommended for abandonment, is hereby made available for expenditure by and under the direction of the Secretary of War and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers for the purpose of protecting life and property by preserving and maintaining during the present flood emergency the levees not under Government control on the Mississippi River, its tributaries and outlets.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like the gentleman to make some statement as to the necessity for this, as we have already appropriated $1,000,000 for that work.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago the Committee on Appropriations was called on by the Secretary of War to authorize the immediate use of $1,000,000 by the Mississippi River Commission in protecting the levees along the river. Under the act creating the Mississippi River Commission the commission has jurisdiction over certain works only. It appears that the breaks along the levees of the Mississippi River have occasioned a serious situation along the Red River and the Atchafalaya and other streams in that section already at flood stage, and if the flood is permitted to continue without some measure of relief it is indicated that the destruction of thousands of acres of land already under cultivation with growing crops, with the possible destruction of all of the homes, and the probable loss of life of a great many people will result. The Chief of Engineers was before the Committee on Appropriations this morning and indicated that this $200,000 proposed in the pending resolution would undoubtedly meet the situation during the present emergency, and that unless it is granted in all likelihood, as I have already pointed out, there will be great suffering, tremendous loss of property, the destruction of crops that are already in and growing, and no one knows how far the trouble may go. It seemed to the committee, from the facts presented, that this is a case requiring immediate consideration on the part of Congress, and we come to the House because we believe the emergency is very great and because we realize that out of the money already advanced to the Mississippi River Commission no part can be used to meet the present emergency.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Apropos to that matter, my attention has been called to the matter of some districts in my congressional district, where the people have been fighting for weeks to keep the water out of their districts, and where by constant efforts and large expenditures of money they have been able thus far to save their levees and to keep the lands within the levees from being inundated. I am now informed, however, that it is stated to them by the Mississippi River Commission that no part of the million dollars which we have already appropriated is available to help them defray any part of this expense, the moneys which they have expended. This is in districts where the Government has jurisdiction and where the Government has charge of the levees. It does seem to me that the aid ought to be extended not only to districts which have been inundated but as well to districts that by expenditures of large sums of money have been able temporarily at least to save their property. I wondered if the chairman of the committee had that matter under consideration.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes. My understanding is that the $200,000 now proposed to be appropriated would cover such cases as my colleague indicates.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. What is the million dollars to be used for? Is it not to be used in the protection of these districts?

Mr. MADDEN. It is to be used for flood control on the Mississippi River levees within the restrictions of the act granting authority to the Mississippi River Commission. Under that act they would have no right to grant relief, and this $200,000 now proposed is for work outside of the scope of that act.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Let me see if I have this correct. The original flood control act provided that the Government might aid in the building of levees for flood control, and appropriated or authorized the appropriation of a large sum of money extending over a series of years for the purpose of aiding in the building of levees. Can not the million dollars that we have provided be used in protecting those levees?

Mr. MADDEN. Only in cases where the people whose property may be affected contribute one-third of the cost, and this emergency is so great that they are not able to meet that situation, and this proposed appropriation covers the case to which my colleague now calls attention.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. In the case to which I now call attention particularly, the one district in which about 25,000 acres are involved, the people have contributed and they are working with the Mississippi River Commission, and the Government has complete jurisdiction. Yet the commission holds, as I am informed by telegraph, that they can not spend any of that money in helping to protect that dike.

Mr. MADDEN. They can not spend any money anywhere except where contributions are made in compliance with the law, and it is because of the fact that they can not spend the money that we find the necessity for this additional appropriation.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I am in favor of this. I think this ought to be done and much more, knowing as I do, from word received from there, the extreme necessities of the case. No one can conceive the situation along the Mississippi River who has not some intimate personal knowledge of it. It is terrible down there, but I do think the money we have made available, not only the $200,000 proposed now to be appropriated but the $1,000,000 already appropriated, ought to be available to help those people fight that flood.

Mr. MADDEN. You would have to change the law creating the Mississippi River Commission.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. This is only in case where the Government has authorized and the landowners have done their part which the law requires.

Mr. MADDEN. No; this money will be used along tributaries when the commission has no authority under the flood control act.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I will.

Mr. DENISON. I think, in answer to the question raised by my colleague [Mr. GRAHAM], the Mississippi River Commission has always construed the flood control act to limit the expenditures under that act to the construction of levees, for the enlargement of levees already constructed, and they have always construed that they have no authority to expend that appropriation for the work of protecting the levees. Now I would like to ask my colleague, the chairman of the committee, I did not understand where he stated awhile ago that this money was to be used?

Mr. MADDEN. Used on any tributary of the Mississippi River.

Mr. DUPRÉ. The Federal control act never went beyond the Mississippi River itself to its tributaries.

Mr. MADDEN. It includes a few miles in one of the rivers in Arkansas and six or eight of the Ohio.

Mr. DUPRÉ. It did not include the tributaries, and that is the point.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. LAYTON. I have no doubt there is great devastation in the Mississippi River Valley, but the gentleman recognizes, I presume, the fact that measures of this character will sooner or later include all suffering of damages from floods, fires, pestilence, and famine of all sorts and description.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not think so.

Mr. LAYTON. Logically it must.

Mr. MADDEN. There is no part of this money to be used to feed any people. It is just for the protection of property and the saving of the situation with reference to the present overflow.

Mr. LAYTON. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I understood that part of this was to go for food.

Mr. MADDEN. No; not a cent.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois if it is not a fact that this money will be expended largely to strengthen and reinforce levees heretofore constructed by private capital which are threatened and also to replace and restore levees heretofore constructed by private capital which have been swept away?

Mr. MADDEN. I think there is only one place where there is a break.

Mr. WALSH. By private capital I mean levee districts, or counties.

Mr. MADDEN. That is true.

Mr. WALSH. Now, then, if this money were expended in that way, of course it necessarily can only result in a temporary construction.

Mr. MADDEN. There would not be any construction. Here is what would happen: The water is up around the top of the levees, and in one case there has been a break. There, of course, the pressure has already taken place. The break can not be repaired, but a further widening can be prevented and the chances of further breaks lessened by piling sandbags on the crest of the levees and filling in the interstices with sand or soil and in that way reinforce and strengthen the existing levees. It is hoped that within a few days the waters will recede and it will be only a temporary situation, but it may be a very serious emergency if we do not meet the temporary situation.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; but whatever is done will be temporary?

Mr. MADDEN. It will be.

Mr. WALSH. Now, I have had the privilege of seeing a telegram sent by one Engineer officer which described the situation of a lot of these levees and states that they are of very flimsy construction, and also states that those people who have built the levees are not required to come under the specification established by the Government and are not expected to do so. Now, it seems to me that unless these levees on the tributaries are so constructed in accordance with Government specifications and requirements we are liable to have a recurrence of this situation the next time flood conditions prevail there.

Mr. MADDEN. There would not be any trouble now if there had not been a break in the levee on the Mississippi River.

Mr. WALSH. Trouble always follows an "if," usually follows an "if," and what I would like to know is, Why should not the Mississippi River Flood Commission be given jurisdiction over these levees upon the tributaries which are now so flimsily built that they will not be able to withstand the water pressure when we have a recurrence of flood conditions?

Mr. MADDEN. I hope they will be one of these days as the result of this emergency.

Mr. ASWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I would like to ask one further question, and then I will yield. Why did not the gentleman report making the million dollars already appropriated available for this instead of asking for $200,000 additional?

Mr. MADDEN. Well, I would say to the gentleman that I had no idea there would be any such emergency.

Mr. WALSH. I mean, instead of this resolution, why was not that made available for this purpose, instead of taking $200,000 of unexpended funds and diverting it to work upon levees over which the Government apparently has had no supervision or control heretofore?

Mr. MADDEN. I am frank to say that that would have been a solution if the amount were adequate.

Mr. DENISON. Under the law the Mississippi River Commission can not expend any of it——

Mr. WALSH. Sometimes Congress has the right to change a law. The Appropriations Committee could make the appropriation available for other purposes. The Appropriations Committee has supervision over appropriations.

Mr. DENISON. The Appropriations Committee intended to devote that $1,000,000 otherwise.

Mr. WALSH. I am glad the gentleman is so familiar with the intentions of the Appropriations Committee. The gentlemen from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], the chairman of the committee, does not so state.

Mr. ASWELL. I merely wanted to state that the levees were built long before the flood-control act was enacted. Therefore the money that has been expended was by local taxation. That is the reason they were not built according to the specifications of the Board of Engineers.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I think this is an unusual situation, and I think the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations is rather unusual, but the emergency is so great that we really ought to do it.

Mr. WALSH. The emergency was great when we appropriated the $1,000,000. It makes that available for this purpose, and otherwise it would be returned to the Treasury. Does the gentleman have any information which leads him to believe that this will be ample to cope with this situation if we give him $200,000 more?

Mr. MADDEN. The Chief of Engineers says it must necessarily be more or less of a guess. They have made the best guess they could from the reports of the Engineer officers on the ground. They have had daily communication with those officers. They are already doing everything they can to prevent disaster, and they say $200,000 will do the work. Of course, I can not tell.

Mr. WALSH. Does not the gentleman think it might be a wise precaution to amend this resolution by also making available from the $1,000,000 already appropriated such portion as the Chief of Engineers or the Mississippi River Flood Commission might deem necessary for this same work in addition to the $200,000?

Mr. MADDEN. I hope that will not be done, because I believe we ought not to go any further than this resolution provides.

Mr. WALSH. All right.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman yield to a question for information?

Mr. MADDEN. I will.

Mr. HICKS. On what part of the river is it intended to spend this money?

Mr. MADDEN. It is intended to spend it on any tributary of the Mississippi River where the danger of overflow exists.

Mr. HICKS. Where the sandbags are put?

Mr. MADDEN. They are putting sandbags on the top of the levees where the water has reached a high stage and where it is likely to go over the top of the levee. They have sent 4,000,000 sandbags down to these places.

Mr. HICKS. All along the river?

Mr. MADDEN. Just where the flood has reached the crest of the levee, and this will prevent the danger and meet the situation, I believe. I certainly think it is very important, one of the most important things we could do, and I hope the House will consent to the consideration of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Is this work that is to be done work that has heretofore been done by the Federal Government?

Mr. MADDEN. This work is to be done in cases where, as I have just said, the water has reached the top of the levee and threatens to break through.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Is it at places where the Government has heretofore constructed levees and which is considered Government work?

Mr. MADDEN. That is considered Government work, in that an emergency exists which the Government only is in a position to cope with, the emergency being caused through a break in the levees which had been constructed by the Government.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. By the Government?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the resolution.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MADDEN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask unanimous consent to print a letter of the President, one from the Director of the Budget, and one from the Secretary of War, in connection with this resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a letter from the President, a letter from the Director of the Budget, and a letter from the Secretary of War in connection with this subject. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, are they about this emergency?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman from Louisiana also have printed that telegram which he showed me? Has he any objection to doing that?

Mr. ASWELL. I have no objection to it.

Mr. WALSH. In connection with the insertion of the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The following are the letters and the telegram referred to:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, May 1, 1922.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS,
House of Representatives.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a letter from the Secretary of War addressed to you, requesting the passage of a joint resolution for the preservation and repair of levees not under the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission.

This request has my approval, and prompt action thereon is recommended.

Respectfully, WARREN G. HARDING.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, May 1, 1922.

Hon. M. B. MADDEN,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I must again present to you the flood situation on the Mississippi River. Since my letter to you of April 21 a break in the levees has occurred in the vicinity of Vidalia, La., and the overflow through this break is seriously aggravating the flood condition in the lower Red River and the Atchafalaya River. As a consequence large areas in the State of Louisiana are seriously menaced.

The appropriation of $1,000,000 made by a recent joint resolution of Congress for the protection and repair of levees, under the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission, is limited by its express terms to those levees under the jurisdiction of that commission. The levees on the Red and Atchafalaya Rivers are not under the jurisdiction of the commission, and the funds appropriated are therefore not applicable to the work urgently necessary. From the information before the department it is clear that the local levee districts concerned can no longer furnish funds necessary to meet the situation. This action merely places the Government in the position of protecting the people of the threatened area against great disaster when local authorities are unable to continue the struggle. The General Government has rendered assistance to afflicted people of various sections of the country before now, and there are ample precedents for the action recommended.

I therefore most urgently recommend the passage of a joint resolution, a copy of which I inclose, which makes immediately available the sum of $200,000 for the work in question.

Sincerely yours, JOHN W. WEEKS,
Secretary of War.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF THE BUDGET,
Washington, May 1, 1922.

The PRESIDENT.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith for your consideration two letters from the Secretary of War, one addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives, and the other addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, United States Senate, requesting the immediate passage of a joint resolution making available the sum of $200,000 for preserving and protecting the levees on the Red and Atchafalaya Rivers, which can not be cared for under the appropriation of $1,000,000 recently made by joint resolution, because of the limitation that that sum should be expended only upon levees under the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission.

Approval of the request of the Secretary of War is recommended, and two letters for your signature are inclosed addressed also to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives, and chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, United States Senate, transmitting the letters of the Secretary of War.

Very respectfully,
CHARLES G. DAWES,
Director of the Bureau of the Budget.

[Western Union telegram.]

ST. LOUIS, MO., April 27, 1922.

CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, D. C.:

Jurisdiction is not a geographical term. The flood control act gives us certain limits within which we may assume jurisdiction, and it also provides for turning over jurisdiction of completed levees to levee boards. We do not have jurisdiction within the fixed limit until we assume it, and jurisdiction ceases within those limits when we complete a district and turn it over to the local officials for maintenance. Between Cairo and Rock Island there are many miles of levees which have never come under our jurisdiction, and some miles which have passed out of our jurisdiction finished and turned over to local boards. When we assume jurisdiction, we assume a certain degree of responsibility. Levee boards are never forced, only invited, to come under our jurisdiction. Some prefer to build their own flimsy levees at their own expense rather than adopt our methods and sections with Government aid. We know their levees will not stand a serious flood, and we hold they are beyond our jurisdiction and responsibility. Again, some districts will have several lines back to the hills paralleling creeks, and we assume no jurisdiction over that work. We are protecting from the Mississippi only, and our work would be complete if we built across the mouths of these creeks. They accept our aid to build against the Mississippi, and they do the rest often with a flimsy section. These are and must be out of our jurisdiction. If all the levees within the geographical limits of the flood control act were under our jurisdiction, we would be responsible for a high-water fight to protect a man's home if he had thrown a bank around it, and we could never end our work and turn jurisdiction over to local interests, according to the expressed intent of the flood control act. We must not admit that we are responsible for all levees within the limits fixed by the act, and we can not admit it and carry out the terms of the act. Money is furnished us to protect our levees. It is not fair to us or to the people we are protecting to put it into protection of levees where we have had no say as to their construction, section, grade, or specifications. As I said yesterday, I believe it contrary to the terms of the appropriation and the most dangerous thing that can be done. I believe it is taking money belonging to one party and spending it to help another.

POTTER.

TRIP TO QUANTICO.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, every Member of the House has probably received in this morning's mail a communication with reference to a trip on Friday to Quantico, Va., the headquarters of the Marine Corps, and on behalf of the Naval Affairs Committee of the House, I desire to speak in reference to this trip. About a year ago a similar one was planned and consummated, and some 250 Members availed themselves of the opportunity of going. The trip this year will be of a similar character. There will be opportunity to visit the flying field and take flights in aircraft. There will be a mimic battle staged, where trench warfare can be observed without danger of being wounded. Opportunity will be afforded to inspect the schools, the rifle range, and all the activities which make the corps the wonderful organization it is. The Mayflower, kindly placed at our disposal by President Harding, will leave on Friday morning from the navy yard here at 8 o'clock. She will leave Quantico on the return trip at 6 o'clock, arriving in Washington about 9 or 9.30. While there we will be the guests of the Marine Corps, and every Member of Congress will be entertained by the officers and the men and will have dinner and supper in the mess of the corps. Owing to the very limited accommodations on the Mayflower, it is impossible to extend this invitation to others than Members. The invitation can not be extended to the family of Members, much to the regret of the Marine Corps. It is earnestly hoped that all those who are interested in the Marine Corps and desire to see the splendid work being done there under the direction of General Butler and his staff and under the supervision of General Lejeune, commandant of the corps, will avail themselves of this opportunity and will be at the Mayflower at 8 o'clock Friday morning. The trip will not only be pleasant but interesting and instructive as well.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HICKS. I yield.

Mr. DYER. Where will the House meet that day, at Quantico, or will we have a session here?

Mr. HICKS. The most influential section will be at Quantico.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman state to the House whether or not we will have a session on that day?

Mr. HICKS. I will have to refer that to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. DYER. We can not leave without the consent of the gentleman from Wyoming.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10730) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, had further insisted upon its amendments still in disagreement numbered 40, 41, 42, 50, 51, 57, and 58, had requested a further conference with the House, and had appointed Mr. MCNARY, Mr. JONES of Washington, and Mr. OVERMAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate at the further conference.

The message also announced that the Senate had concurred in the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2186) granting certain lands in Hot Springs, Ark., to the Leo N. Levi Memorial Hospital Association.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 132) to provide for the continuation of certain Government publications, had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MOSES, Mr. CAPPER, and Mr. FLETCHER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 2775. An act to extend for one year the powers of the War Finance Corporation to make advances under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to amend the War Finance Corporation act, approved April 5, 1918, as amended, to provide relief for producers of and dealers in agricultural products, and for other purposes," approved August 24, 1921.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the joint resolution of the following title:

H. J. Res. 319. Joint resolution making available funds for preserving and protecting, in the present flood emergency, the levees on the Mississippi River, its tributaries and outlets, not under the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 2775. An act to extend for one year the powers of the War Finance Corporation to make advances under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to amend the War Finance Corporation act, approved April 5, 1918, as amended, to provide relief for producers of and dealers in agricultural products, and for other purposes," approved August 24, 1921; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. J. Res. 319. Joint resolution making available funds for preserving and protecting, in the present flood emergency, the levees on the Mississippi River, its tributaries and outlets, not under the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission.

EXTENSION OF IMMIGRATION ACT—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on House Joint Resolution 268, extending the operation of the immigration act of May 19, 1921.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington calls up the conference report on House Joint Resolution 268, which the Clerk will report.

The conference report and accompanying statement were read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 268) extending the operation of the immigration act of May 19, 1921, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert "1924"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 2. That clause (7) of subdivision (a) of section 2 of such act of May 19, 1921, is amended to read as follows: '(7) aliens who have resided continuously for at least five years immediately preceding the time of their application for admission to the United States in the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, the Republic of Cuba, the Republic of Mexico, countries of Central and South America, or adjacent islands.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 3. That such act of May 19, 1921, is amended by adding at the end thereof a new section to read as follows:

"'SEC. 6. That it shall be unlawful for any person, including any transportation company other than railway lines entering the United States from foreign contiguous territory, or the owner, master, agent, or consignee of any vessel, to bring to the United States either from a foreign country or any insular possession of the United States any alien not admissible under the terms of this act or regulations made thereunder, and if it appears to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Labor that any alien has been so brought, such person or transportation company, or the master, agent, owner, or consignee of any such vessel, shall pay to the collector of customs of the customs district in which the port of arrival is located the sum of $200 for each alien so brought, and in addition a sum equal to that paid by such alien for his transportation from the initial point of departure, indicated in his ticket, to the port of arrival, such latter sum to be delivered by the collector of customs to the alien on whose account assessed. No vessel shall be granted clearance papers pending the determination of the liability to the payment of such fine, or while the fine remains unpaid; except that clearance may be granted prior to the determination of such question upon the deposit of a sum sufficient to cover such fine. Such fine shall not be remitted or refunded unless it appears to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Labor that such inadmissibility was not known to, and could not have been ascertained by the exercise of reasonable diligence by, such person, or the owner, master, agent, or consignee of the vessel, prior to the departure of the vessel from the last seaport in a foreign country or insular possession of the United States.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

ALBERT JOHNSON,
WILLIAM N. VAILE,
JOHN E. RAKER,
Managers on the part of the House.
LEBARON B. COLT,
WM. P. DILLINGHAM,
WILLIAM H. KING,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 268) extending the operation of the immigration act of May 19, 1921, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and submitted in the accompanying conference report:

On amendment No. 1: The House extended the operation of the 3 per cent law until June 30, 1923. The Senate amendment further extended the operation of the 3 per cent law until June 30, 1924, "unless otherwise repealed." The House recedes with an amendment striking out the words "unless otherwise repealed."

On amendment No. 2: The 3 per cent law exempted from its operation aliens who have resided continuously for at least one year immediately preceding the time of their admission to the United States in countries of the Western Hemisphere and adjacent islands. The Senate amendment added to the House resolution a section amending this provision of the 3 per cent law so as to make the period of residence five years instead of one year. The House recedes with an amendment making clerical changes.

On amendment No. 3: This amendment adds to the joint resolution a section making it unlawful for any transportation company other than railway lines entering the United States from foreign contiguous territory to bring to the United States any alien in excess of the quota, and provided that for every alien so brought the company should pay a fine of $200 and in addition a sum equal to the passage money paid by the alien for his transportation from the initial point of departure to this country. The amendment as written permitted no discretion in the Secretary of Labor in the imposition of the fine. The House recedes with an amendment making clerical changes and also providing that the fine may be remitted or refunded if it appears to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Labor, the burden of proof being upon the steamship companies, that the inadmissibility was not known to, and could not have been ascertained by the exercise of reasonable diligence by, the transportation company or the owner, master, agent, or consignee of the vessel prior to the departure of the vessel from the last seaport in the foreign country.

ALBERT JOHNSON,
WILLIAM N. VAILE,
JOHN E. RAKER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order on the report. I would like to get some information. I will reserve it if the gentleman from Washington desires to make a statement.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, the three amendments made by the Senate to the resolution extending the 3 per cent restriction act are in turn amended by the House conferees, and the meaning of the amendments as amended is apparent. The first one changes the House proposition to make the extension of the 3 per cent act two years instead of one year; that is to say, the Senate makes it two years, for the reason that if the one-year extension only prevailed it might be possible that there would not be such control of immigration.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield a moment in order that I might submit a unanimous-consent request?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Washington yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Certainly; I yield.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the usual permission be extended, for this week only, to the Committee on the District of Columbia to hold sessions during the sessions of Congress.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent that the Committee on the District of Columbia may sit during the sessions of the House for this week. Is there objection?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Reserving the right to object, is it the intention of the gentleman to hold hearings on the extension of the Ball Rent Act?

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Yes. A great many landlords and tenants desire to be heard, and otherwise the committee can not hear them as expeditiously as we would like.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The first amendment extends the time for the operation of the 3 per cent resolution for an additional year over that proposed by the House.

The second amendment takes care of admissions through contiguous territory and makes the period of required residence in Mexico, Cuba, and Canada five years instead of one, and the third amendment is the amendment offered by the Senate placing a penalty on the steamship companies for violation of the quota law. That amendment is added, as offered by the Senate, as section 3 to the resolution, whereas in the opinion of the conferees it should have been an amendment to the section attached to the original act of last year. The Senate amendment provided that if it should appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Labor that any alien otherwise inadmissible had been brought to the United States under this act the transportation company, other than the railroad or the owner, master, agent, or consignee of the vessel, should pay to the collector a fine of $200, and in addition the transportation of the alien so brought and found to be inadmissible on account of the quota act.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. In a moment.

When that was adopted in the other body it was thought that there would be adopted a permit system by which the alien would only start to the United States with a permit. The permit provision, however, was not offered or adopted, and hence it left this resolution reading so that arbitrarily, willy-nilly, for every alien brought in excess of the quota there should be this fine attached without leeway or modification of any kind, and without following the penalty provisions of the old immigration act which still prevails. Therefore the conferees have made certain changes, but have undertaken to follow the words of the Senate amendment, to the effect that such fine may not be remitted or refunded—I quote the new words—"unless it appears to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Labor that such inadmissibility was not known to him, and that it could not have been ascertained by the exercise of reasonable diligence" by the person, or the transportation company, or the owner, master, agent, or consignee of the vessel prior to the departure of the vessel from the last seaport in a foreign country or insular possession of the United States; that is to say, it was not considered by the managers desirable to enact an extension of a 3 per cent act and carry with it an amendment to the act itself that would go into effect immediately upon the extension resolution becoming a law with provisions quite so drastic.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. I think it is quite clear what the gentleman purposes to do, but you say here it shall be unlawful for any person, including any transportation company other than railway lines, to bring to the United States any alien not admissible under the terms of this act. You do not say "bring to the United States for entry into the United States," but "bring to the United States any alien." That language by itself, it seems to me, is broad enough to prohibit, for instance, an American ship sailing from a foreign port to a port of the United States to have among its crew a foreigner not admissible under this act to the United States, or it would prohibit a British ship or any foreign ship from coming to this coast with a member of its crew not admissible under the terms of this act.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. No. It is perfectly clear. It is under the terms of this act, meaning the quota restriction act. That act has been in effect a year, and instead of that act applying the quota percentage restriction to alien seamen here as seamen, the seamen's act has prevailed all the time with respect to the foreigners among the crews of all the ships that come to our ports. Persons arriving as seamen have their full rights under the La Follette Act and can leave the ship, even those classed among the inadmissibles, including Chinese.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. But it is prohibited to bring in any aliens. That is broad enough of itself to prevent an alien, being a member of the crew, from coming to this coast.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Does the gentleman want to fill up this country with Lascars and Chinese by the sailor route?

Mr. WHITE of Maine. I was not finding any fault. I was asking whether it would prevent that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I think not. We have followed literally the language of section 9 of the immigration act of 1917.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, are we still on the point of order?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The point of order has been reserved but not made.

Mr. RAKER. When the gentleman gets through with the point of order I should like to have about 20 minutes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I yield to my colleague from Illinois.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. What is the amount of the fine to be paid by a transportation company bringing an inadmissible alien into the United States?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Two hundred dollars, under the present law.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Is it not $200 and an additional sum equaling the amount of passage paid by the alien?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; under certain circumstances.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. All right. If that is so, how are you going to enforce the provision in the last part of the proposed new section reading as follows:

Such fine shall not be remitted or refunded unless it appears to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Labor that such inadmissibility was not known to and could not have been ascertained by the exercise of reasonable diligence by such person, or the owner, master, agent, or consignee of the vessel, prior to the departure of the vessel from the last seaport in a foreign country or insular possession of the United States.

Does that mean that the $200 may be remitted to the transportation company and also that the amount collected from the alien on account of his passage may be returned to the transportation company?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I will explain. That follows the plan, method, and words of the present law. All persons denied admission under the old law do not receive the return passage, but only in cases when the steamship company might have known that the person was inadmissible—that is, insane or afflicted with this or that disease, or unable to read, or for any of the nonadmissible clauses—in which case, under the old law, the alien is returned and the passage money is returned. It will operate the same under this, which applies to the quota law.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. This amendment is intended to cover people brought over in excess of the quota.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes. Hereafter when the steamship companies have brought them over with the knowledge that the quota was exhausted the fine will lie and the refund will take place. Where they are brought over without that knowledge—and there is sometimes excuse for that under the 3 per cent act itself, where there are certain exceptions which can not be ascertained until they arrive at this port—the fine will not lie.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. And the alien will not get the money?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I think it ought to be made clear that the fine includes not only the $200 but the return of the passage money.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I think there will be little difficulty. Of course, we do not care to encourage aliens throughout the world to make the attempt to get into the United States in excess of the quota with the knowledge that if they fail to gain admission in each and every case the steamship company must make them whole. Neither do we desire to permit the steamship companies to be continually making the experiment at the expense of the alien. Now, I will ask if the amendments have been explained sufficiently to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]?

Mr. WALSH. Of course, the resolution as it passed the House or Senate is not available, and I should like to ask the gentleman from Washington if the other sections of this resolution also amended the act of 1921.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The act of May 19, 1921. As this joint resolution passed the House it simply provided—

That the operation of the act entitled "An act to limit the immigration of aliens into the United States," approved May 19, 1921, is extended to and including June 30, 1923.

Mr. WALSH. Now, the Senate amendment and the House resolution did not amend section 3 of the act of 1921.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The Senate amendment undertook to amend the act by offering section 3 to the resolution.

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Whereas the intention was to offer the matter appearing in Senate section 3 as section 6 of the law.

Mr. WALSH. The Senate amendment was section 3 of the joint resolution. It did not attempt to amend any provision of the act of 1921.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It was intended, however, to do that very thing.

Mr. VAILE. That was its effect?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That was its effect.

Mr. WALSH. It might have been its effect and it might have been entirely otherwise. As I understand now, the only matter added is the last sentence in the conference report.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Practically.

Mr. WALSH. Providing that such fine shall not be remitted or refunded unless it appears, and so forth.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Beginning at the word "unless" is the new matter. In addition there is a slight verbal change about the middle of the amendment.

Mr. VAILE. After the word "act," about the fifth line down.

Mr. WALSH. That was not in the Senate amendment, was it?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; it was. Let me read the Senate amendment to the gentleman. The Senate amendment was labeled section 3, and read as follows:

SEC. 3. That it shall be unlawful for any person, including any transportation company other than railway lines entering the United States from foreign contiguous territory, or the owner, master, agent, or consignee of any vessel, to bring to the United States, either from a foreign country or any insular possession of the United States, any alien not admissible by virtue of the terms of this act, or otherwise in violation of any rule or regulation not inconsistent with this act, prescribed by the Commissioner General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of Labor, and if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Labor that any alien, not admissible because of the terms of this act, has been so brought, such person or transportation company, or the master, agent, owner, or consignee of any such vessel, shall pay to the collector of customs of the customs district in which the port of arrival is located the sum of $200 for each alien so brought, and in addition a sum equal to that paid by such alien for his transportation from the initial point of departure, indicated in his ticket, to the port of arrival, such latter sum to be delivered by the collector of customs to the alien on whose account assessed. And no vessel shall be granted clearance papers pending the determination of the question of the liability to the payment of such fine, or while the fine remains unpaid, and such fine shall not be remitted or refunded—

And so forth.

That is the Senate amendment.

Mr. WALSH. As printed in the RECORD the final clause of the Senate amendment reads—

Provided, That clearance may be granted prior to the determination of such question upon the deposit of a sum sufficient to cover such fine.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That is here. I did not read that part of it. That is in the amendment.

Mr. WALSH. So that the new part is the last sentence of this amendment printed in italics in the report?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. VAILE. That is correct.

Mr. WALSH. But making it amend section 6 of the immigration act.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. There is no section 6 of the present act. The Senate amendment was labeled section 3 of the resolution, whereas it is intended to be a new section of the act of May 19, 1919.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, Joint Resolution 268 was an extension of the operation of the immigration act of May 19, 1921. It went to the Senate and the Senate put on three amendments. They amended it by making the time two years, and then included a class to which it was applicable by amending section 2 of the act of May 19, 1921. Then the Senate put on a further amendment, section 3 of the resolution, which did not in any way amend the act of May 19, 1921. It was just section 3 of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman mean that it did not practically, or did not in verbiage, or both?

Mr. WALSH. I mean in verbiage and in effect, because the operation of the act of May 19, 1921, was extended one year. The Senate put on an amendment which from its reading was to be permanent law, the verbiage of which did not refer to that act and did not necessarily affect the operation of the act.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The Senate amendment section 3 says:

Any alien not admissible by virtue of the terms of this act—

Meaning the act which it is proposed to extend, the act of May 19, 1921.

Mr. WALSH. No; that would mean by virtue of this act, which is the Joint Resolution No. 268. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the conferees have injected new matter by proposing this as an amendment to the act by adding a new section to the act of May 19, 1921.

The SPEAKER. It seems to the Chair that the question is whether section 6 is really germane to the Senate amendment, and the Chair will have to examine the Senate amendment. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, there are three amendments. To the first there is no question. The third amendment is adding section 3 of this resolution as a new section to the act of May 19, 1921. The amendment of the Senate says that the fine shall not be remitted or refunded. That is the last part of the Senate amendment. That provided a positive and direct inhibition against the Secretary of Labor refunding any of the fines. Now, the provision that the conferees agreed to is as follows:

Such fine shall not be remitted or refunded unless it appears to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Labor that such inadmissibility was not known to, and could not have been ascertained by the exercise of reasonable diligence by, such person, or the owner, master, agent, or consignee of the vessel, prior to the departure of the vessel from the last seaport in a foreign country or insular possession of the United States.

There can be no remitting of the fine. There shall be no remission of the fine except in incidental cases, where the Secretary of Labor, after full hearing, claims that the steamship company had no knowledge or information of the inadmissibility of the aliens. So it is not extending the provisions of the Senate amendment, but it is a simple reduction by allowing a slight discretion in the Secretary of Labor to dispense with the fine if the facts come within the provisions of the law. So we feel that we come clearly within the jurisdiction of the conferees in passing on the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the second amendment agreed upon by the conferees is what the entire committee of the House, since the bill was passed and since we observed the workings, stood for, and they are glad the Senate placed it on the bill. It becomes effective the moment the bill is signed by the President and will prevent a great many people who are not otherwise admissible coming from Canada, Mexico, and Cuba, who have been colonizing for the last six months for the purpose of coming into the United States under paragraph 7 of subdivision a of section 2 of the original act. It requires a five years' residence immediately preceding the entry. It is wholesome and will exclude a great number of undesirable and improper people who ought not to come to the United States. The third amendment provided a penalty clause. I have been urging this provision, in substance, for the past year. It should have been in the original 3 per cent act. Under the present immigration law there is a mandatory provision against a steamship company that brings people to the United States trying to land those who are inflicted with certain contagious diseases. The Secretary of Labor, when he finds they are thus affected, fines the steamship company $200 and also the amount of passage. Under another provision of the general immigration law the Secretary has some discretion. This provision here would have stopped the rush that occurred last June when something over 11,000 inadmissible aliens were brought to the United States by the steamship companies, and on the ground of humanity and the difficulty in sending them back they were temporarily admitted and taken out of the quota for the following months, which were eventually taken out of the year's quota. But notwithstanding they were warned and after the discussion by the House and the Senate and the public as to what the Secretary of Labor and his assistants would do, there is now admitted to the United States, which the steamship companies can not help knowing, some 2,590 immigrants that the company has been fined for and their passage money returned and the immigrants sent back at the expense of the company.

They are trying to get in on the ground that they came to America, and that therefore we should leave them here. This bill will fine the steamship companies $200 for each inadmissible immigrant brought here and will in addition compel the steamship company to return to the immigrant his passage money paid for coming over here, and in addition the steamship company will have to return the immigrant to his home at the company's own cost and expense. There is one slight exception, and possibly it can do no hurt and it may do good. After the steamship has left, say, Antwerp and has landed at Havre or Southampton, before she has embarked again under her final journey to the United States, if she finds that she has on board inadmissible aliens she must return them to the country whence they came or be fined $200, together with the other penalties imposed; but if the steamship leaves the last foreign port of embarkation and the agent, the owner, or the master has made due and diligent inquiry and reasonably ascertained that the quota has not been exhausted, and that they are carrying no inadmissible aliens, then when the steamship lines reach the port of Boston or New York or Philadelphia, San Francisco, or some other port and it turns out that the alien is inadmissible by reason of the quota having been exhausted, and after examination by the Secretary of Labor he finds as a fact beyond reasonable doubt that the steamship company, agent, owners, or otherwise had no knowledge of the inadmissibility of the aliens before they—the vessel—left the last foreign port, in that event the Secretary of Labor may remit the fine but still compel the company to refund the passage money and return the alien to the foreign country at the steamship's own cost and expense. The last proviso applies to the $200 fine only. The department will have no discretion as to the passage or ticket and the cost of returning. The steamship companies will in all cases have to bear this when they present an inadmissible alien under this act or this amendment. This will give the steamship companies warning that they are no longer to race across the ocean, as they have been doing since last May, for the purpose of seeing who can put his nose to the wharf the quickest and thereby land his human cargo in order to make money, irrespective of what becomes of the alien. The steamship company will be fined $200 for each inadmissible alien brought here and will be required to pay back to the alien the money that he spent for his passage and take him back clear to the point whence he started without charge. There is the one exception, and thus they must show want of knowledge. That will be a sufficient lesson and a sufficient law whereby there will be no more racing on the ocean for the purpose of entering under the wire first to land immigrants into the United States. I believe this law will work in a humane way, and will give proper notice to these steamship companies. [Applause.]

(By unanimous consent leave was granted to Mr. RAKER to extend his remarks in the RECORD.)

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL].

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, of course this is emergency legislation. We heard that emphatically expressed here when we passed the original 3 per cent quota law. We anticipated that before the law would be in effect a year's time we would have before us for consideration further permanent immigration legislation, if needed. Despite the fact that there has been a tremendous drop in immigration, we find that the Commissioner of Immigration at Ellis Island, when his attention is directed to the fact that functioning at Ellis Island is rather slow, replies as follows:

I bring to your attention that owing to the small appropriation furnished by Congress for the enforcement of the law at this port, enforced furloughs have resulted, the personnel has been reduced one-quarter and the station is barely able to function along any lines with any degree of efficiency.

Writing to another Member of the House, he says:

You are probably aware that the enforced furloughs in the employees of this station, which have reduced the personnel one-quarter, have made it absolutely impossible to dispose of cases of detained aliens as speedily as before the reduction of the force. In fairness to all concerned the various ships are being handled in the order of their arrival as far as possible.

Mr. Speaker, regardless of whether we believe in a 3 per cent quota law or not, it is about time that Congress made a sufficient appropriation to handle the work at Ellis Island properly and efficiently. I do not think it is very fair to take these employees who have been in the Government service for as high as 20 years and furlough them for one month or two months without pay. These men are entitled to better consideration at our hands. They are compelled very often to work seven days a week, and yet on account of the lack of appropriation they are laid off—some for one month and some for two months—without pay. There is very little immigration coming into this country, and yet the force has been so reduced at Ellis Lsland that some immigrants arriving here are compelled to wait for a week aboard ship in order to be examined.

I hold in my hand a speech delivered by the chairman of the Committee on Immigration of the United States Senate, and he calls particular attention to the fact—that the immigration from northern and western Europe is of a permanent character, while the immigration from southern and eastern Europe is of a temporary character; and, second, that the immigration movement from southern and eastern Europe is offset by the departures, or home-returning movement, of this group of aliens.

He further says:

Instead of conditions following the Great War producing, as many predicted, an increasing flow of immigration from these countries, these conditions have tended to check immigration.

There is no legitimate, logical reason for extending this 3 per cent law, with all of its inhumanities and barbarities, which have been so often brought home to the attention of Congress. We all know that under the 3 per cent quota law no student can come to the United States when the quota of his country is reached, but we also know that the number of students who can come in from Japan and China under this law is unlimited, because the 3 per cent quota law does not apply to Japan under any conditions.

There is no reason, if this 3 per cent quota law is to be amended, why provision should not have been made for students to come into this country, and in that way help to build up our commercial trade and international relations. No discretion of any kind is given to the Secretary of Labor in the cases where the visés were granted a long time ago, and despite the fact that we made $5,000,000 profits on immigration visés and head taxes last year, the conditions to which I have repeatedly called the attention of the House on this floor are allowed to continue.

I read the article which the Secretary of Labor has seen fit to insert in the Review of Reviews for the month of May. He discusses the 3 per cent quota law, and he is compelled to admit that he finds a number of cases where he is unable to do even-handed justice. I heard the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] a few moments ago talk about the steamship companies. What concerns me more is the treatment of the alien on board the ship, what effect his arrival is going to have so far as this country is concerned, and the treatment afforded to him when he does arrive. There is no reason that I know of why these steamship companies should not be required in each and every case to return the arriving immigrant to the other side if he is not admissable here, if he has once received a visé.

These steamship companies make a profit on the transportation of the immigrant. They are familiar with the law. They know before he boards the ship as to whether he can possibly be admitted, with the exception of the quota law. Now, as far as the quota law is concerned, it is practically a physical impossibility for any steamship company or any alien to know whether he can or can not be admitted, because the aliens are coming via Canada, via Mexico, coming from all over the world by rail or other steamship lines. This law is not based on residence, but on country of nativity.

Mr. VAILE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIEGEL. I will.

Mr. VAILE. If it is impossible for either the steamship company or the alien to know whether the quota has been exhausted, would the gentleman have the steamship company be required to pay back the cost of the transportation in those cases where the steamship company is blameless?

Mr. SIEGEL. The steamship company is in a better position to know than the alien is.

Mr. VAILE. But the gentleman has stated that the steamship company might not know.

Mr. SIEGEL. It might not know; that is true.

Mr. VAILE. Should it be required to pay back the money?

Mr. SIEGEL. They are in this position: They are making a profit on these immigrants and there is no fair reason why the immigrant should be returned at the expense of the Government and his transportation money returned to him.

Mr. VAILE. He is returned at the expense of the steamship company now, and will be under this legislation. What the gentleman referred to is the matter of refunding the passage money paid for coming.

Mr. SIEGEL. I am referring to the refund also. I am not looking to the question of a steamship profit or lack of profit. I am looking to a fair deal to the immigrant who has disposed of his all to come here. If the gentleman had been at Ellis Island during the past two weeks, he would have seen this type of case where a mother was sent back Saturday a week ago. She was born in Russia. Her orphan grandchild was born in Poland. The son has been in the service, but the child having been born in Poland, both were ordered returned and both were sent back. Now, the steamship company should have known that both of those could not possibly be admitted under our decisions here.

Mr. VAILE. And in that case, under the terms of this legislation, the money would be refunded if they had been known to have exercised reasonable diligence.

Mr. SIEGEL. The contention will be under this provision, and I am not opposing the provision as it is because I am not here defending the steamship company of any kind or description. Now, the mother of this soldier boy is admissible, but the grandchild is not admissible. But I am trying to point out that we have not alleviated the grievances created by this quota law or relieved it of the suffering caused by its enactment.

We still make the question of admission not a matter of residence but a matter of nativity. Now, take the Brest-Litovsk cases which have arisen during the past year. The department should not make a report which rules one time one way and another time another way. When in grave doubt, the visés having been issued by our consuls and the fees of $10 in each case collected, the immigrants should properly be given the benefit of the doubt. The United States District Court of New York has ruled that when a minister is in this country he has a right to send for his wife and minor children, regardless of the quota law.

Has the department followed that decision? No; it declines to do so. I feel, Mr. Speaker, that decisions of our courts should be respected until reversed by a higher court.

Mr. Speaker, the few Members on the floor of this House have heard this immigration debate now for the third time inside of one year. Has not the time arrived when we should very calmly, considerately consider what the immigration now coming to this country consists of, namely, women and children who are either joining parents or going to the father and husband? Annually during the past few years on or about May 1 various articles appear in the newspapers to the effect that recent immigrants are about to commit outrages on the 1st day of May. The usual announcements were made this year. May 1 passed away quietly and peacefully. Let us once more return to normal thinking and judge men and women, whether native or foreign born, by their real worth, character, and reputation. Let us give credit where it is due. Let us eliminate any idea which is being spread far and wide throughout the United States which tends in any way to create dissensions amongst our people on account of race, creed, color, or religion. These United States have been made greater and bigger through the efforts of all the peoples of the earth who have come here. Let us teach the immigrant what America stands for and what real, true American citizenship requires. Then if we are to have a new immigration law, let us base one on justice to ourselves and to those who may desire to come, not forgetting our traditions of old.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the ayes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. LONDON) there were—ayes 62, noes 9.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. There is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken, and there were—ayes 258, nays 26, not voting 146, as follows:

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 10730) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10730) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 9, 12, 17, 19, 27, 28, 29, 43, 44, 46, 47, and 55.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 7, 13, 14, 18, 20, 23, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 48, 52, and 54, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$5,425,246"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$6,968,076"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 8: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$200,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$582,505"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$350,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,030,350"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 16: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,527,910"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 21: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$4,097,282"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 22: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$6,562,302"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 24: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert: "$15,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 25: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$954,561"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 26: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,277,631"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 37: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 37, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$15,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 38: That the House recede from its disagreemeent to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$4,381,300"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 39: That the House recede from its disagreeement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 39, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$4,585,960"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 45: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$390,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 49: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 49, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,769,180"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 53: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 53, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$450,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 56: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 56, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "three persons at a rate not to exceed $6,500 each per annum"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed on Senate amendments numbered 40, 41, 42, 50, 51, 57, and 58.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10730) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report:

On No. 1: Appropriates $181,866, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $165,666, as proposed by the House, for rent of buildings in the District of Columbia.

On Nos. 2 and 3: Appropriates $2,877,600, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $2,578,800, as proposed by the House, for the investigation and eradication of tuberculosis in animals, and makes $2,027,600, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $1,728,800, as proposed by the House, available for the payment of indemnities, and inserts the language proposed by the Senate making $300,000 immediately available for the payment of indemnities.

On No. 4: Appropriates $112,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $118,900, as proposed by the Senate, for the expenses of scientific investigations in diseases of animals at the experiment station at Bethesda, Md.

On Nos. 5 and 6: Corrects the totals for the Bureau of Animal Industry.

On No. 7: Appropriates $92,935, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $87,935, as proposed by the House, for the investigation of diseases of orchard and other fruits.

On No. 8: Appropriates $200,000, instead of $250,000 as proposed by the Senate and $175,000 as proposed by the House, for the eradication or control of the white-pine blister rust.

On No. 9: Appropriates $39,820, as proposed by the House, instead of $45,820, as proposed by the Senate, for the investigation of plants yielding drugs, spices, etc.

On Nos. 10 and 11: Appropriates $582,505, instead of $732,505 as proposed by the Senate and $379,705 as proposed by the House, for the investigation and improvement of cereals and the study and control of cereal diseases, and makes $350,000, instead of $500,000 as proposed by the Senate and $147,200 as proposed by the House, available for the eradication of barberry bushes.

On No. 12: Appropriates $20,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $25,000, as proposed by the Senate, for the investigation, improvement, etc., of pecans, almonds, and other nuts.

On Nos. 13 and 14: Appropriates $121,700, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $114,200, as proposed by the House, for the investigation and improvement of methods of growing, handling, harvesting, storage, and marketing of fruits, and makes the appropriation available, as proposed by the Senate, for investigation of vegetables during the processes of marketing and storage.

On Nos. 15 and 16: Corrects the totals for the Bureau of Plant Industry.

On Nos. 17 and 18: Strikes out the language inserted by the Senate making the appropriation for forest products investigations available for testing grasses, and inserts the language proposed by the Senate providing that $15,000 of that appropriation shall be used for the investigation of flax straw as a source of supply for the manufacture of pulp and paper.

On No. 19: Strikes out the language proposed by the Senate appropriating $12,000 for personal services in the District of Columbia, made necessary by the requirements of the Federal water power act.

On No. 20: Appropriates $425,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $400,000, as proposed by the House, for the construction and maintenance of roads, trails, bridges, etc., in the national forests.

On Nos. 21 and 22: Corrects the totals for the Forest Service.

On No. 23: Appropriates $75,400, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $70,400, as proposed by the House, for investigations relating to the application of chemistry to agriculture and for biological investigations of food and drug products.

On No. 24: Appropriates $15,000 instead of $20,000, as proposed by the Senate, and $10,000, as proposed by the House, for the investigation of methods for the manufacture of sweet sirups.

On Nos. 25 and 26: Corrects the totals for the Bureau of Chemistry.

On No. 27: Appropriates $168,200, as proposed by the House, instead of $178,200, as proposed by the Senate, for the investigation of soils.

On Nos. 28 and 29: Corrects the totals for the Bureau of Soils.

On No. 30: Appropriates $178,500, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $168,500, as proposed by the House, for the investigation of insects affecting deciduous fruits, etc.

On Nos. 31 and 32: Appropriates $71,500, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $64,000, as proposed by the House, for the investigation of insects affecting citrus and other tropical plants, and makes $10,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $5,000, as proposed by the House, immediately available for investigation of the camphor scale.

On No. 33: Corrects the total for general expenses, Bureau of Entomology.

On Nos. 34 and 35: Appropriates $200,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $275,000, as proposed by the House, for the prevention of the spread of the European corn borer, and corrects the total for the Bureau of Entomology.

On No. 36: Corrects the language in the statutory salary roll for the Bureau of Biological Survey.

On No. 37: Appropriates $1,300,000, instead of $1,500,000, as proposed by the Senate, and $1,000,000, as proposed by the House, for cooperative agricultural extension work.

On Nos. 38 and 39: Corrects the totals for the States Relations Service.

On No. 43: Strikes out the language proposed by the Senate appropriating $10,000 for the study of standardization of farm machinery.

On No. 44: Appropriates $471,200, as proposed by the House, instead of $477,200, as proposed by the Senate, for marketing and distribution of farm products.

On Nos. 45, 46, and 47: Appropriates $390,000, instead of $405,000, as proposed by the Senate, and $357,400, as proposed by the House, for crop and live-stock estimates, and restores the language stricken out by the Senate.

On No. 48: Appropriates $405,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $385,000, as proposed by the House, for the market news service.

On No. 49: Corrects the total for general expenses, Bureau of Agricultural Economics.

On No. 52: Corrects the language in the statutory salary roll of the Federal Horticultural Board.

On No. 53: Appropriates $450,000 instead of $575,000 as proposed by the Senate and $50,000 as proposed by the House for the acquisition of additional forest lands at headwaters of navigable streams.

On No. 54: Strikes out, as proposed by the Senate, the language authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to sell the experimental farm located at New Iberia, La.

On No. 55: Appropriates $13,000 as proposed by the House instead of $15,000 as proposed by the Senate for the eradication of the Parlatoria date scale.

On No. 56, relating to salary limitations in the appropriation for the enforcement of the packers' and stockyards act: Inserts a substitute for the House and Senate provisions which allows three persons at a rate not to exceed $6,500 each per annum, instead of one person at a rate of $6,500 per annum as proposed by the House and three persons at that rate as proposed by the Senate.

The committee of conference did not agree upon the following amendments of the Senate:

On Nos. 40, 41, and 42: Relating to the expenditure of $175,000 out of the administrative fund provided by the Federal-aid road act for the investigation of the chemical and physical character of road material.

On Nos. 50 and 51: Relating to the use of moneys received from the sale of condemned cotton standards for the purchase of other cotton for such use.

On No. 57: Relating to maximum salaries of scientific investigators in the Department of Agriculture.

On No. 58: Total of the bill.

SYDNEY ANDERSON,
WALTER W. MAGEE,
EDWARD H. WASON,
J. P. BUCHANAN,
GORDON LEE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, the Senate added to the bill as it passed the House $1,684,000, in round numbers. As a result of the conference the bill is increased by $1,081,940. Unless there are questions on the conference report, I move its adoption.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first of the amendments in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 40: Page 61, line 17, after the figures "$175,000," insert: "payable out of the administrative fund provided by the Federal aid road act of July 11, 1916, as amended."

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment and concur in the same.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 41: Page 63, line 19, strike out "$542,120" and insert in lieu thereof, "$307,120."

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment and concur in the same.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 42: Page 63, line 20, strike out the figures "$658,320" and insert in lieu thereof "$483,320."

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 50: Page 68, line 15, after the word "act," strike out the figures "$175,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$146,540," and the following: "Provided, That any moneys received from or in connection with the sale of cotton purchased for the preparation of practical forms of the official cotton standards and condemned as unsuitable for such use may be expended by the Secretary of Agriculture during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, for the purchase of other cotton for such use."

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 51: Page 70, line 6, strike out the figures "$3,532,043" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,587,183."

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment. In lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$3,556,183."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ANDERSON moves to recede and concur with the following amendment: Strike out the figures "$3,587,183" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,556,183."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 57: Page 83, line 19, insert:

"MAXIMUM SALARIES.

"During the fiscal year 1923 the maximum salary of any scientific investigator, or other employee engaged in scientific work and paid from the general appropriation of the Department of Agriculture, shall not exceed at the rate of $6,000 per annum: Provided, That for the fiscal year 1923 no salary shall be paid under this paragraph at a rate per annum in excess of $5,000 except the following: Not more than eight in excess of $5,000 but not in excess of $5,500 each, and not more than three in excess of $5,500 each."

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, I have not the provision of the original bill as reported from the committee here in the House. Is this exactly the same as the provision of that bill?

Mr. ANDERSON. It is, with the exception that the amendment as proposed by the provision as reported by the House committee was permanent law, while this is restricted to the next fiscal year.

Mr. KINCHELOE. This just provides for this coming fiscal year? But the same number was allowed and the same maximum salary was fixed?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. That is, 11 in all, 8 of them drawing a maximum salary of $5,000 a year and not in excess of $5,500, and 3 in excess of $5,500?

Mr. ANDERSON. That is correct.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, may we have the amendment read again?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman from Minnesota yield to me five minutes?

Mr. ANDERSON. Certainly.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the Federal Government paying to the scientific investigators of the Agricultural Department such salary as will command the best talent to be had. It is very important that the employees of the Agricultural Department who determine questions as to the identity of insects that prey upon the agricultural production of this country should be the best type of scientific men that the Government can procure. Because, take it, for instance, in the Bureau of Entomology; if they make a mistake in determining the identity of the pink boll worm or the cause of the black rust on wheat or the pine blister, and we, relying upon their judgment, make appropriations to the extent of hundreds of thousands and even millions of dollars. The States, also relying upon their judgment, make like appropriations. So if we have at the head of these bureaus in the Agricultural Department incompetent men, we will throw away probably millions of dollars in backing their judgment.

But, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, notwithstanding these convictions that I entertain along that line, I think the language in this paragraph is far too broad in its scope and I think it includes too many within its view. Now, listen:

During the fiscal year 1923 the maximum salary of any scientific investigator, or other employee engaged in scientific work and paid from the general appropriation of the Department of Agriculture—

Any part of scientific work. Why, a man who went out into the field to collect insects to send to the bureau for the purpose of being tested and determined could be termed a scientific investigator. A man who went out into a vast wheat section and proposed to identify and mark the barberry bushes could be termed a scientific investigator and receive this salary.

What I want is verbiage in this bill that will command and compel the employment at an equitable salary of men who are equipped to determine correctly these questions, and such men only. As the law now stands, the limit of salary is $4,500 in the exact verbiage that this bill contains, and I understand the classification bill contains the same verbiage. If we adopt the verbiage in this bill, it will be incorporated in the permanent law, and some day we will find out that some Secretary of Agriculture will abuse or trespass upon the discretion herein reposed in him. I make no reflection upon the present Secretary. He may live up to the letter and the spirit of the law in every respect—and I have no doubt but that he will—but with the various duties which the Secretary of Agriculture is called upon to perform he can not be expected to give his personal attention to this matter any more than to other branches of the work. We may wake up some day to find subordinates in the Department of Agriculture are drawing these high salaries under the claim that they are "other employees engaged in scientific work." I would like to see it so fixed that the real scientific men get the salary they deserve, and even if that salary is $12,000 instead of $6,500 it should be placed high enough to command the best talent in the land. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that there is a misprint in the copy that is at the desk here. On page 83, line 23, the figures are "$6,000" instead of "$6,500."

Mr. ANDERSON. The official copy is correct.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Do I understand that the maximum salary, as carried in the official report of the action of the Senate, is $6,500 instead of $6,000?

Mr. ANDERSON. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have a copy of the amendment to the bill, as passed the Senate, which is "$6,000."

Mr. ANDERSON. That is incorrect, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. How many, then, will receive the salary of $6,500 under this amendment?

Mr. ANDERSON. That will not change the limitation at all. There are three.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman inform the House as to who are intended to receive these maximum salaries and these other increases?

Mr. ANDERSON. I can not give the gentleman the personnel. As a matter of fact, there probably will not be more than one.

Mr. STAFFORD. I recall the fact that some time ago a bill was called up on the Unanimous-Consent Calendar, from the Committee on Agriculture, favoring the permanent increase of salaries of some of the bureau chiefs in the Department of Agriculture. Was the maximum in that bill $6,500 or $6,000?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Six thousand five hundred dollars.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have sent for a copy of the bill, but I have not received it as yet. I was in sympathy with the purposes of the bill. Does this carry out the intendment of that bill?

Mr. KINCHELOE. If the gentleman will read the testimony of the Secretary of Agriculture when he appeared before the committee, he will see that he makes a very interesting statement and gives salient reasons why his department is handicapped by losing men in other fields.

Mr. STAFFORD. I now have a copy of the bill—H. R. 10819—reported from the Committee on Agriculture, providing for the increase of salaries of scientific investigators or employees engaged in scientific work. I do not find in the bill any salary as high as $6,500. I fear the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KINCHELOE] is in error when he says that the bill favors the maximum of $6,500.

Mr. KINCHELOE. My recollection was not clear about that; but what I had in mind was the statement of the Secretary of Agriculture before the committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, so that the RECORD may show what the Committee on Agriculture decided should be the advances in salaries, I wish to read——

Mr. HAUGEN. The salaries there were fixed as suggested by the Department of Agriculture. That was satisfactory to the department.

Mr. STAFFORD. Now, you are going $500 beyond the recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture. When this bill was under consideration and until the Speaker asked whether there was not a misprint in the bill, I was under the impression that the maximum salary was $6,000 instead of $6,500. Let me read into the RECORD what was recommended by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. HAUGEN. That was based on the statements of the representatives of the Secretary of Agriculture. They were satisfied with the salaries fixed in this bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. This bill that I refer to, H. R. 10819, provides—

That the maximum salaries per annum of the following number of scientific investigators or employees engaged in scientific work, paid from the general appropriations of the Department of Agriculture, shall not exceed as follows:

Not more than seven in excess of $4,500 but not in excess of $5,000 each.

Not more than five in excess of $5,000 but not in excess of $5,500 each.

Not more than three in excess of $5,500 but not in excess of $6,000 each, and in no case shall the salary of any exceed $6,000.

I suppose it was intended that these three, who, under the pending amendment, are to receive $6,500 were, under the bill reported by the Committee on Agriculture, to receive $6,000. Would the gentleman have any objection to have an amendment carrying out the intendment of the legislative committee of the House, so as to make the maximum $6,000?

Mr. ANDERSON. Of course, the whole matter is before the House. So far as I am concerned, I do not think $6,500 is too high, and I make that statement after having made some investigation of the salaries paid in the university in the gentleman's own State; for instance, the salaries paid in the University of Michigan and salaries paid in universities and colleges all over the land, where the salaries of professors are very much higher than those proposed here.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not wish to launch into a comparison between the salaries paid to professors in educational institutions, where their tenure is uncertain, and salaries paid to bureau chiefs in Washington, where their tenure is for life with a pensionable status.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Not all of them are for life.

Mr. STAFFORD. We know that any person who takes employment under the Government is there for life if he wishes to remain, but college professors have an entirely different status. I grant that so far as professors' salaries are concerned they may be $6,500, $7,000, or $10,000, but the gentleman will agree that we have to consider what we are paying to the heads of other bureaus, and I do not recall our paying higher than $6,000 to the head of any bureau. I was in sympathy with the bill reported from the Committee on Agriculture, because I recognize the necessity of these men receiving higher salaries than those which they are now receiving, but I think it is bad policy to go ahead and increase them up to $6,500, which is $500 more than we are paying any bureau head in the employ of the Government. Our First Assistant Postmaster General gets only $6,000.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask for a division of the question, and my purpose is to offer an amendment to the pending amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands a division of the question. That is in order. The question is first on the motion that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring in the Senate amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer an amendment in line 23, to substitute the figures "$6,000" for the figures "$6,500."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. STAFFORD moves to amend the committee amendment by striking out "$6,500" and inserting in lieu thereof "$6,000."

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield me just a few minutes?

Mr. ANDERSON. The gentleman has had 10 minutes already, but I will yield to him 5 minutes if he wants it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not ask for any further time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment numbered 58: Page 84, line 4, strike out the figures "$35,692,233" and insert in lieu thereof "$37,377,073."

Mr. ANDERSON. I move to recede and concur with an amendment; in lieu of the sum proposed to insert "$36,774,173."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota moves to recede and concur with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ANDERSON moves to recede and concur in amendment 58 with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$36,774,173."

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON].

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Speaker, failures among the farmers reached a crisis about 15 months before such crisis was reached in the stock exchange of New York. It usually takes a certain number of months for a depression to reflect from the producer of raw material to the brokerage concern. The result, however, has never failed to follow.

Only those closely associated with the farming of the country were early advised of the approaching collapse of agriculture. High prices brought about excessive inflation, and during the year 1919 it was freely predicted that a turn in the tide was coming. With this thought in mind and with the hope that an acute crisis could be avoided, I introduced on October 13, 1919, House Resolution 332, calling for a conference of agricultural interests. In February of 1920 a hearing was had on such resolution before the Committee on Agriculture, but interest and influence were lacking to bring about a favorable report. This was the first legislative suggestion to call a nation-wide conference to consider the condition of agriculture and propose remedies for such condition.

With the more acute agricultural depression came more persistent demands that Congress make some effort to bring about desired relief. All farm organizations began the study of the farmers' problem, various remedial measures were suggested. This concentration of effort has brought about more constructive agricultural legislation in the Sixty-seventh Congress than in any other Congress in the history of our country. Every man in Congress interested in the cause has contributed his share. Whether we call the Members of this House active in such movement the farmers' group or the "agricultural bloc" is beside the question.

They are no different from a "Navy group" or a "tariff bloc." They have put forth their best efforts to meet a critical situation, and in part have been successful. As a member of such group or "bloc," I desire to emphatically affirm that the whole purpose of such movement has been to bring about a consideration of a distressing problem by those in power. The charge that a third or indpendent party movement is proposed is unfounded. The whole movement has been prompted by necessity and for the purpose of requiring such legislation to be included in the program to be given consideration.

EMERGENCY TARIFF.

Foremost of the remedial legislation suggested was the emergency tariff. No unprejudiced person can carefully study its workings without admitting its benefits. Before its enactment an average of one and one-half millions of bushels of corn was coming in at our ports every month. Now there is practically none. Canadian wheat was stored on our borders. Now it is seeking other markets. Wool buyers were refusing to make an offer for wool. Now the market is stabilized and advancing. Every woolgrowers' and producers' association in the United States admits that the emergency tariff saved the wool industry. Frozen mutton and meats were offered on our markets. Now home meats are being consumed. A tariff is a necessity on materials of which we produce a surplus, for the reason that it protects us from the oversupply in other countries and makes for a stabilized home market.

Wallace's Farmer, in editorial comment, says:

There are many things to be said for a self-sufficing United States such as the tariff bill apparently contemplates. As a result of trading less with foreign countries we shall be less likely to get mixed up in European and Asiatic politics, and if we do get into trouble we shall be more able to take care of ourselves because of having developed a well-rounded industrial and agricultural life at home, a life less likely to be interfered with by blockades.

The economic condition of our agricultural industry is more involved in the tariff legislation than in any other, passed or pending.

GRAIN FUTURES ACT.

After a carefully laid foundation in the Sixty-sixth Congress, brought about by the depressed market for grains produced by the farmers of the Middle West, among the first bills introduced in the Sixty-seventh Congress were measures seeking to regulate the boards of trade, known as the grain futures bill. For more than 30 years Congress has been making some effort to reach an agreement on legislation covering the grain marketing. It has never been successful until the Sixty-seventh Congress enacted the bill now a law. This has been tested in the Federal courts and found constitutional, and the best information I can procure from grain men themselves is to the effect that many abuses in the present marketing system are being eradicated and that they are pleased that these abuses have come within the provisions of the law and need no longer be coped with in the grain exchanges.

COOPERATIVE MARKETING ACT.

In connection, the Sixty-seventh Congress has also passed the cooperative marketing act, which permits various organizations producing raw materials to cooperate in the marketing of their grain. The truth is that the farmers heretofore have acted independently of each other in marketing their produce, each selling regardless of time, price, or conditions, and many of them being compelled to sell by reason of financial obligations. It is the hope that under the cooperative marketing privilege given in this law they may unite in financing each other and that the marketing of crops can be distributed over 12 months of the year, instead of being sold in three months of the year, to be manipulated by commission firms for the other nine months of each year. I predict that in three years' time the grain marketing in this country will be on a stable basis under these regulations and that the farmers will be satisfied with the marketing privileges granted to them thereunder.

PACKERS' LICENSING ACT.

In the same Congress the packers' licensing bill was favorably reported by the Committee on Agriculture and became a law. This law has just been sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States. Those best informed admit that the regulations provided under this act are eradicating many of the abuses of the former packer-controlled live-stock marketing system in existence. The privilege granted the Secretary of Agriculture is not drastic, but the peculiar abuses imposed upon the live-stock producer have been minimized, and that manipulation is prevented, and the live-stock raiser is again encouraged and is looking forward to a hopeful future.

WAR FINANCE CORPORATION.

In connection with the legislation referred to, we found that the agricultural interests were stranded for want of financing. Even though the deflation brought upon the agricultural interests by the Federal reserve system was required, in order to make the financial system of the agricultural States secure, it was entirely too rapid, and forced a depression in prices that brought a financial crisis in agricultural States. No one denies that the expansion in finances was too great, but they do contend that the deflation was too rapid, and should have been spread over a term of years, rather than a period of months. In order to relieve the situation the War Finance Corporation was revived, and through its channels approximately $25,000,000 has been placed at the disposal of the farming interests in Iowa alone. Many say that this assistance did not extend to the individual agricultural producer. Indirectly it did extend to the producer, for the reason that many banks would have been compelled to force liquidation of their loan accounts had not the War Finance Corporation come in and relieved them of their excess loans. This has materially benefited the farmers of Iowa.

RATE OF INTEREST ON AGRICULTURAL LOANS.

It was also found that the loaning system provided by the Government was unable to function by reason of the slack demand for the bonds issued either by the Federal land banks or the joint-stock land banks. In order to stimulate the sale of these bonds, an amendment to the law was passed permitting the bonds to be sold at a rate of an additional one-half of 1 per cent. With this assistance, the bonds of these banks have been floated, and many loans have been made to the farmers of Iowa and other States, which have materially assisted them in refinancing their losses and covering them over a period of years. The loans made since these systems began to function approximate $629,000,000.

SURTAX RATE ON INCOMES.

It is my contention that the influence of the agricultural interests acted in behalf of the good of the common people in concentrating its efforts in favor of the 50 per cent surtax rate on incomes in lieu of the 32 per cent surtax rate as proposed. A careful analysis of the law as enacted shows that we reduced the taxes paid by everyone having income between $6,000 and $68,000, and not until the income exceeds $86,000 does the tax as provided in the Senate amendment, which became the law, exceed the tax as proposed in the bill as passed by the House. The action thereby relieved 657,000 taxpayers of a portion of their tax burdens, while if the 32 per cent surtax rate had been adopted relief would have been offered to only 11,000 persons of a portion of their tax burdens.

Unfounded is the charge that the tax law is unfair. We have reduced the surtax rate on the average income. It was the contention of those favoring the higher surtax rate that this relief would materially assist so many more people, that the reinvestment in industries would be even greater than though the 32 per cent surtax rate was fixed.

It is to be noted that nearly all of the advocates of the lower surtax rate were also advocates of the sales tax, and if the surtax rate as fixed in the lower rate proposed failed to produce the necessary revenue the alternative would be to levy a sales tax and thus spread the tax further among those least able to pay.

MATERNITY ACT.

Attention is called to the fact that the maternity bill, having for its purpose the general welfare of the common people of the country, is now a law. This was of intense interest to the motherhood of the country, openly advocated by all prominent women's organizations in every State, and a decisive step toward accomplishing some of the things that the progressive women of our country are demanding in behalf of our people.

COMMODITY FINANCING.

Plans for the future in behalf of agriculture are concrete and under way. There is unity of policy among the various organizations interested. They agree upon certain fundamental measures and encourage their enactment by Congress. These interests have a perfect right to insist that they shall be given a hearing equal with other interests in this country. It is their contention that they have not been given equal consideration.

It is proposed to ask a reorganization of the farm credits system in this country. This is to be accomplished by a commodity financing plan, which has been carefully worked out and is now pending before the Committee on Banking and Currency. This proposed legislation will provide a method by which those having raw products can store the same under some form of warehousing and secure sufficient advances thereon to assist in financing their needs until the proper time for sale of the product. This will apply to grain, live stock, and so forth.

Our financial system has been formulated around commercial and industrial banking interests, without the inclusion of agricultural protection as a purpose. Short-time securities are usually maturing at a time most embarrassing to a producer of raw materials, and an elastic system along this line is now being formulated.

AGRICULTURE REPRESENTED ON FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD.

Agriculture also asks that it be included in the various industries represented in the Federal Reserve Board. The raw products of agriculture last year amounted to over $21,000,000,000, the largest of any one industry in the country. And yet our Federal Reserve Board as now constituted represents entirely the industrial and commercial banking interests of the country. This is the reason why they are led to make orders and suggest policies that react first and hardest against the producer of raw materials. If a member representative of agriculture may be placed on this board, he will be able to present the cause of agriculture and see that it is given fair consideration in the policies of the board.

TAX-EXEMPT SECURITIES.

Another feature of the program for the welfare of agriculture has taken definite form in a resolution introduced by Congressman GREEN of Iowa, for an amendment to the Constitution which will practically result in the stopping of further issuance of tax-exempt securities by the Federal or State Governments. This legislation has received encouragement, and the resolution is now pending in the House, with the expectation that it will be favorably acted upon in the near future.

TRANSPORTATION SYSTEM.

The future program of agriculture is also interested in the reformation of our transportation system. The complaint against high freight rates is entirely justified. The only recourse of the producing Middle West is to in every way encourage water transportation in order that the Middle West may have some form of water competition with the present railway transportation. This will reflect in general freight-rate reductions throughout that section. A promise is now being made that with the revival of transportation freight rates will be reduced. This reduction must come on raw materials, and it is the purpose to carefully work out a systematic plan by which influence can be brought to bear to readjust the whole transportation system in keeping with the demands of agriculture.

ADDITIONAL INTERESTING LEGISLATION.

The "truth-in-fabric" bill is of interest to all persons who produce wool, and to all persons who wear clothing. This bill is being opposed by the manufacturer of woolen clothes because it will prevent his using shoddy wool when he should use real wool. It is being favored by the producers of wool, and by those who believe that no hardship is imposed upon any manufacturer when he is compelled to say to the public "this garment contains certain materials woven into cloth."

The "standard container" bill is trying to protect the public by refusing to permit men to sell a basket of peaches containing seven-eighths of a bushel for a full bushel, when the baskets are so nearly the same size that it can not be detected by the eye.

The "filled-milk" bill, if enacted into law, will prohibit the sale of milk from which the butter fat has been removed and for which vegetable oil has been substituted as an article of food. This proposed legislation protects not only the milk producer but also the consumer of the product. It is proposed for the general welfare and protection of the buying public, and is not promoted purely for the selfish interests of the producer.

IMPORTANCE OF THE "AGRICULTURAL BLOC."

Prosperity for the farmer depends directly upon great masses of nonagricultural people consuming his product. Everyone of these measures is as much for the protection of the consumer as for the producer. The purpose is to eliminate expense between the producer and the consumer, and decrease the cost accordingly. With the reduction in the spread between the producer and the consumer benefit will inure to both.

This movement in behalf of agriculture is not a selfish one. Farmers are seeking a method to better their living conditions, to better their community life, their school life, and their citizenship. Any movement that seeks to bring about these better conditions should be encouraged, rather than criticized, and if the "agricultural bloc" in Congress shall carry out its program to stabilize food production, economize transportation, minimize market machinery, liberalize commodity financing, equalize export demands, and harmonize the different sections of the country accordingly, its influence and action will inure to the benefit of our entire citizenship.

Mr. ANDERSON. I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to proceed out of order. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Speaker and colleagues, one month of the great coal strike has passed into history with no immediate prospects of the contending forces getting together in settlement. It is estimated that there are 650,000 striking coal miners in the country to-day, and very few of them are temporarily employed in any other capacity. It is true that the pinch from want of fuel has not been severely felt as yet, but the time is fast approaching when our splendid industrial progress will be crippled to a marked degree. The American public waits for necessity to drive it into activity. Very little interest was shown prior to April 1, while the two great contending forces in the mining industry were drifting to an inevitable strike with all its damaging, blighting influences. During the last month a tremendous amount of economic waste has taken place. One-twelfth of the year for many thousands of men has been lost forever. The Republic's greatness and usefulness has been impaired and weakened. Its wealth and commercial prestige must inevitably suffer. How long it is to continue no one can say.

The Committee on Labor in the House of Representatives, beginning before the 1st of April, have been making every effort possible to bring about an adjustment of the differences between the miners' organization and operators' organization, but it has been without successful termination. Our labor has been helpful, I am sure, in clearing up many points of misunderstanding of which the country is now informed, and in obtaining a great amount of information which is to prove of great value in the solution of the problem which we all hope will come in the near future.

On the 17th of March I spoke from this floor on the possibilities and probabilities of the strike occurring. I called attention then to the agreement of the operators of the central competitive field with the United Mine Workers' officials to meet prior to the 1st day of April, 1922, for the purpose of arriving at a biennial agreement and thus avoid the necessity of a shutdown of the mines. This agreement was entered into by the operators and miners with the consent and approval and at the solicitation of the Government, and it has been regarded that the agreement was virtually underwritten by the United States Government.

In conformity with this agreement the miners evidenced a willingness, and even great anxiety, to meet the operators in accordance with their long-standing custom and thus avoid the necessity of a strike. It was known then that the operators of southern Ohio and western Pennsylvania were not willing to meet, but fully intended to breach their agreement. It was my understanding at the time that the operators of Illinois, Indiana, and other portions of Ohio in the central competitive field were anxious and willing to meet; in fact, I have been informed and I have since ascertained that I was correctly informed, that the Indiana operators had in good faith made an effort to get ready for the conference, but found that southern Ohio and western Pennsylvania were obstinately refusing to meet the other members in the central competitive field for the purpose of fixing a basic wage scale. President Harding on more than one occasion showed that he was not unmindful of the fact that the mining industry was about to be paralyzed by a great Nation-wide strike, and he expressed his disapproval at the obstinate attitude on the part of some in refusing to carry out the agreement. Secretary Davis had "gone the limit" in trying to get the contending forces together. He found that the miners were willing and anxious to meet in accordance with their doctrine of collective bargaining, but that certain operator groups were immovable in their determination to bring the present crisis upon the country. Many causes may be assigned for the open breach of faith and open defiance to public and official opinion on the part of the operators. It was contended by the two objecting groups that they could not under the wage scale existing compete with the nonunion operators in contiguous territory. I do not believe this to be the real reason for their refusal to meet. If this was the real reason they would have met the miners in accordance with their agreement, proposed a reduction, declared their inability to compete, and adjourned the meeting, leaving themselves in a better strategical position. Some of them had openly stated before the Labor Committee that they would not meet with the central competitive field operators as in the years gone, for the reason that changed conditions made the basic wage-scale fixing by the old competitive field no longer practicable. Your Committee on Labor felt that there was hope of getting some of them together to fix a basic wage scale.

President John L. Lewis came before the committee, laid his cards squarely on the table and made a plain, definite proposition, and showed in his attitude a disposition to meet the operators in a spirit of fairness and conciliation. True enough, he made demands which he himself probably realized his organization could not hope to obtain in a conference at this time with the operators' organization. His attitude to anyone who has studied his testimony would clearly indicate that his proposal was made for the purpose of bargain making and, necessarily, in accordance with the history of such affairs, his organization would be required to recede from a part of its demands. He frankly stated that he would recommend to his policy committee that if any representative tonnage of the central competitive field would be willing to meet his organization that they should meet for the purpose of fixing a basic wage scale.

The central competitive field represents 200,000,000 tons. Illinois has a tonnage of 90,000,000 and Indiana 30,000,000 tons.

The Committee on Labor, knowing that Indiana and Illinois operators had evidenced a willingness to meet, believed that Illinois, Indiana, and a portion of Ohio could be persuaded to meet the miners. Accordingly we wired the officials of these operator groups, stating the attitude of Mr. Lewis and asking them if they would be willing to meet on April 10 in Washington. The Pittsburgh Vein Operators' Association, of Ohio, replied in substance that they did not consider it to the best interests of the district which they represented to meet in this manner. George M. Jones, president of the Ohio Collieries Co., wired in substance that he was afraid to meet them, fearing he would be prosecuted by the Federal authorities. Indiana Bituminous Coal Operators' Association answered that they were willing to meet the miners in interstate conference of central competitive field as previously constituted but not otherwise, but that they would meet the miners of Indiana. The Pittsburgh Coal Producing Association wired that it had definitely and finally determined that they would not again participate in a so-called competitive field conference. The southern Ohio coal operators at once declined to meet with the old competitive field arrangement, and expressed a fear of prosecution by the Federal authorities. Illinois Coal Operators' Association, having heard of the attitude of the other groups, replied that since the others had refused to meet in the conference, it left Illinois by itself, and that a meeting with the Union Mine Workers of America as a whole would not be practicable. Thus, for first one reason and another, they have all refused to meet the miners to make an agreement.

Before our committee some operators expressed themselves as having no fear of Federal prosecution. Others continued to use the fear of Federal prosecution as an excuse to hide their real reasons for failure to meet.

During the hearings Attorney General Harry M. Daugherty, having been informed by me of the contention of the operators, addressed to me a letter, as follows:

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., April 26, 1922.

Hon. OSCAR E. BLAND, M. C.

MY DEAR MR. BLAND: I have your letter of this date making inquiry of me as to the attitude of the Department of Justice with respect to a conference between the operators and miners of the central competitive field.

I beg to advise you that indictments were found in the Indiana Federal court against a large number of operators and a large number of miners for things charged to have been done at meetings where conferences similar to those now proposed took place. These indictments were found prior to the time of my assuming the office of Attorney General of the United States. Some of those indicted were residents of States other than the State of Indiana. In practically all of the States outside of Indiana defendants resisted removal proceedings, and these removal proceedings are still pending.

While the Department of Justice has not been officially asked by anybody to state the position of the department in regard to these indictments or in regard to seeking other indictments in case such a meeting as has been under discussion recently should be held, I have, in public statements and private conversations, very frankly stated that considering the agreement two years ago between the miners and operators in this particular field, and, it may be said, the Government's participating in that agreement, that a meeting should be held prior to the 31st day of March, 1922. I felt it the duty of the operators and miners to hold such a meeting. Both sides have known all along (informally) that it was my judgment that a meeting should be held, because of the peculiar situation with reference to the meeting which had previously been held, which provided upon adjournment for a subsequent meeting, and to which agreement the Government was more or less a party.

Now, having taken that position, is it likely that the Department of Justice would undertake a prosecution against men for doing a thing which it advised under the circumstances should be done? Nobody connected with this department has made any statement to the effect that a prosecution would be undertaken if a meeting such as was contemplated by the resolution providing for the same were to be held. The question as to fear of the Government's action was never, to my knowledge, raised until the recent refusal of the operators to hold such a meeting. To my knowledge the question was not raised when the operators some months ago were willing, at least, if they did not urge, that a meeting should be held, at which time, as I am advised, the miners refused or gave reasons why they could not meet.

I believe I have given you the facts as they exist, and I believe they will not be contradicted.

Very truly yours,

H. M. DAUGHERTY,
Attorney General.

In our hearings we have heard nothing more having the resemblance to sincerity about the fear of the law. P. H. Penna, secretary of the Indiana Bituminous Coal Operators' Association and the real spokesman of the operators of the central competitive field, and the champion and defender, as well as one of the most influential originators of the Central Competitive Field Association, took the position before our committee that he was unwilling to meet with Illinois and eastern Ohio. He begged the committee not to require him to explain his reasons. The committee felt that the Illinois and Indiana operators were not in accord, and that there was no hope of getting them together in line with the proposition of Mr. Lewis. It has been the contention of the operators who appeared before our committee, and who employ union labor, that it was necessary for them to break away from the competitive field contract practice and divide up into State or district units and deal directly with the men of those units. Up to this point there has been no indication on the part of the United Mine Workers of America that they are willing to adopt this method in order that an agreement may be reached.

The committee's inquiries has covered practically every phase of the coal-mining industry. With our limited powers and facilities we have attempted to gather all needful information, but find that very little accurate, useful, and detailed information can be obtained from any source, and such as has been obtained is necessarily given in exaggerated form, depending somewhat on the interests of the informants. The Geological Survey, the Department of Labor statistics, the Federal Trade Commission, the Interstate Commerce Commission, the United Mine Workers' statistician, the statistical department of the National Coal Association, and various other agencies and individuals have been called upon to give facts with reference to the cost of coal production, distribution, and sale, together with wages, labor, and living conditions in the coal-mining industry.

We have inquired about profits and losses, illegal combinations, and coal profiteering. At the outset we were met with the remarkable statement of facts that no Government fact-finding agency was able to give any information on more than 2,500 mines out of the possible 11,000, and that for the most part the information was restricted to two or three hundred mines. Governmental agencies, in their attempts to gain information, with a few minor exceptions, were required to take and did take such information only as the operators through their various associations wished to disclose. Even the Federal Trade Commission, which the country believed had full power to obtain facts, were met with a restraining order against inquiring into the production of coal in the States. On more than one occasion operators brazenly refused to give the labor committee the cost of production or the selling price of coal at their mines.

It was shown that coal in 1920 and 1921 had been selling at the mine f. o. b. at prices ranging from $2.25 to $12 per ton. Some of the mines where the high and outrageous prices were demanded and obtained were owned by those who refused to give information on cost production. The National Coal Association, through its vice president, Mr. Morrow, came forward with its padded report, stating that their compilations of the cost of coal production showed that it averaged $2.94 per ton and that the labor cost per ton was $1.992. Upon being questioned as to details of labor cost, no information could be obtained to show what the cost was in the better class of mines. It was admitted that in arriving at the average many "fly-by-night" mines, which operated only when there was an excessive demand for coal, were included in the compilations of production cost. I make this statement advisedly—there is no agency in this Government to-day that has the informatoin, or that can obtain it, as to what it cost during the last year for a well-equipped, efficient coal mine to produce a ton of coal. The Government not only does not have it, but the right to obtain it is denied them by the coal producer. He says it is an unwarranted interference with his private business.

Gentlemen of the House, coal is the life of the business of the country. Without cheap fuel available at all times we are handicapped in our economic growth.

So much depnds upon coal that it is quasi public in character, and our citizenship is fast realizing that until we solve the coal problem our national greatness is woefully handicapped.

I will tell you why the operator does not want to give the price it costs him to produce a ton of coal, and he may camouflage all he wants to to keep from giving the true reason, but this is the reason: At times when the pinch comes, and the public must have coal, he demands an exorbitant price for it, and he does not want the country to know what it costs him to produce it, because he realizes that in many instances the public would feel outraged, and that some retaliatory measures would be resorted to. It is hoped by those who are thinking the deepest on this great national problem that we may eventually find a remedy for the evils in the coal industry, and that it may be stabilized so that we may have a steady production at all seasons during the year, and when competition will reign and cheap fuel may be had with a good fair profit to the operator and a good wage and steady work for the employee. You will ask what are the bad conditions that prevail to-day in the coal business and what are the remedies? I can answer the first question with probably as much certainty as anyone, considering the limited facts obtainable. The second question is the great problem to be worked out after all the facts have been obtained. I have some notions as to what may be done to help solve the problem. I do not claim to be able to point out a sure remedy for this economic ailment, but I believe that I have some suggestions that will be helpful.

In the first place, gentlemen, the coal business is overdeveloped. There are one-third too many mines and one-third too many miners. Some operators make the statement that this condition insures competition and insures stability and a reasonable price for fuel. Not at all. On the contrary, we find ourselves in the position where the public must give a profit to the unprofitable mine and pay wages to the miner who works but one-third of the time. The real trouble of the business is that the coal industry is seasonable. In the fall and winter there is an unusual demand for coal. This may be said to be the fault of the public, and in that lies one of our problems.

Everybody wants coal at once. The price goes up. Men go out to the mouth of the mines and bid against each other to get the output of the mine. Seriously, now, gentlemen, can you blame the operator for selling to the man who offers him the most? Does not the farmer do it? Does not almost everybody else who has anything to sell do the same thing? It is just at this time that the fellow with the unprofitable mine, with the thin coal vein, with the slate band, with the mine which can not be operated except at an abnormal expense, comes to the front and sells his coal at the inflated price. His miner only works one-third of the time during the year, and if he is paid $7.50 per day he only earns about $75 per month. Could he live and support his family on less? The operators say that the remedy is to reduce this fellow's wages. I say that as long as the mine is there with the hope of employment, the miner will continue to stay there and the country can not see him suffer.

If the more efficiently managed and cheaper operated mines could operate throughout the year like other manufacturing institutions, it would not be necessary for the unprofitable mine to operate. With steadier work a cheaper wage per day might be possible. That means cheaper production cost per ton. So long as we have seasonable production we will have overdevelopment and overemployment at the coal mines, and when the pinch comes the public will have to pay for the overdevelopment.

How are you going to cure the overdevelopment problem? A careful, scientific study of the problem, after full, scientifically gathered and prepared data is obtained, will find the solution for the problem. I believe the bringing about of summer production of coal will go further toward solving the problem than anything that has been suggested. You immediately ask how are you going to bring about summer production of coal? First, by making a summer freight rate on coal. We have the power to do that under existing law. Second, the railroads consume one-third of the coal produced in the United States. Require the railroads to store their coal during the summer, and encourage the public to do as much of it as possible. If the railroads would store their coal during the summer the car-shortage question would be largely settled, and the inevitable scramble and profiteering at the approach of winter would not be so noticeable.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. On what principle does the gentleman think he could make the railroads buy their coal in the summer time?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Through the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. DENISON. Under what existing law?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. On the theory that they can not operate if they can not get the coal. If that is not the law, it ought to be, and I believe will be.

Mr. DENISON. Does the gentleman think that the Government could compel the railroads to buy steel or box cars?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I think the power of the Government would go that far. In the regulation of interstate commerce the Government has the right to go that far, and surely they would have the right to require them to buy not only cheap fuel but available fuel.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. Does the gentleman think the Federal Government has a right to take twenty billion of the people's wealth and do what they please with it?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. They are doing it. But that is water over the wheel. This country is big enough, and the State lines are obliterated to the extent that no longer will they tolerate the doctrine that local interests can interfere with the general welfare of the Republic.

Mr. LAYTON. I am not talking about the matter of State lines, but the bolshevistic government taking private wealth without remuneration.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. The gentleman from Delaware will find that these Bolshevists are asking the Government of the United States $16 a ton for Navy coal, and as a Member of Congress he ought to get up on his toes and howl for cheaper fuel for the Navy rather than about the interference with private business.

You hear much talk by the operators against coal storage and summer production. Why? Because they want the pinch to come when they can pinch the consumer, and no man that has studied this problem can arrive at any other conclusion, if he has the fairness and the courage to express himself. Mr. Penna said that the coal was stored by nature in the ground, and that in the ground where nature put it was the best place to store it. The trouble of his theory is that the public can not get to the storage bin until after the strikes and contentions between the operator and miner have been settled and the profiteers have had their chance. Not alone is the exorbitant price demanded by the operator when the cold-weather pinch comes a nightmare of the poor consumer, but he is robbed and plundered by selling agencies, coal brokers, and middlemen before it gets to the retail dealer, and then the retail dealer proceeds to nail the lid upon the consumer's coffin.

Mr. Morrow, vice president of the National Coal Association, said that he was paying $15 per ton for coal in Washington City. A fellow by the name of Ritter, according to the testimony before a coal investigating committee of the Senate, started out to sell to the consumer here at considerably reduced prices. The retailers' organization, in the shadow of the Department of Justice, told him in no uncertain terms that his underselling the retailers' organization was unfair, and that he would have to raise the price or they would put him out of business. And they did put him out of business. He found that he could not buy any coal to sell his customers because they had tightened down upon the producer of the coal, who in turn refused to sell to him. I wonder if this is evidence of an illegal combination in restraint of trade? It is a brazen, open violation of the law in the Nation's Capital affecting the health, comfort, and the very lives of its citizenship. True, this is probably no worse than conditions that maintain in the food markets of this and many other cities, but if you will add the retail holdup to the very perplexing coal production problem you can understand why the coal consuming public has about reached the limit of its patience.

Certain operators would make the public believe—and they are the greatest propagandists in America to-day—that all the ills of the coal industry should be laid upon the back of the man who digs the coal. They must know that this is unfair, and if you will go with me into the mining fields, with which I am acquainted, I can show you in many places the hovel of the coal miner, where he sits to-day with his poorly clad, pinched-faced family, brooding over the unkindness of fate. It is true that some among them, who have the most favored working conditions under the existing wage scale, at times earn a wage that is fairly compensatory and which is adequate to raise his standard of living high among the working people. But as a class they are not prosperous. In the central competitive field he gets $1.08 for mining a ton of coal. He must from this pay considerable for powder, light, pick sharpening, and so forth. He can mine 10 tons of coal per day, but more often he does not have the opportunity of mining 10 tons per day, and he often does not have but two or three days work per week.

Mr. Morrow said that the cheapness of coal did not increase its consumption in the United States to any marked degree. Would cutting down the miners wage 40 per cent and reducing the earnings of the man who gets $800 per year to $480 cheapen the production cost of coal more than 45 cents per ton? The average profit per ton to the operator during 1920 in 51 mines investigated by the Federal Trade Commission and taken from the operators' own statement was between $2 and $2.50 per ton. Of course the more favored mines, the more efficiently managed mines, made a far greater profit than this.

When coal sells retail for $12 a ton what kind of a heart has the interested party who clamors for taking off the 45 cents from the poor devil who goes down into the dark chasms of the earth, imperils his life and health in order that we may have light and fuel? Every mail brings to my office highly colored, beautifully decorated, attractive-looking propaganda purporting to tell the facts about the coal question. Millions of dollars are being spent to educate the public that the whole trouble of the coal-mining industry lies in the unbent spirit of the man who refuses to give up a part of the pittance he is now receiving. The operator says he can not compete with the nonunion operator. For the sake of argument let us suppose that at the end of a long and devastating strike the operators of union mines could beat down the wages of their men to the level of the wages paid in the mines of their nonunion competitors. Does it not occur to you that the nonunion mine owner would soon announce a new wage scale below the new scale agreed upon between the union mine and the organized mine workers? Would there be any end to it; and what, in the meantime, would happen to the unfortunate fellow whose toil and risk makes it possible for us to have fuel? Do any of you want the welfare of 750,000 American citizens to depend upon the generosity of employers engaged in trying to cut each other's throats at the expense of the men who do the work and at the expense of their unfortunate families?

The United States Steel Corporation owns 1,000,000 acres of coal land. The railroad companies own millions more, and are operating them in many instances. Are we to believe that these steel companies and railroad companies are idly watching these days go by while the stout-hearted pick wielder sits in his cabin door waiting for the opening of the mine? These powerful organizations, in my judgment, are wasting millions trying to teach an exasperated public that their hands are clean, that their hearts are pure, that their methods are good, that they are philanthropists, and all that stands between the public and the solution of the fuel problem is the horny-handed fellows that get $1.08 per ton for mining it. And there are those among you who have been led into this way of thinking. Some of you approach the question with prejudice against union labor because of certain misconduct on the part of certain union men.

I do not attempt to palliate or excuse, but, on the contrary, I mercilessly condemn lawlessness, unnecessary trouble making, and agitation in industry, and I do not care whether it hits the union or the nonunion man. The attempt that is being made to-day by powerful and selfish organizations to break up the organizations of laboring men, with which they have protected themselves and their families for a generation, will not succeed.

Most of those who have openly fought unionism have not the courage to go before the public and show that their present attempts are made in that direction, because they realize that the United Mine Workers of America, not only during the war but during its existence, has been the stabilizing influence that has kept down Bolsheviks and extreme radicalism in the mining industry and by keeping the men working in the coal mines when otherwise there would have been industrial chaos.

If this fight is to be fought out to a finish it means that the doctrine of Judge Gerry—the open shop, the abolition of the union in our mines of the United States—shall maintain, or that the recognition of the existing miners' organization and a contract shall eventually result. Does any sensible, thinking man believe that this country can wait to see the mines throughout the whole country nonunionized? Does not it appeal to you as being essential to the immediate needs of the country that labor and capital in the coal-mining industry, in substantially their present organized form, shall speedily get together and proceed to administer to the wants of the country, whose general welfare is paramount to the interests of all? [Applause.]

I believe this administration is going to be helpful when the time arrives when it believes it can be effective. I have that confidence in the men at the head of our Government. I said before, and I say now, however, that if the miners had broken their agreement that the heavy hand of the law would have been upon their backs before now, at least the threat of it. The Government is not going to be helpful if it equivocates as to whether it is going to prosecute the participants in a wage-scale conference which would probably result in an agreement between the contending forces. The Attorney General should clarify some statements that he, according to the press, is reported to have made since writing me the letter to which I have referred. These statements have been calculated to bolster up false reasons for refusing to confer.

I believe in trying to stop the fire before the house is burned down. Surely the bitterness and strife and heat engendered with the coming weeks will not aid in a peaceful solution of what, in my judgment, is the greatest industrial crisis we have faced in a generation.

I have offered as a substitute for H. R. 11022 the bill which reads as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11022) to establish a commission to inquire into labor conditions in the coal industry.

Be it enacted, etc., That when used in this act—

(a) The term "person" means individual, partnership, corporation, or association; and

(b) The term "coal" means anthracite, bituminous, and other coal, lignite, coke, and culm, whether in place, extracted, or banked.

SEC. 2. (a) That there is hereby established a governmental agency to be known as the "coal investigation agency," and to be composed of 10 members, as follows:

(1) The Director of the Geological Survey, the Director of the Bureau of Mines, the Director of the Bureau of the Census, and the Commissioner of Labor Statistics; and

(2) Six members to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, two of whom shall represent the coal mine operators; two of whom shall represent the employees of such operators; and two of whom shall represent the public.

(b) Any vacancy in the office of an appointed member of the coal investigation agency shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment. The appointed members shall each receive a salary of $6,000 a year. The members ex officio shall receive no additional salary for their services as members.

(c) The coal investigation agency shall cease to exist two years after the passage of this act.

SEC. 3. That for the purpose of providing information for the Congress as a basis for legislation to settle industrial disputes in and prevent the overdevelopment of the coal industry, to stabilize and to levy taxes in respect to such industry, and to regulate commerce in coal among the several States and with foreign nations, the coal investigation agency is authorized and directed to require and obtain from any person such data, information, and reports as it deems desirable for such purpose, including among other matters data, information, and reports as to the supply, production, distribution, storage, and consumption of coal and its grading and economic utilization, as to the relations between operators of coal mines and washeries and their employees, with particular reference to wages, hours of labor, and working conditions, and as to the ownership and physical value of coal lands and of such property of operators or owners as is of use in the operation of coal mines or washeries.

SEC. 4. That the coal investigation agency shall make such reports to the Congress and to the President from time to time as it deems advisable, and shall make to the Congress and to the President a final report not later than two years after the passage of this act. All data or information obtained by the coal investigation agency shall not be made public except in such reports to the Congress and to the President, or in compliance with the subpœna or order of a court of competent jurisdiction. Such reports shall not contain any such data or information which would disclose the trade secrets of any person. Any officer or employee of the coal investigation agency who shall make public any data or information in violation of the provisions of this section shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

SEC. 5. (a) That for the efficient administration of the functions vested in the coal investigation agency by this act the agency may require by subpœna, issued and signed by the chairman, the attendance of any witness and the production of any book, paper, document, or other evidence at any designated place of hearing, and the taking of a deposition before any designated person having power to administer oaths. In the case of a deposition the testimony shall be reduced to writing by the person taking the deposition, or under his direction, and shall then be subscribed by the deponent. Any member of the coal investigation agency may administer oaths and examine any witness. Any witness summoned or whose deposition is taken under this act shall be paid the same fees and mileage as are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States.

(b) In case of failure to comply with any subpœna or in case of the contumacy of any witness before the coal investigation agency, the agency may invoke the aid of any United States district court. Such court may thereupon order the witness to comply with the requirements of such subpœna and to give evidence touching the matter in question. Any failure to obey such order may be punished by the court as a contempt thereof.

(c) No person shall be excused from so attending and testifying and deposing, or from so producing any book, paper, document, or other evidence on the ground that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, may tend to incriminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture; but no natural person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing as to which, in obedience to a subpœna and under oath, he may so testify; except that no person shall be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying.

SEC. 6. That for the efficient administration of the functions vested in the coal investigation agency by this act, any member, officer, or employee thereof, duly authorized in writing by the agency, shall, at all reasonable times, for the purpose of examination, have access to and right to copy any book, account, record, paper, or correspondence relating to any matter which the coal investigation agency is authorized by this act to investigate.

SEC. 7. That every officer or employee of the United States, whenever requested by the coal investigation agency, shall supply it with any data or information pertaining to any investigation by the agency which may be contained in the records of the office of such officer or employee.

SEC. 8. (a) That no person shall ship or receive from shipment in commerce among the several States or with foreign nations any coal during such time during the existence of the coal investigation agency as such person willfully fails or refuses to make any report required by the coal investigation agency, fails to comply with any subpœna issued by the agency, refuses to testify or answer any lawful inquiry made in any hearing before the agency, or refuses any duly authorized officer or employee of the agency right of access or copy, or hinders, obstructs, or resists him in the exercise of such right. No person shall willfully make in any report required by the coal investigation agency any statement which is false in any material particular.

(b) Any person who violates subdivision (a) shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

(c) In construing and enforcing the provisions of this act the act, omission, or failure of any person acting for or employed by any individual, partnership, corporation, or association, within the scope of his employment or office, shall in every case also be deemed the act, omission, or failure of such individual, partnership, corporation, or association as well as of such person.

SEC. 9. That for the efficient administration of the provisions of this act the coal investigation agency may make such regulations as it deems necessary.

SEC. 10. (a) That the coal investigation agency may appoint, remove, and fix the compensation of such employees, and make such expenditures, including salaries, traveling expenses, per diem rates of allowance in lieu of subsistence, and witness fees, as are necessary for the efficient administration of the functions vested in the agency by this act, and as may be provided for by the Congress from time to time. All the expenses of the coal investigation agency shall be allowed and paid upon the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor, approved by the chairman of the agency.

(b) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $____, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be available until expended by the coal investigation agency, in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, for defraying the expenses of the maintenance and establishment of the agency, including the payment of salaries.

If this bill passes the agency appointed by the President will be able to get facts and information like those possessed by other great nations. It will be able to know what it costs us to produce coal, and what it ought to be sold for. It will be able to apply correct principles in our attempts to aid industry and to solve industrial disputes. This bill has teeth in it, and the profiteer who expects to sell his coal at a profit of $3 or $4 per ton, and at the same time quack about the 45 cents per ton he wants to take away from the miner, is going to oppose its passage.

I expect the railroad owned coal mining concerns and the steel companies engaged in the coal business, and the operator who does not want to see the coal business stabilized and put upon a fair and honest footing to fight the bill. The country is being flooded with propaganda, newspapers are being importuned to say that there is no necessity for such legislation and that we have sufficient agencies already. They know that we have not adequate agencies for gathering information, and they know that they can defy these agencies under existing law. This bill will make the miners' organizations open their books; it will make them show what they spend their money for; it will require them to show clean hands, and at the same time it will delve into the coffers of the fellows that are prosecuting claims against the Government at this hour for coal at $16 per ton sold for the use of the Navy. Every man familiar with fact gathering connected with the Government service to-day realizes the importance and extreme necessity of this kind of legislation, and their voices have been as one in advocacy of the passage of this law.

The editor of the New York Herald wrote a two-column editorial, and probably a great many more which I have not seen, on the subject pointing out the necessity for this kind of relief. The Chicago Tribune, one of the greatest newspapers in the country, contained the following editorial on April 20, 1922:

HOPE FOR COAL SETTLEMENT.

The House Committee on Labor is considering establishment of a commission of 10 members to obtain information upon which a permanent settlement of the problem of the coal industry may be based. That is a practical move in the right direction. Every day brings us nearer to a crisis in the coal strike, with the probability of a makeshift agreement which will mean another strike in a year or two years, with continued mismanagement of coal production and distribution, and consequent unnecessary burdens upon domestic consumers and all industry.

The time to take action to avoid such a makeshift settlement is now, while we still have coal above ground for our needs. The House committee is on the right track. It should hurry its action to put through the necessary bill.

We are inclined to believe the commission which it advocated is too large. It would be better if the ex officio membership for which it provides were reduced to two instead of four, and if the members to be appointed by the President were reduced in number to one representative of the operators and one of the miners, with two for the public. That would provide men with the necessary knowledge and prejudice to ask such searching questions in any inquiry as would bring out all necessary facts, and at the same time would give the public a representation which would assure that the findings be clear and just to all. Also the smaller commission would be less unwieldly, and probably more efficient for that reason.

But those are minor points. What we need is the fact finding agency. The Bland bill provides for it. That bill should be reported out at once. There is nothing before Congress of more immediate importance. It may be amended, but its main provisions should be adopted speedily and some constructive action thus taken to settle the coal troubles once for all before they hurl back our rising tide of prosperity.

The country is becoming aroused to the necessity of putting the coal business on an efficient, practical basis. They are looking to Congress to be helpful in doing so, and they know that they can not do it upon padded facts, upon misstatements, upon prejudicial information, and without a full knowledge of all matters pertaining to the industry. This bill will deny interstate commerce to the coal producer who refuses to give the information requested concerning the coal situation. It will be contested in the courts, and in the line of recent decisions, as well as those that have maintained for a hundred years, the Federal Government will not be denied this authority.

Has the Federal Government the right to go into the States to obtain facts concerning coal for its Navy? Has the Federal Government the right to inquire into the cost of production and the selling price of coal in the States in order to aid it in its constitutional right to levy taxes within the States? The denial of the constitutional power to existing governmental agencies to inquire into the coal production cost has been largely upon the principle that the agency seeking the information was created for the purpose of curing improper practices in interstate commerce. The coal problem is not a local problem. It is not a State problem. It is one of the gravest problems of nationalism, and the commerce and industry of the Nation is threatened. Its interstate commerce depends almost wholly upon coal supply. To admit that the Government of the fathers has no authority to protect itself against misinformation, against misleading reports when it undertakes to solve the problems that belong to it, is to admit the futility of the Federation of the States. [Applause.]

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON].

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to speak out of order for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, following up the argument of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND], who has introduced a resolution providing for the appointment of a commission, I wish to point out the utter hopelessness of the situation. There is nothing more illustrative of the anarchy and chaos of individual ownership of public resources than the coal situation.

We have probably 10,000 mines and some 2,000 owners. They employ 700,000 workers and employ them irregularly. During the last 30 years the average number of days of employment was 214, so that the public was on a strike against the miners more than 90 days each year. When the public is not on a strike against the miners and when the miners are not on a strike, the coal operators and the host of parasites, the middlemen between the worker in the mine and the consumer, are on strike against the whole world.

There is a great deal of talk about the high rates of wages paid to the miners, but, as you all know, the breadwinner is not interested in the rate of wages or percentages or statistics; he is interested in his total earning capacity. Judged by the number of days the miner was actually employed, his earning capacity during his best season was not sufficient to maintain a proper standard of living. The condition is deplorable, and there is no relief in sight. These 2,000 greedy proprietors of the soil of America, without any ethical code to guide them, without any moral law to animate them, without any patriotic purpose—during the crisis of the Nation, during the Great War, they exploited the people and the Government mercilessly—these 2,000 men are in control of an industry upon the proper conduct of which depends the prosperity of the entire country.

It was testified by one of the leaders of the miners of Pennsylvania that their average earnings last year did not exceed the sum of $746.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. If these miners are idle one-third of their time and yet produce adequate quantities for the year, does not that fact argue that a large number of them might well seek employment elsewhere; and if so, why not?

Mr. LONDON. There is not any doubt that a large number of them might seek employment elsewhere, but there are at the present time 5,000,000 men out of employment in other industries, and the remedy that the gentleman offers is a poor remedy, so far as the mining industry is concerned.

To come back to the subject of total earnings as distinguished from wage rates: In the Pittsburgh district, according to Mr. Lewis, the president of the United Mine Workers of America, the average daily wage rate during 1921 was $6.20, but the average earnings for the year were approximately $763 per man. The explanation is rather simple—they only worked 123 days during that year. In Ohio they worked 118 days, in Indiana 159 days, in western Kentucky 130 days, and in West Virginia about 80 days.

The industry is not seasonal, as was claimed by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND], in the sense that its functioning depends on the season of the year. Take, for instance, the building industry or the canning industry. They can be operated only during certain seasons of the year. It is because of the lack of method, the lack of order in the coal industry, that the men are idle during long periods. That it is not a season industry has been testified by experts, who show that between March and October the number of working days is not less than between October and March, so that they can, if they desire, keep their men employed irrespective of the changes of the seasons. Only 12 per cent of the coal produced goes to the individual householder. It is claimed that the demands of the householder, changing with the season of the year, are responsible for the irregularity of employment. This fluctuation can affect only 12 per cent of the coal production.

The whimsical requirements of the domestic consumer can not explain why the miners have been losing one-third of the working time during the last 30 years, and why during the last year the number of working days was on the average 121. Since the armistice the number of hours worked each week did not exceed 30—one of the demands of the miners is the 30-hour week. While the miner was working 121 days he was expected to hold himself ready all the time and to manage to live the full year on the earnings of 121 days.

The saddest part of the situation is that, with the exception of the union's proposition to limit the working week to 30 hours, no suggestion has come from any operator or from any other source for the regularization of employment. The best intentioned employers shrug their shoulders when confronted with the question. As to the others, the presence of a large number of unemployed is just what they desire—it helps to keep the workers down, it furnishes an ever-ready army of strike-breakers, it increases the difficulties of the union, it supplies ready material for spies and gunmen, it cheapens labor. One should not expect the enemy of organized labor to come forward with any real cure for irregular employment.

There is only one influence in the industry which approaches its difficulties from a comprehensive national viewpoint, and that is the United Mine Workers of America.

The union has been the only stabilizing factor in the industry. Contrary to the generally prevailing opinion, it has been averting industrial disputes. If it has failed to obtain for the miner all he is entitled to, it has at least established certain minimum standards. It is responsible for almost all legislation providing for the safety of mine and miner. Through a system of collective agreements with large bodies of operators it has minimized the evil of unrestrained competition between owner and owner at the expense of the worker. It has helped to demonstrate that the law of supply and demand in its application to human beings can be modified by the supply of intelligent and organized workers instead of the brutalized victims of the nonunion fields.

Unable to offer any resistance, not permitted to organize, compelled in spite of all legal prohibitions to buy at the company stores, intimidated, spied upon, the nonunion miner has been reduced to a mere living coal-digging machine.

The coal operators are not nationally organized, or, in any event, they have no national policy. In the central competitive field, embracing the States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and part of Pennsylvania, the coal operators have had collective agreements with the union since 1898, and their agreement has served as a basis for other districts where the union has been recognized.

The operators who formerly participated in the collective agreements in the central competitive fields refuse to renew the contract which expired on the 31st of March of this year. Individual operators and individual associations of operators in some States are offering to enter into collective agreements with the union. But while there is on the surface no national agreement among the coal operators they have all one demand. It is a very insistent one, and that is a demand that wages be reduced.

The impossible conditions prevailing in the nonunion fields, which fortunately for the miner produces but a small portion of the total national output, is the standard which the operators want the union to be guided by. The lowest condition is to become the rule for the entire industry.

In this fight the employers are supported by every open-shop element and by all plutocratic interests, who seek to take advantage of the industrial depression to crush organized labor.

Among the largest owners in the bituminous coal fields is the Steel Trust, whose "benevolent attitude" toward labor is by this time generally known.

The coal operators have successfully resisted every effort of the public to get at the facts in the coal situation. It is still a mystery why the ton of coal which costs $1.75 to produce should cost $15 to the consumer. Without a national outlook, with an eye solely for immediate profit, the coal operator has no regard for either the present or the future interests of the country.

It is hard to see how a nation can intrust its basic industry, the foundation of all other industries, into such hands.

The failure of the administration to exercise sufficient pressure upon the coal magnates to reach an understanding with the miners can not be explained away. Just now the public does not feel the pressure of the strike. The endurance of the miners may prove much stronger than their enemies anticipate. The miners have become accustomed to privation. They realize that under present conditions their union is the only thing that stands between them and slavery. Their earnings are so low that they can not be lower. Between starving while working and starving while striking they may prefer to strike on.

Nor is organized labor in general blind to the situation. The intelligent workers throughout the country instinctively feel that the onslaught upon the miners is intended as a general attack upon the organized workers.

The contest is sure to be a protracted one. The very misery of the miners, their very poverty, their very helplessness, may prove to be the greatest source of their strength.

Can the Government, can Congress, remain indifferent to the struggle? Must we wait until everybody is exhausted? Why not act?

Should the operators fail to reach an agreement with the miners, the Government should declare the mines to be vested with a public interest and place them under its control until a permanent policy is determined upon.

It is apparent that it is unsafe for the people of the United States to permit its greatest natural resource to be wasted, mismanaged, and exploited by a crowd of profit seekers. The irregularity of employment, the overdevelopment of the industry, the high prices forced upon the consumer, the army of useless middlemen, the criminal waste of natural and human resources, the menace to democracy by the prevalence of industrial absolutism in the nonunion fields make it imperative that a permanent solution for the industry be found.

The coal mines should be brought under the control of the Nation.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield now to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG].

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, yesterday morning I received a telegram from my colleague [Mr. KNIGHT] asking me to pair him against the road bill. This I forgot to do, and I make this statement now so that it will appear in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota, that the House recede and concur with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report upon the bill (H. R. 10101) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota calls up a conference report upon the District appropriation bill. The Clerk will report the conference report.

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10101) "making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3, 5, 8, 9, 10, 15, 16, 17, 20, 23, 25, 26, 27, 30, 33, 39, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 51, 58, 65, 68, 70, 71, 73, 75, 77, 80, 82, 83, 84, 85, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 93, 94, 95, 99, 100, 102, 103, 105, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 118, 120, 122, 123, 124, 126, 127, 129, 132, 133, 135, 136, 138, 140, 143, 145, 146, 147, 148, 151, 153, 159, 160, 166, 177, 180, 181, 184, and 188.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 4, 6, 11, 13, 14, 19, 21, 22, 28, 29, 31, 32, 34, 35, 36, 37, 41, 42, 50, 52, 53, 54, 57, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 66, 72, 92, 96, 98, 104, 113, 125, 128, 130, 131, 134, 139, 141, 144, 156, 157, 158, 161, 165, 167, 170, 171, 173, 174, 176, 178, 179, 182, 183, 185, and 189, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$130,070"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$58,120"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 24: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$182,210"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 38: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert: "Southeast Branch Library: For salaries in operating the Southeast Branch Library, $3,500: Provided, That no person shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $1,200 per annum"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 40: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended to read as follows: "Provided, That no money appropriated by this act shall be expended in conducting library stations not now in existence, but this limitation shall not apply to public-school buildings and the Southeast Branch Library"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 55: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 55, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"PROPERTY YARD.

"For alterations and improvements to the old Mott School for use as a property yard, to be immediately available, $2,500: Provided, That a wire fence shall be built around the property."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 56: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 56, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$250,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 64: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 64, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$233,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 67: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 67, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$460,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 69: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 69, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$225,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 74: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 74, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$375,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 76: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 76, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "apartment houses, and large"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 81: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 81, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "2,250"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 97: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 97, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$242,750"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 106: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 106, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "For the erection of an eight-room addition to the Lovejoy School, $125,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 117: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 117, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "forty-two"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 119: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 119, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,694,786.36"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 121: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 121, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Additional amount required for the completion of a station house on the site already acquired at Seventeenth Street and Rhode Island Avenue NE., $20,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 137: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 137, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$18,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 149: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 149, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$75,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 150: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 150, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For repairs to buildings, including the completion of alterations of the old psychopathic hospital building to provide quarters for female nurses and female employees, $10,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 152: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 152, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "superwisor and placing officer, $1,740; investigator and placing officer, $1,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 154: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 154, and agree to the same with an amendent as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$28,140"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 162: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 162, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$5,040"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 168: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 168, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "fifty-five"; and the Senate agree to the same.

C. R. DAVIS,
ROBERT E. EVANS,
BEN JOHNSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the conference report. I might explain that I do this only with a view to an amendment which I understand will be offered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. It has reference to an amendment which is to be offered, as I understand it, in a few minutes, but I wish to reserve points of order to amendment No. 1, which has just been printed.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. But that is not involved in this matter at present.

The SPEAKER. This is the proper time for the gentleman to reserve points of order on the conference report.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I believe the gentleman from Virginia is under a misapprehension in respect to the legislative situation. He does not lose any right whatsoever so far as making a point of order to an amendment is concerned that may be offered in the future. No amendment has as yet been offered.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I will say that I am in the hands of the Speaker as to that. The Speaker thoroughly understands why I reserve the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman say what his point of order is?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I am advised that it is necessary for me to make the reservation.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands it, the gentleman wishes to make a point of order to an amendment that is not in the conference report.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I want to reserve the right to make the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will have that right when the amendment comes up.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I shall very briefly give a summary of the present condition of this bill. The amount of the bill as it passed the House originally was $20,397,779.80. The amount of the bill as it passed the Senate was $23,955,923.80. The net amount added by the Senate was $3,558,144. That is the largest amount in my experience that was ever added to a District of Columbia appropriation bill since I have been a Member of the House. The House conferees in conference with the Senate conferees have receded, as per the conference report, on $655,430. In addition to that, I expect to bring back to the House amounts involved in Senate amendments for action by the House, the adoption of which the House managers will recommend to the House. Where an amendment is placed on by the Senate, even though we concur in it, if it is subject to a point of order, I for one believe in following the rule strictly, and therefore we have brought back a lot of matters which we expect to have the House accept.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman tell the House whether these three new parks to be acquired——

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will get to those parks, sir, in just a few moments.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I will be patient if the gentleman will tell us about them.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will say for the gentleman's benefit now that we have not agreed upon the parks.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I congratulate the committee.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. But that is not part of our conference report. I am simply now talking about the conference report proper. The following amounts we expect to offer and will offer and recommend that the House adopt the same, amendments by the Senate which we could not consistently under the rules agree to and put into the general conference report: Playgrounds, amounting to $25,000; school playgrounds equipment, $2,400; Armstrong School, $50,000; Armstrong School addition, $100,000; Home for Feeble-minded, $100,000; Library for the Blind, $5,000; Columbia Polytechnic Institute, $1,500; water supply, $1,500,000.

I will say that the conferees have agreed upon these things, but under the rules I deemed it my duty to bring them back here and ask the House, if it wants to do so, to vote for them. So that makes a total of $2,436,830 that the House had virtually receded from; amendments were put upon it by the Senate, and the Senate thus far receded from $748,814. I do not know whether we have been liberal or not, but I think we have. If we accept this $1,781,400, which I believe the House will, then the Senate will recede upon some small matters here, playgrounds, night schools, home for feeble-minded, library for the blind, amounting to $67,500, or a total recession of $816,314, while the House has already virtually receded on $2,436,830. Now, we have two items here the conferees have absolutely disagreed on. One of those is tourist camp, Potomac Park, $5,000, and the other is the item just spoken of by the gentleman from Illinois, jurisdiction over park areas, $300,000. There is an absolute disagreement on that. For the benefit of gentlemen I will say it is my understanding that while there is a million and some thousand dollars sought by the Senate amendment for those parks, yet it is worded so that only $300,000 is to be appropriated now in order to give the Superintendent of the Public Buildings and Grounds jurisdiction over them for park purposes. That is why the amount here is only $300,000. These items I have already suggested, the items we have produced and bring before the House and ask the House consent to them; but the first thing is to agree, if you will, upon what is called the conference report proper, the matters I have now read you. Does any gentleman wish to ask any question or desire to make a few remarks? I am perfectly willing he should; if not, I shall move the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. Was any amendment in controversy involving the increase of appropriations for the improvement of streets of the District?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. There has been, and we have agreed upon it fully, a compromise with the Senate committee in all respects on streets.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the additional amount agreed upon for street improvements?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Quite a sum.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think there is great need for some additional appropriation to improve the streets of the District, and that is why I make the inquiry.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. We have added $119,900 besides what it is thought proper for paving—in fact, we have added Ingomar Street to Chevy Chase Circle, $4,500—I can give the numbers.

Mr. STAFFORD. I just wish to have the general amount.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Next, $37,000, $45,000, $17,200; in all this new addition amounts to $119,900. We gave everything they asked in the Senate except one street.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask if this is the proper time to offer an amendment to 187?

The SPEAKER. That will come later.

Mr. LANHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will.

Mr. LANHAM. Is there anything in this report that places a restriction upon the work to be done in the night schools?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Not in the report; but I shall offer an amendment. That is one of the items we brought back and will be voted upon after we adopt the regular conference report.

Mr. LANHAM. That will be brought before the House?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That will be brought before the House.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman from Minnesota yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. The gentleman mentions some item for improved water supply. Is that one of the items that is going to be brought back?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes, sir. That is a matter on which we are going to spend $8,700,000, and we have appropriated in this bill, if the House will consent to it, which I think it will, $1,500,000, besides an authorization for about another $1,500,000, in addition to the other $200,000 which they have already. In fact, we have made it perfectly satisfactory, I think, on the water proposition for the present. Of course, we in the House are just as much interested in a good water supply for this District as any of the conferees of the Senate.

Mr. DENISON. The Senate put it in the bill.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Because we could not. And we have modified the language a little bit and allowed everything they wanted.

Mr. DENISON. Is the gentleman from Minnesota going to make a statement about it in detail?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. There will be a full statement concerning it, probably by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. EVANS], who has made a great study of the proposition.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment.

The Clerk proceeded to read amendment No. 1.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, may I make a suggestion to my friend from Minnesota?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes, sir.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. As I understand, the gentleman is now about to offer the amendment that I referred to awhile ago. Therefore, I would like to take the liberty of making this suggestion to him. And that is that that amendment, which is one of the most important matters to be considered, perhaps the most important matter from the point of view of the people of the District of Columbia, be laid aside until further amendments, that are less in dispute, are taken up. We have a thin House here now. There are a good many matters that I understand are to be considered in addition to this particular matter, and in view of the fact that the amendment has not been printed, and no real opportunity given for anybody to scrutinize it, I think the suggestion is a reasonable one.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I think that amendment has been printed two or three days.

Mr. DENISON. I will state that I have been trying for an hour to get one, but could not.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. They have been here all the time.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I will inform the gentleman that several Members are in the same situation as the gentleman who has just said that he has been trying to get a copy of the amendment. They have been unable to do so. Here is an amendment that proposes to change in a material way the entire fiscal system of the District. It seems to me that there is no reason why it should not be laid over without prejudice.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. If it was a matter on the merits of the amendment, I would not object. But now I demand the regular order, so that the point of order will be made if it is going to be made, and then we will know whether or not we want to go any further.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. There is great difficulty in anybody discussing a point of order who has not read the amendment.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. If the gentleman had read the papers he would have found out all about it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The impression the papers have left us as to the amendment that is now proposed is that it is included in the conference report.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me a matter of importance, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Let us see first.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I reserve it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I would like to know what the gentleman's point is. The amendment has not been read yet.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] asks unanimous consent that this amendment be taken up after the other amendments are considered. If you take it up for one purpose, you take it up for all.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I insist on the regular order in this respect. I am willing to pass it over if I know what the gentleman's point of order consists of. The amendment has not been read yet.

The SPEAKER. As soon as the amendment is read it is up for consideration. Then it will be too late to let it go over.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me it could be reported, the point of order reserved, and he could agree to its going over.

The SPEAKER. It will make the trouble of reading it again later. The Chair will suggest, if he understands the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS], that perhaps it might be arranged that the amendment should be taken up with a point of order pending, and if the point of order should be overruled then on its merits it should go over. There is no need of a large attendance to consider the point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Let me modify my suggestion. Let this amendment be laid over until to-morrow morning, to be taken up then as soon as the House meets. It is now 10 minutes after 3 o'clock, and probably the House will adjourn at 5 o'clock or near that hour, and it seems to me it is only fair that opportunity should be given gentlemen who wish to discuss the point of order to examine this question. I am not an obstructionist. I have never made the point of no quorum or tried to delay business in any way at all, and I think that my friend ought to accede to my suggestion.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will say that I want the point of order determined, if you are going to make one, before I go further on these various amendments.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and forty-seven Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to dispense with further proceedings under the call. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 1: Strike out lines 3 to 9, inclusive, on page 1, and lines 1 to 12, inclusive, on page 2, reading as follows:

"That 40 per cent of the following sums, respectively, is appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and 60 per cent out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, only, namely:

"If the estimated net revenues of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, are not sufficient to meet the proportion of the appropriations for that fiscal year charged against such revenues by this and all other acts, or which may be estimated to be charged against such revenues by acts that may be approved during such fiscal year, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall increase the rates of taxation on real estate and tangible personal property sufficiently to make up the difference: Provided, however, That such rates of taxation shall in no event be less than 1½ per cent nor more than 2 per cent."

And insert:

"That the general expenses of the District of Columbia shall be chargeable to and paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

"For the fiscal year 1923 and annually thereafter the rate of taxation in the District of Columbia shall be fair and reasonable, and the revenues derived from this source shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous revenue.

"Until otherwise provided by law the rate of taxation in the District of Columbia on tangible personal property and real estate shall be $1.75 per hundred, and other taxes shall be as now provided.

"The appropriation of an amount equal to the unexpended or unappropriated surpluses of the District revenue shown by the reports of the commissioners to have been heretofore accumulated and deposited in the Treasury of the United States in addition to the estimates submitted for the next fiscal year is hereby authorized, and hereafter there shall be no limit upon the amount of the estimates to be submitted to Congress to meet the annual needs of the District, any law to the contrary notwithstanding.

"In fixing the value of improvements on any lot or tract of real estate for the purpose of taxation the first $2,000 of value thereof shall be exempt, and shall not be taken into consideration in fixing such value."

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota moves to recede from the disagreement of the House to the Senate amendment and concur with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"That, annually, from and after July 1, 1922, 60 per cent of such expenses of the District of Columbia as Congress may appropriate for shall be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia derived from taxation and privileges, and the remaining 40 per cent by the United States, excepting such items of expense as Congress may direct shall be paid on another basis; and that in order that the District of Columbia may be able annually to comply with the provisions hereof, and also in order that the said District may be put upon a cash basis as to payment of expenses, there hereby is levied for each of the fiscal years ending June 30, 1923, 1924, 1925, 1926, and 1927, a tax at such rate on the full value, and no less, of all real estate and tangible personal property subject to taxation in the District of Columbia as will, when added to the revenues derived from privileges and from the tax on franchises, corporations, and public utilities, as fixed by law, and also from the tax, which hereby is levied, on such intangible personal property as is subject to taxation in the District of Columbia, at the rate of five-tenths of 1 per cent on the full market value thereof, produce money enough to pay such annual expenses as may be imposed on the District of Columbia by Congress, and in addition to such annual expenses a surplus fund sufficient to enable the District of Columbia to get upon a cash-paying basis by the end of the fiscal year 1927; and that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia hereby are empowered and directed to ascertain, determine, and fix such rate of taxation as will, when applied to the aforesaid property in accordance with the levies and values hereinbefore mentioned, produce the said sums of money; and that until July 1, 1927, the Treasury Department may continue to make advancements toward the payment of the expenses of the District of Columbia as has been done during preceding years, but after June 30, 1927, it shall be unlawful for any money to be so advanced or for any money whatever to be paid out of the Treasury for District purposes, unless the District, at the time of such payment, has to its credit in the Treasury money enough to pay the full per cent required of it; and that for the purpose of defraying such expenses of the District of Columbia as Congress may from time to time appropriate for, there hereby is levied for each and every fiscal year succeeding that ending June 30, 1927, a tax at such rate on the aforesaid property subject to taxation in the District (the rate fixed herein on intangible personal property not to be made less but which may be increased by the commissioners in their discretion) as will, when added to the other taxes and revenues of the District, produce money enough to enable the District to pay promptly and in full all sums directed by Congress to be paid by the District, and for which appropriation has been duly made; and that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia hereby are empowered and directed to ascertain, determine, and fix annually such rate of taxation as will, when applied as aforesaid, produce the money needed to defray the share of the expenses of the District during the year for which the rate is fixed; and that the Commissioners of the District shall, in accordance with existing law, cause all such taxes and revenues to be promptly collected and, when collected, to be daily deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the District for the purposes herein set out; and that on July 1, 1922, the Treasury Department shall open, and thereafter accurately keep, an account showing all receipts and disbursements relative to the revenues and expenditures of the District of Columbia, and shall also show the sources of the revenue, the purpose of expenditure, and the appropriation under which the expenditure is made; and that from and after June 30, 1922, any and all revenue derived from property not owned wholly or in part by the District of Columbia, as between the United States and the District of Columbia, shall be the property of the United States; and that after June 30, 1922, where the United States is the owner of ground or the holder thereof in trust for the public, upon which improvements have been made at the joint expense of the United States and the District of Columbia, the revenues therefrom shall first be used to pay the United States 3 per cent of the full value of the ground as a ground rent, and the remainder shall be divided between them in the same proportion that each contributed to said improvements, and for such purposes the assessor for the District of Columbia shall fix the full value of the ground after he has first made oath that he will fairly and impartially appraise the same; and that after June 30, 1922, any revenue derived from any activity or source whatever, including motor-vehicle licenses, not otherwise herein disposed of, which activity or source of revenue is appropriated for by both the United States and the District of Columbia, shall be divided between the two in the same proportion that each has contributed thereto; and that if, for any fiscal year after June 30, 1927, the District of Columbia should raise and deposit in the Treasury to its credit, as herein provided, more money derived from taxation, privileges, and other sources authorized herein than may be necessary for the purposes herein set out, such excess shall be available the succeeding year, in the discretion of the commissioners, either for the purpose of meeting the expense chargeable to the District of Columbia and/or for the further purpose of enabling the commissioners to fix a lower rate of taxation for the year following the one in which said excess accrued than they might otherwise be able to do; and that after June 30, 1922, the agencies through which the District of Columbia collects its revenues derived from taxation shall also collect for the United States any revenues which by this act become the sole property of the United States, and said revenues shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States as 'Miscellaneous receipts,' but the revenues from the property known as Center Market shall not be so collected; and that hereafter the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall not be restricted in submitting to the Bureau of the Budget their estimates of the needs of the District, but they shall, as near as may be, bring them within the probable aggregate of the fixed proportionate appropriations to be paid by the United States and the District of Columbia.

"That all acts or parts of acts in conflict with any provision of this act are hereby repealed to the extent of such conflict but no further.

"That in order to defray the expenses of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, 40 per cent of each of the following sums, except those herein directed to be paid otherwise, hereby is appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and all the remainder out of the combined revenues of the District of Columbia and the advances from the Federal Treasury herein permitted, namely."

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against the amendment just reported. The point of order is directed against the entire amendment and every part of it. I base the point of order on the ground, first, that if the amendment should be adopted, it will be placing legislation upon an appropriation bill; and, second, that the amendment is not germane; that it is not germane to the Senate amendment which it proposes to amend.

Mr. Speaker, I regret that some one more familiar with parliamentary practice has not made the point of order, and I regret also that the matter has been brought up unexpectedly, so that I am not able to develop more fully the views which I entertain.

Now, on the question of germaneness, it seems to be well settled that two subjects are not necessarily germane to each other because they are related, and in the light of that principle it seems to me that the second contention is certainly well founded.

The Senate amendment is very simple in character. So far as the matter we are now considering is concerned, I think I may say that it is limited to provisions that the general expenses of the District shall be paid out of the Treasury; that taxes in the District shall be fair and reasonable, and that certain tax rates shall prevail until otherwise provided. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] goes very far beyond that, and really creates for the District a new fiscal system in practically all of the features of a fiscal system.

We know what the law is at the present time. Let us see how the law is changed and proposed to be changed by this amendment. I shall not attempt to enumerate all of the changes that the amendment contemplates. For example, at this time the tax on intangibles I believe is three-tenths of 1 per cent. This amendment makes it one-half of 1 per cent. This amendment looks to a new division between the Government and the District, varying from the present law, of revenues derived from certain sources. This amendment contains a provision which, so far as I know, is completely new, with respect to the payment of ground rents to the Government by the District of Columbia. At present the law provides that taxation shall be based upon two-thirds of the value of real estate. This amendment provides that the basis hereafter shall be the full market value.

Now, those are simply examples of the changes in the law that are suggested. They are not only changes in existing law and therefore unauthorized, but in addition, it seems to me, unless the theory of germaneness can be stretched to an indefinite limit, they violate the requirement as to germaneness. There is not, to illustrate, anything in the ground-rent provision that relates to the general expenses to be paid out of the Treasury, or to the fairness and reasonableness of taxes, or that certain rates shall obtain unless otherwise provided. The same remark, I think, can be made with respect to the contemplated division of revenues derived from certain sources. The same thing can be said relative to the valuation which is to be used as the basis of assessment. As to the tax on intangibles, so far as germaneness is concerned, I might not make a similar observation, but it is certainly new legislation.

But, Mr. Speaker, the most important proposition contained in this amendment is that in addition to all taxes necessary to meet general expenses, and independent of the obligation that all taxes shall be fair and reasonable, and also quite independent of the provision that certain rates shall be in effect until they are superseded by other rates, is a very remarkable proposition, which is not only new legislation, but, as it seems to me, is entirely foreign to the Senate amendment. General expenses may be paid without reference to the proposition that I am about to allude to; without reference to that proposition taxes may be fair and reasonable, and without reference to that proposition assessed valuation of real estate is to be the full market value. This proposition is what? Nakedly stated, it is a proposition that for five fiscal years, beginning in 1923 and ending in 1927, there shall be paid to the Federal Treasury annually by the District of Columbia what will amount to approximately $3,000,000, or a total of approximately $15,000,000. The reason assigned for putting that proposition in the amendment is that the District of Columbia may "get upon a cash-paying basis by the end of the fiscal year 1927." That has no relation to providing for and paying general expenses, which is in the Senate amendment, nor does it relate to the other features of the Senate amendment. Being new legislation and not germane to the Senate amendment, I do not see upon what ground it can be justified. The idea of its proponents is that now the District of Columbia receives from the Government of the United States advances, for the reason that the tax bills in the District are not paid until May of the fiscal year, which is toward the close of the fiscal year, and that is wrong. I say that by way of explanation. But whether the proposition meets with our approval or disapproval on its merits, the cold fact stands out that something never in the mind of the Senate is proposed here, that something is proposed which is not designed to take care of any of the objects that the Senate had in mind when it legislated or attempted to legislate.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. In a minute. Now how can that be justified? It is, of course, a departure from the present law. The statute approved February 14, 1904, is the statute that I alluded to a moment ago, when I said that the taxpayers of the District of Columbia are permitted to pay their taxes as late as May of the fiscal year. That law is ignored. It is wiped out. Then that being done, the taxpayers of the District are told that in addition to paying any fund necessary to cover general expenses or any fund derived from the imposition of fair and reasonable taxes, they must plus that by the payment of nearly $3,000,000 a year simply for the purpose of placing the District of Columbia in the future upon a certain basis. Why, Mr. Speaker, if that can be done, where is the line to be drawn? What is to prevent compelling the people of the District to pay $5,000,000 a year or $10,000,000 a year or $20,000,000 a year for five years to get at any remote ultimate result of any character? That would be the exercise of a destructive power not in conformity to the rules but in defiance of the rules.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have said this much in order to indicate my views to my friend, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS], who is so extremely anxious that his amendment shall be forthwith disposed of—an amendment he never dreamed of offering when this bill was originally before the House, and that did not enter into the consideration of this bill in the Senate. Having made this brief statement, and realizing that the burden is upon the proponents of the amendment to show that it is within the rules under which we operate, I respectfully submit that this is a case of jurisdiction being exceeded and that the point of order should be sustained.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS]?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I do.

Mr. HICKS. I think the gentleman, in his last sentence, has covered the point that I wished to make. I wished to ask him, Would not an additional point of order lie in that the conferees had exceeded their jurisdiction, in that this amendment was not in dispute between the conferees?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I think what I first said included that—by implication, at least.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I wish to ask the gentleman whether the point which he has raised covers this question, that on page 5 of the amendment it is proposed that the tax-collecting agency of the District of Columbia shall also hereafter collect for the United States any revenues which by the act become the sole property of the United States—in other words, creating a new agency for the collection of taxes for the United States themselves?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. That is another objectionable feature. I said at the outset that I desired to call attention to only a few of the specific provisions in this amendment that seemed to me to be open to objection. It reeks with objectionable provisions.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, it is the opinion not only of the conferees upon the part of the House but of the conferees upon the part of the Senate that the language of this bill is in strict compliance with the rules of the House. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] in stating his point of order has emphasized two points—first, that this amendment is legislation upon an appropriation bill, and, next, that the conferees have exceeded their authority. I take it for granted that the Speaker, without argument, will dismiss the first of these contentions for the reason that we are back before the House for the purpose of legislating on an appropriation bill and for no other purpose. The question next arises, Have the conferees exceeded their authority?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The Senate has acted upon this conference report, as I understand it?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I so understand.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Has the Senate adopted this particular amendment that is proposed by the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It is impossible under the rules for the Senate to consider this proposition until after the House has sent it to them. It has to be approved by the House before it can go to the Senate.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Oh, not at all.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the Senate has acted on the conference report and has further insisted on its amendment.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It has further insisted?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It has further insisted on its amendment. We now are considering an amendment to the Senate amendment. I invite the attention of the Chair to line 16 of page 2 of the bill, which reads as follows:

For the fiscal year 1923 and annually thereafter the rate of taxation in the District of Columbia shall be fair and reasonable.

I ask the Chair if that states a rate of taxation? What tax that is merely fair and reasonable can be levied or collected under that language? When the tax collector goes to the holder of property whose property has been given in for taxation and says, I come to you for "a fair and reasonable tax" on your property, the owner, if willing to pay any tax, might he not under that language fix the rate for himself; and then when the tax collector would go to another taxpayer and say to him, I have come to collect "a fair and reasonable tax," may not that taxpayer say that still another rate is "fair and reasonable"? Out of a hundred thousand taxpayers in the District of Columbia under that language there could be as many different rates of taxation. Consequently there must be a fixed rate, and that rate, under this language, when fixed must be within the range of being fair and reasonable. How does this amendment undertake to arrive at a rate that is "fair and reasonable"? The amendment lays down a rule for the purpose of arriving at a rate that is "fair and reasonable." First, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall estimate and Congress shall appropriate for their needs, and then a "fair and reasonable" rate is to be fixed by the commissioners that will produce that amount.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will.

Mr. DENISON. The Senate amendment provides for a rate that is fair and reasonable, and that means fair and reasonable under existing law. The conferees have changed that by fixing a rate under a changed law.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That is exactly what is proposed to be done.

Mr. DENISON. But that is not contemplated in the Senate amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It is not to be presumed that the Senate amendment would not say the rate should in the future be fair and reasonable if the present rate already is fair and reasonable. Therefore, the Senate made a change of rates permissible.

Mr. DENISON. The question of what a fair and reasonable rate would be would depend on the purpose for which the tax is to be collected. The Senate amendment contemplated a fair and reasonable rate for the purpose authorized under the present existing law. The conference agreement would be a rate for an entirely different purpose, changing the fiscal system in the District and putting it on a cash basis. If the gentleman from Kentucky is right, they could have included in this a proposition to immediately retire all the bonds of the District.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. They are already retired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I can not yield further to the gentleman for an argument, but if he wishes to ask any questions I shall be glad to answer them.

The gentleman from Illinois has taken a fallacious position. He contends that we can not change the law; that this amendment can not be adopted by the House because it is in conflict with the present law. I contend that we are here for the purpose of changing existing law; otherwise this amendment would not have been offered as it is. When this bill was before the House the House could not put the amendment on it, because it was then contrary to the rules of the House; but the Senate can and has put on an amendment in conflict with the rules of the House; and now that that amendment is properly before the House the House is free to perfect it by amendment. That is just what is being undertaken, and to do so is now within the rules of the House, but was not before.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will.

Mr. MAPES. Of course, the Senate amendment proposes to change existing law in that it takes away the restrictions of the commissioners in making the estimates and exempts from taxation improvements on real estate to the extent of $2,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; the Senate amendment is a change of existing law. Now, the House conferees have come back with an amendment to the Senate amendment, and all that is necessary is that the amendments shall be germane to the Senate amendments. As I just said, we are now seeking to amend the Senate amendments, one of which reads as follows:

That for the fiscal year 1923 and annually thereafter the rate of taxation in the District of Columbia shall be fair and reasonable.

As I was saying when interrupted, under this language the commissioners are to send in their estimates, and those estimates when they come from the Budget to the committee, and the committee brings in a bill and Congress then fixes the amount of the expenditure, to provide for a rate which merely shall be "fair and reasonable" accomplishes nothing unless provision also be made to have a fixed rate. A rate which is fair one year might be unfair the next; but if a "fair and reasonable rate" of taxation be actually fixed by the commissioners, as the amendment provides, so as to raise the amount Congress appropriates for, then you have a rate that can be both fixed and fair.

While I think of it, the gentleman from Virginia has just stated that this amendment raises the taxable value from two-thirds to three-thirds. He says that the law is that real estate and tangible personal property shall be taxed only on two-thirds of its true value. I challenge that statement. There is no need to bring a lot of books here. The Speaker's parliamentarian can turn to the law of 1902, I believe it is, and find that that law says that property shall not be valued for taxation at "less than two-thirds." The assessor now has the right to value property at three-thirds; and consequently this amendment does not change existing law in that respect. The amendment says that it shall be valued at three-thirds—just exactly what the assessor of the District may do now without changing the law. The amendment is merely directory as to present law.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman contend that in a disagreement between the two Houses upon a matter purporting to fix the specific rate of taxation it is germane to provide that the Commissioners of the District shall not be restricted in submitting estimates of the needs of the District, but they shall as near as may be bring them within the probable aggregate of the fixed proportionate appropriation to be paid by the United States in the District of Columbia?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do so contend when——

Mr. WALSH. What has that to do with the tax rate of the District?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I can tell the gentleman what the latter has to do with being germane, but I can not tell him what it has to do with the tax rate of the District. Here is what the Senate amendment says:

The appropriation of an amount equal to the unexpended or unappropriated surpluses of the District revenue shown by the reports of the commissioners to have been heretofore accumulated and deposited in the Treasury of the United States in addition to the estimates submitted for the next fiscal year is hereby authorized, and hereafter there shall be no limit upon the amount of the estimates to be submitted to Congress to meet the annual needs of the District, any law to the contrary notwithstanding.

The exact language of the Senate amendment relating to the estimates is not used in the pending amendment, but no language is used in this amendment which is not in thorough accord with that provision put on by the Senate.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. Do I understand the gentleman to take the position that the two propositions are the same, viz, the present law that the property shall be valued at not less than two-thirds of its value for purposes of taxation, and the proposition now before the House that it shall be valued at its complete value?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; you correctly understand me.

Mr. DENISON. Is not that a change of law?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It may or may not be a change of law. The question is seemingly close; but no matter whether it is or not, the original law was that property should be assessed for taxation at its real value; but they got to assessing property so low here that Congress put on an amendment to an appropriation bill saying that thereafter it should not be assessed at less than two-thirds of its value, thereby not repealing the law that it should be assessed at its full value. That was done to jack up the assessor so that he would not continue to value it below two-thirds. The assessor has construed wrongfully that language to mean that he can not assess it "above" two-thirds, and he has so testified before the Committee on the District of Columbia. He really contended that the law which said that property for taxation should not be valued at "less" than two-thirds meant that it should not be valued "more" than two-thirds; but that construction can not be accepted by anybody who will stop to think. So that this proposition here, that property shall be valued at three-thirds, is not in conflict with the law which says that the assessors shall not assess it below two-thirds.

In addition to that, what matters it to the taxpayers when the commissioners are to levy a rate of taxation for, say, raising $20,000,000, whether that tax rate applies to the two-thirds valuation or to the three-thirds? If the assessor applies it to the two-thirds, then the rate must be larger in order to raise $20,000,000 than if the tax rate be applied to the three-thirds. In the latter case the rate would necessarily be smaller in order to raise the $20,000,000. I insist that there is no conflict between the law as it now stands and the provision in the pending amendment.

But when you speak of a rate of taxation that shall be "fair and reasonable," you can not possibly separate that from a value. A fair and reasonable rate and a value are positively inseparable propositions if a revenue is to be derived—so inseparable that you can not consider one without at the same time considering the other. If you are to levy a fair rate of tax upon anything, God knows there must be a value fixed upon which to levy it. Value can not be left untouched.

Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted to repeat, the law at present is not that property for assessment shall be assessed at two-thirds of its value, but it is as plain as the nose on a man's face that it shall not be assessed at less than that. If the law be, and it is, that the assessors may go to that, the true value, why should not this directory provision be in full compliance with and be germane to a proposition to levy a fair and reasonable rate on a value not disturbed by the proposed amendment?

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. I want to ask the gentleman a question which I think will be pertinent to the point of order. The present law provides for the payment of taxes in the District at a certain time during the year, and there is no existing law providing for putting the District of Columbia on a cash basis, is there?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The law fixes the time when taxes shall be paid. But let me tell the gentleman something about that. I doubt not that that date was fixed advisedly by some smart draftsman in order that the District of Columbia might stand overdrawn in the Treasury of the United States during 11 months out of every 12.

Mr. DENISON. Regardless of the purpose for which it has been fixed, it is a fact that it has been fixed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. And this amendment does not propose to change it.

Mr. DENISON. Does not this amendment propose to put the District on a cash basis?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Find in this amendment, if you can, anything which changes the date when taxes shall be paid. There is not a word or a letter in it which says when the taxes shall be paid. That law is left to stand just as it is.

Mr. DENISON. Does not the gentleman think it is changing existing law to provide for collecting enough taxes over a series of years, more than are needed for current needs, in order to put the District on a cash basis?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The gentleman talks about putting the District on such a basis as will enable it to pay current expenses. The District is not to-day, nor has it been any other day in the past, except a few days in each year, able to pay current expenses. Call up the auditor for the District of Columbia at this moment and ask him to tell you how many million dollars the District is overdrawn this hour in the Treasury.

Mr. DENISON. Is not the provision in this amendment for putting the District on a cash basis, through a series of years, until 1927, either adopting a new law or changing existing law?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It is doing neither——

Mr. DENISON. There is where I think I shall have to differ with the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois has just propounded a question as to whether or not collecting sufficient taxes to meet the District of Columbia's needs is not changing existing law. The existing law is that the District of Columbia shall collect money enough to pay her expenses. Every municipality in the world except this collects this year that with which it shall pay current expenses during next year; but the District of Columbia collects nothing this year with which to pay her expenses next year. During the last month of the fiscal year the District of Columbia collects money enough not to pay current expenses but to pay past expenses, those that have been paid out of the Federal Treasury by making overdrafts on the Federal Treasury, for which no interest is paid to the Federal Government by the District of Columbia on account of those overdrafts.

It has been suggested that because this amendment changes the rate of taxation on intangible personal property that that change makes this amendment subject to a point of order; and there I believe I can interpose the suggestion that if this amendment repealed all taxes on intangible personal property there would have been no serious opposition to this bill. In the organic act of 1878 a tax of $1.50 was placed on intangible personal property, such as stocks, bonds, and mortgages. After some years had run the lobby here got the law changed so that intangible personal property was relieved entirely from all taxation. Then, a few years ago, Congress put upon intangible personal property a tax of 4 mills. In a little while, even before the tax had been collected under that law, the lobby, beating at these doors all the while, got that reduced to 3 mills. The conferees, by the proposed amendment, have raised that tax from 3 mills to 5 mills. That is the very proposition that has raised so much opposition against this amendment. Now, the question arose, Is it germane by this amendment to increase the tax on intangible personal property? Again resort is had to the language used by the Senate, that the tax shall be fair and reasonable, notwithstanding that in lines 23 and 24 we find that the Senate amendment says "and other taxes shall be as now provided." There we have the Senate dealing with other taxes than those on real estate, and so forth. The Senate by that amendment opened up the question as to all other taxes. If the Senate had said nothing about "other taxes," then this amendment might not be germane to those particular taxes; but they have opened up the question by saying that "other taxes" shall be the same, and the conferees by the pending amendment say that they shall not be the same.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. WINGO. I want to see if I follow the gentleman, because I have not read the Senate amendment. The Senate amendment undertook to revise and change both the assessment and the taxing rate, and is it the gentleman's contention that they, having uncovered the whole subject, your proposal to increase from the 3 to 5 mills is germane?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That is it. The Senate by opening up the subject of "other taxes" justifies the House under its rules to treat of "other taxes." Mr. Speaker, the Senate by using the language that taxation shall be "fair and reasonable" threw the doors wide open as to tax on real estate and tangible property values, and the amendment as to "other taxes" does the same thing as to "other taxes." There is no way of getting away from that. I repeat, if I may, that when they say by that language that "other taxes" shall remain the same, they go into the subject; they throw wide open the doors to an amendment to their language; and the pending amendment says, and says germanely, that "other taxes" shall not be the same. The Senate asserts the affirmative. This amendment merely substitutes the negative for that affirmative. The Senate in asserting the affirmative adhere to 3 mills. This amendment negatives that and says the rate shall not be the same, but that it shall be 5 mills.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in lines 21, 22, 23, and 24, page 2, we find the following:

Until otherwise provided by law, the rate of taxation in the District of Columbia on tangible personal property and real estate shall be $1.75 a hundred, and other taxes shall be as now provided.

I have just addressed myself to the last few words of that sentence, which relate to intangible personal property.

I wish now to address myself to the language which says that the rate until otherwise ordered shall be $1.75 a hundred. I ask the Speaker to read it carefully. Who says that by that language the $1.75 is not to be the rate upon three-thirds? That language says that until otherwise provided by law the rate of taxation in the District of Columbia on tangible personal property and real estate shall be $1.75 per hundred, not $1.75 on two-thirds of a hundred. Therefore, when the pending amendment says that the property shall be listed for taxation at three-thirds of its value then the amendment is in thorough accord and in keeping with the declaration upon the part of the Senate, which says the rate shall be until otherwise ordered by Congress $1.75 on a hundred—not $1.75 on two-thirds of a hundred.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. Of course, when this provision says $1.75 per hundred, that means per hundred under existing law, and existing law provides for an assessed valuation as distinguished from actual valuation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Why of existing law? Where is it?

Mr. DENISON. Does not the present law provide for an assessed valuation of two-thirds its value or, at least, not less than two-thirds of its value?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; in order to jack the assessor up, it says he shall assess property at not less than two-thirds of its value; bear in mind, please, the Senate amendment now says that the tax rate shall be $1.75 on a hundred, and not on two-thirds of a hundred. The language of the Senate amendment is plain on this proposition.

Mr. DENISON. It says on a hundred, and that means a hundred of assessed valuation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Then why did they put in any amendment at all?

Mr. DENISON. That is the law of every State, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. We are not dealing with the laws of States. We are dealing with the language the Senate has sent over and which we are proposing to embody in a fitting place in the proposed amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would state that he thinks it unnecessary for the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] to pursue his inquiry.

Mr. DENISON. I was wanting to set the gentleman from Kentucky right, if I could, on that proposition.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, when the Senate opens up the proposition for a tax upon property to meet its requirements then this House has a perfect right to deal with both rates and values, because without both neither is worth while. What are the expenses of the District? The expenses of the District to be paid by tax levy upon property consist not merely in the paying of past debts, but the expenses of the District must be paid by a tax levied, according to every law that has been written upon the subject, to meet its current expenses, and that law will be found in the organic act—that the tax is for the purpose of meeting current expenses. Current expenses are not alone those which they have not paid—and to-day they stand with millions of dollars of their debts unpaid—but it is to meet their expenses as they incur them.

Knowing, Mr. Speaker, that others desire to follow me to demonstrate other points than the ones upon which I have touched, I shall conclude for the present.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make one suggestion. I do not know whether the Speaker has had an opportunity to examine this carefully or not, but I think we all admit that the question is a close one, and I am quite sure the Speaker will give it the careful consideration he always gives to propositions that come before him.

Mr. Speaker, it is very easy to determine what are the matters of difference between the House and the Senate. We only have to examine one paragraph on page 1, and the paragraph on page 2 that connects with it, and then to examine a very short substitute that was adopted by the Senate. That constitutes, Mr. Speaker, the matter in dispute between the House and the Senate. I think we all might admit everything that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] has said and still be in very serious doubt as to whether or not this did not contain matter that was not in dispute between the House and the Senate. And when the Speaker examines this matter, I call his attention to the language on page 4 of the amendment, commencing on line 5. The language is:

And that from and after June 30, 1922, any and all revenues derived from property not owned wholly or in part by the District of Columbia, as between the United States and the District of Columbia, shall be the property of the United States.

There is certainly a determination, a legislative determination, which is by the terms of this amendment declared to be property of the United States. It occurs to me that that provision could not by any possibility be considered as a matter that is in dispute between the House and the Senate.

And that is not all. Following that is found this language:

And that after June 30, 1922, where the United States is the owner of ground or the holder thereof in trust for the public, upon which improvements have been made at the joint expense of the United States and the District of Columbia, the revenues therefrom shall first be used to pay the United States 3 per centum of the full value of the ground as a ground rent, and the remainder shall be divided between them.

And so forth. In other words, this is a provision, not for revenues and not for taxes but for the disposition of rentals of property that might have belonged to the United States. Certainly that can not be considered as a tax or revenue question. Certainly that is not a matter that was in dispute between the Senate and the House. Then I want to——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I rose for the purpose of interrupting the gentleman relative to the first subsection of the amendment, and that is that when the District of Columbia owns neither wholly nor in part, as between itself and the United States, any property, that the revenues derived therefrom should go into the Federal Treasury.

Now, I contend, Mr. Speaker, that that does not change existing law. It changes existing practice. When the Government of the United States owns a piece of property and the District of Columbia wrongfully appropriates revenues from it, as in many instances it has done, that is a diversion of Federal money to District purposes, and I contend that this is not a change of law but it is to stop a practice.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, that really has nothing to do with the proposition involved. I am only calling the attention of the Speaker to this proposition, that to determine by a legislative enactment the ownership of property is not a matter that was in dispute between the House and the Senate, and if it is not such a matter, then it can not be brought in in this way, when we are considering the report of the conferees. Neither can the disposition of rentals from property be considered as a matter of dispute between the House and Senate.

Now, let us go over further and see a further provision on page 5 of the amendment, line 13:

And that the agencies through which the District of Columbia collects its revenues derived from taxation shall also collect for the United States any revenues which by this act become the sole property of the United States, and said revenues shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States as "miscellaneous receipts," but the revenues from the property known as Center Market shall not be so collected.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there for a moment?

Mr. TOWNER. Wait just a moment; then I will yield. So that by the terms of this act, this law—because it is to be a law—prescribes that the tax collector for the District of Columbia shall collect the rentals that may be due the United States, and shall pay that money into the Treasury of the United States.

Now, I assume the gentleman would say that that is in accordance with existing law. I do not know whether it is or not, but it was not in this bill, and it was not in dispute between the House and the Senate, because they have nothing to do with anything except questions of taxation, not with regard to determining the ownership of property, not with regard to determining who is entitled to the rentals of property, and not in regard to the creation of an agency for collecting the revenues of the Government and placing them in the Treasury of the United States. It can not be said by any stretch of imagination that these were matters of dispute, when the matters of dispute referred only to taxation and the disposition of it. That seems to me to be a very serious question.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If the gentleman will permit an interruption, I wish to invite his attention and that of the Chair to lines 13 and 14 on page 2 of the bill. I will read them to the Chair, so that the Chair can get them with undivided attention. I read:

That the general expenses of the District of Columbia shall be chargeable to and paid out of the Treasury of the United States——

Mr. TOWNER. I yield the floor, unless the gentleman desires to ask a question.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I hope the gentleman is not yielding the floor, because I ask leave to interrupt him.

Mr. TOWNER. No. I understood the gentleman desired to make a statement, not to ask a question. I am perfectly willing to yield to the gentleman to ask a question.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do not desire to ask a question, but I did desire to say a word about a feature which he was then discussing and, as I think, arguing from false premises.

Mr. TOWNER. I shall be glad to hear the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The gentleman from Iowa just laid much emphasis upon the provision that the revenues belonging to the United States should be collected by the same officers as those who collect the revenues for the District. They are doing that very thing to-day. It is no change of law.

Under the law and under the practice in vogue the same officers who collect the revenues for the District of Columbia are collecting some revenues for the United States. There are many revenues which the tax collector for the District of Columbia collects go 60 per cent to the District of Columbia and the remaining 40 per cent to the United States. A collector of taxes for the District of Columbia might overlook the collection of moneys going to the United States and say that he was not charged with the collection of that part that went to the United States. This amendment makes it plain that he is only to continue to collect that part of a revenue which goes to the United States as well as that part which goes to the District.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota if he has any idea of concluding this matter this evening?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. No; I do not think there is any danger of concluding it to-night; I was thinking of rising about 5 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was hoping that the arguments might be completed so that the Chair would have overnight to deliberate upon it.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I would like to submit this thought: Some gentlemen who have argued this question, and particularly the gentleman from Iowa, I think, have confused the real issue. Of course, if this was a question of power or jurisdiction of the conferees, even without the recent amendment to the rules, the conferees would be limited to the points in dispute between the two Houses, and would have to make their report within those limitations, but it seems to me that this is not a question of the jurisdiction of the conferees at all. To be sure, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] offered this amendment, but he offered it not as a conferee but as a Member of the House after the conference report had been adopted, and I submit that any other Member of the House might have offered it, and any Member of the House is at liberty to offer an amendment to the proposition that the gentleman from Minnesota has offered. So that the question for the Speaker to decide is not a question as to the power of the conferees but is a question as to the germaneness of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] to the amendment put on by the Senate. Whether or not the conferees would have the right to agree to it without action by the House I submit is immaterial.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then, in determining the question of germaneness, is the Speaker to consider only the Senate amendment, or is he to consider as being germane the original House amendment to which the Senate amendment is a substitute? The amendment pending covers matters included in the original House provision that are not included in the Senate amendment. We ought to proceed on a clear basis as to what is before the House. Is it the Senate amendment now being considered, and are the rules of germaneness to be limited solely to matters within the provision of the Senate amendment? If that is the position taken by the gentleman from Michigan, then, of course, the proposed amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota is out of order, because it includes provisions not covered by the Senate amendment.

Mr. MAPES. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that while I have not given special consideration to that question, it would seem to me that both the House and Senate propositions should be taken into consideration. I want to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin if he will point out a specific provision in the amendment that is not germane to the Senate proposition?

Mr. STAFFORD. The 40–60 per cent proposition is not germane. It is germane to the original House proposition.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I would like to ask, is not this analogous to the situation which would arise if this first section relating to taxation was all there was to the bill and the Senate had struck out all after the enacting clause and inserted the provision?

Mr. MAPES. Yes; I think it comes before the House and must be considered as a legislative proposition and not as a question as to whether it is in order on an appropriation bill at all.

Mr. WALSH. It is not confined to the power of the conferees; it is solely a question of germaneness.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to ask if the gentleman contends that the conferees in arriving at matters in dispute have less power than the House in passing on the germaneness in trying to reach an agreement on matters in dispute? The amendment is in disagreement at the present time. What is the position of the gentleman? That the House has greater powers than the conferees or the conferees greater powers than the House?

Mr. MAPES. The House has greater powers than the conferees.

Mr. STAFFORD. Where is there any such rule giving the conferees less power than the House?

Mr. MAPES. The rules of the House provide that the conferees are confined within the limits of matters in dispute between the two Houses.

Mr. WALSH. And the rules also provide that on certain amendments the conferees can not agree but must bring the matter back to the House for a separate vote.

Mr. MAPES. Certainly. I did not rise, Mr. Speaker, to discuss the matter generally. I only wanted to present this single thought to the Chair.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I will.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Here is the peculiar situation about this. That which we are now considering, to wit, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] is not a part of the conference report at all.

Mr. MAPES. Not at all.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If it were a part of the conference report there would be no question about it. It presents an entirely new question, so far as my recollection goes, and that is whether the conferees can seize upon a Senate amendment and add to it every item of legislation that they choose to add, and thus make it in order.

Mr. MAPES. Not whether the conferees can do it, but whether the House itself can do it.

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. What I meant was whether they can do it without it being subject to a point of order.

Mr. WALSH. If the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] had yielded the floor this amendment might have been offered by anybody who was not a conferee or a member of the Committee on Appropriations, if he had gotten recognition from the Chair.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Certainly. That would not have made any difference in the parliamentary situation.

Mr. WALSH. No; certainly not.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. Certainly.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I understood the gentleman from Wisconsin to say to the gentleman from Michigan a moment ago that all that was before the House was the Senate amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, no. I was asking a question.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Is not the proposition before the House not only the Senate amendment, but the original House proposition which the Senate proposed to strike out? Does not that bring both before the House?

Mr. STAFFORD. My contention is that we have to consider it the same as though it were a House bill that was sent over to the Senate, containing only the matter stricken out in the Senate and the substitute inserted by the Senate, and sent back to the House and then to conference.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. That brings the whole question before the House.

Mr. STAFFORD. The House disagreed to the Senate amendment and sent it to conference. No other action has been taken upon it. It is now before the House for consideration. I think this is a matter of such importance that it should go over until to-morrow, and I suggest to the gentleman from Minnesota that he move that the House adjourn.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I want to yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. LINEBERGER].

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest that the gentleman has no time to yield. This is a debate addressed to the Chair.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Then I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to discuss the point of order?

Mr. LINEBERGER. I do not.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I hope the gentleman will defer that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest that, of course, this debate on the point of order is addressed to the Chair and not to the House, and that the Chair controls the time. Now, if the House is disposed not to finish the discussion of the point of order to-night, then the gentleman from California may submit his request for unanimous consent.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I do not think it is possible to close the discussion on the point of order to-night, because there are two or three gentlemen who want to take three-quarters of an hour each. The discussion of the matter has hardly begun.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest that the Chair not only has control of the Members to be recognized but of the amount of time to be occupied.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. EVANS] wishes to be heard.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is impossible for the discussion on the point of order to be finished to-night, and so he will submit the request of the gentleman. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, upon what subject does the gentleman from California desire to address the House?

Mr. LINEBERGER. I will say to the gentleman that this is a matter which is in no sense political. I assure the gentleman that it is a matter that I believe will be of general interest not only to the House but to the country. I do not often ask time for things of this kind, and if the gentleman is not satisfied——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That does not give me any information, but I have never objected to such a request.

Mr. LINEBERGER. I desire to address the House on the subject of a certain petition which was delivered to-day on the steps of the Capitol.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman has taken his position on that question. He is in full accord with it.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Yes; I have always been for adjusted compensation and voted for the bill in the House, but I have some points that I would like to bring before the House regarding the petition presented to certain Members of Congress on the steps of the Capitol to-day.

Mr. WINGO. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman if this was delivered to the Attorney General or to the President or to the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. LINEBERGER. It was not.

Mr. WINGO. To whom was it delivered?

Mr. LINEBERGER. I think the gentleman knows what I am driving at. It has not been delivered to any one of the parties mentioned, so far as I know.

Mr. WINGO. I thought the gentleman said that a petition had been delivered to-day.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Yes; a petition has been delivered to a delegation on the steps of the Capitol.

Mr. WINGO. Delivered to whom?

Mr. LINEBERGER. I propose to discuss some of the forces back of its procurement and presentation.

Mr. WINGO. Oh, the gentleman wants to talk about the bonus? I am for the bonus, and I shall be delighted to hear what the gentleman has to say.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, after having consumed five minutes in an effort to obtain five minutes time, I hope I shall be able to complete what I have to say in less than five minutes.

Between three and a half and four years ago the fate of civilization was hanging in the balance. Thousands upon thousands of the flower of American manhood were giving up their lives on the gory fields of France, while some 2,000,000 more were preparing for the great ordeal in the training camps on this side of the water. At the moment when the very life of the Nation was at stake a certain string of newspapers, whose slimy trail of pro-Germanism and traitorous utterances made them infamous from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Gulf to the Canadian border, and the name of whose editor and owner was anathema to all true and loyal American hearts, whether in uniform or out of it, were carrying on the nefarious work of opposing the war and obstructing the path to victory.

To-day at high noon, in the very shadow of the dome of the Capitol, this shrine of American institutions, under the guise of serving those who only four short years ago they would have destroyed, comes this string of nameless un-American sheets bearing a petition purporting to carry 1,000,000 signatures of ex-soldiers, calling on Congress to pass the soldiers' adjusted compensation measure without further delay. Agreed, and all hail to the brave men who hoped thereby to accelerate the cause to which they are devoted, and in the righteousness of which I am a firm believer. But, Mr. Speaker, there is another picture which flashes across my mind's eye, and I say all shame to those who would commercialize or politicalize patriotism—and I am not thinking of the gallant soldiers or ex-service men who served their country so unselfishly. The fact that such a pageant was sponsored by a certain string of newspapers of questionable war record, if the dictum of the American people be worth anything, causes me to recall the observation of a soldier bystander who wore a silver service button, the emblem of his sacrifice, who, seeing the name of the owner of these papers on the truck which brought the petition, drew away, and said as he did so, "The active participation of these newspapers and their owner in this matter is a travesty on patriotism, and I can not remain to view the sickening spectacle."

Mr. Speaker, those were my sentiments as I saw that scene enacted in front of the Capitol of the United States. [Applause.]

DISPENSING WITH CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order on to-morrow, Calendar Wednesday, be dispensed with, and I do that in order that we may go on with the consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill conference report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. Reserving the right to object, the gentleman does not expect the District bill will take up all day to-morrow, does he?

Mr. MADDEN. I think it will.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Calendar Wednesday business might follow if we get through with it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is the gentleman advised as to what will follow if we get through with the conference report?

The SPEAKER. The Philippine bill is in order.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. There is to be a meeting of the Committee on Rules to-morrow morning. Of course, we innocent bystanders over here do not know much about what is going on.

Mr. WALSH. I move to strike out the word "innocent."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is anything likely to come from the Committee on Rules that will displace this particular bill?

Mr. MADDEN. To-morrow?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I think not. I am not advised at all. I am very anxious that this District bill should be disposed of. There will be nothing from the Committee on Rules, I understand from the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS], to-morrow.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennesse. Of course, the gentleman from Ohio has been away for several days. There is to be a meeting to-morrow; at least, that is what I have been told.

Mr. FESS. The committee meets to-morrow.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is it likely to bring in a rule that will interfere with the gentleman from Minnesota proceeding with this business?

Mr. FESS. It will not.

Mr. WINGO. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio if it is not true that the gentleman expects three rules to come in from that meeting to-morrow to follow this bill?

Mr. WALSH. Rule of three.

Mr. WINGO. No; they never fall into the rule of three on that side.

Mr. FESS. The report will not interfere with this.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I would like to know whether the Philippine bill is to follow this conference report?

Mr. MADDEN. I am not able to answer that question.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. But I would like to know.

Mr. MADDEN. I am not advised. I am asking this unanimous consent on my own responsibility, without knowing what the program is, because I am interested in disposing of this bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that he does not know what committee comes up to-morrow.

Mr. MADDEN. The Committee on Printing.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, there has been a somewhat humorous discussion, but I do not see any objection whatever to dispensing with the business of Calendar Wednesday to-morrow and we innocent bystanders will have to take care of ourselves the best we can on Thursday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the business of Calendar Wednesday to-morrow be dispensed with. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I would like an answer to my question, and I am serious in this. Is there not contemplated the bringing in of three bills, or a rule covering three bills, to follow the Philippine matter if we get through to-morrow?

Mr. MADDEN. I must confess I do not know what the Committee on Rules is going to do, because I have been so busy in the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WINGO. That is my information, and I want to lay my plans accordingly, because I am interested in those three bills.

Mr. MADDEN. I am not able to answer.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman from Ohio? There are some gentlemen not very well disposed who I would like to advise to be here if the bills are coming up, and if not I shall advise them that there is no probability of the bills coming up.

Mr. FESS. The Committee on Rules will act to-morrow on the bills the gentleman has in mind, but I do not understand that they will be presented at once.

Mr. WINGO. That is the point I am getting at. I am not quarreling with the gentleman. Personally I would like to expedite the consideration of them, if they are to be considered, because I want to get away myself.

Mr. FESS. I do not understand they are going to displace any of the regular appropriations.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman thinks probably it will be Thursday before those matters come up?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The minority butting in once more, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from Ohio whether the Johnson-Woodruff resolution will probably be called up by the Rules Committee to-morrow?

Mr. FESS. The gentleman from Ohio can not answer that.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does not the gentleman from Illinois think it would be better to transfer Calendar Wednesday to the following day rather than dispense with it altogether this week?

Mr. MADDEN. I would not want to assume the responsibility of making the program for the floor leader.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, as I understand it was the intention of the floor leader to have Calendar Wednesday go ahead, and he has his program mapped out for Friday, and in view of the large number who will be absent from the Chamber who are going to Quantico, I think the suggestion of the gentleman from Massachusetts a very good one, and that is to take up the Calendar Wednesday business on Thursday.

Mr. MADDEN. I will modify my request to that extent, Mr. Speaker, if it is permissible.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that Calendar Wednesday business of to-morrow be postponed to Thursday.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I believe if the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] were present, that in view of the situation which exists in the Philippine Islands objection would be made.

Mr. MADDEN. Is the gentleman going to object?

Mr. STAFFORD. After a talk this morning with the floor leader I understand the Philippine bill is to be brought up for consideration on Friday so far as debate is concerned. Otherwise I would not have interposed and made the suggestion to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not like to have the program changed so much. When will the ruling come on this bill, then?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The first thing; as soon as possible in the morning.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman makes that request in behalf of the organization on that side?

Mr. MADDEN. I do. I assume that responsibility.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Wednesday, May 3, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] is detained on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATE, WAR DEPARTMENT, 1923 (S. DOC. NO. 197).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the War Department, fiscal year 1923, for Children's School, Fort Leavenworth, Kans., $10,800, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the Mid-City Citizens' Association, of Washington, D. C., protesting against the enactment of legislation increasing the assessment valuation of real estate in the District of Columbia as being detrimental to the already acute housing situation in and the future development of the Capital City, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the Stanton Park Citizens' Association, of Washington, D. C., protesting against the enactment of legislation increasing the assessment valuation of real estate in the District of Columbia and favoring the hearing of those vitally interested, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Real Estate Board of Washington, D. C., protesting against the enactment of legislation increasing the assessment valuation of real estate in the District of Columbia, particularly in view of the disastrous effect such legislation might have on the already acute rental and housing situation in the said District, and favoring delay as to any change in the fiscal relations until such time as the matter can be thoroughly considered and all parties afforded a hearing, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CAPPER presented a petition of sundry citizens of Stevens County, Kans., favoring the passage of the Dyer anti-lynching bill, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WILLIS presented resolutions of the Cuyahoga County Council, American Legion, of Cleveland, Ohio, favoring the policy of decentralization in the handling of the work of the United States Veterans' Bureau for the adjustment of compensation and vocational education, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petitions of Harry Watson and sundry other citizens of Toledo and J. W. Pfeifler and sundry other citizens of Ottawa, all in the State of Ohio, praying for the imposition of a tariff duty of $2 per hundred pounds on imported Cuban sugar, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LODGE. I present resolutions of the National Guard Association of Massachusetts, which I ask may be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL GUARD ASSOCIATION OF MASSACHUSETTS,
Boston, Mass., April 27, 1922.

Senator HENRY CABOT LODGE,
The Senate of the United States, Washington, D. C.

HONORED SIR: We wish to call to your attention the following resolutions adopted at the meeting of this association held in Boston on Friday, April 21, 1922:

Whereas there has never been a situation in international affairs when this country needed to look more sharply to its means of defense than at present. If these means of defense are stricken from the hands of the Nation, it will be through the perverse activities of those Members of Congress into whose hands the destinies of the Nation are committed by the people: Be it therefore

Resolved, That the National Guard Association of Massachusetts, representing 10,000 active and past officers with the enlisted personnel of the Massachusetts National Guard, at its meeting Friday, April 21, 1922, protests against the reduction of the Regular Army below 150,000 enlisted men; the Navy below 100,000 enlisted men; and the Marine Corps below the present standard of 21,000 enlisted men, with the necessary officers personnel thereto: It is

Resolved, That the recommendations of the Militia Bureau, with the money allowances for arming, equipping, and training the National Guard, be adopted by Congress in order that the work of building up this line of defense shall go steadily onward. That no reduction of the amounts named by the Militia Bureau for the various branches of the National Guard be made. We demand, for the preservation of peace and prosperity of the Nation, that the Naval and Military Affairs Committee of both the Senate and House recommend and work for the maintenance of the Army and Navy, National Guard, and Reserves, as outlined in the national defense act of June 4, 1920.

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Senate and House Committees on Naval and Military Affairs, and each Member of Congress from Massachusetts.

Whereas Report No. 753, House of Representatives, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session, on readjustment of pay of the Army, is a discrimination against the active officers of the National Guard: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Massachusetts National Guard Association at its regular meeting Friday, April 21, 1922, request that section 14, which reads:

"That officers of the National Guard receiving Federal pay, except for armory drill, shall receive the allowances for officers of the Regular service as provided in sections 5 and 6," be amended, if the report is adopted, to read:

"National Guard officers on temporary duty under orders of the War Department, including attendance at armory drill, shall be paid:

	Per day.
Colonel	$12.78
Lieutenant colonel	11.39
Major	10.67
Captain	8.67
First lieutenant	7.22
Second lieutenant	5.89

for such days as actually on duty under orders of the War Department at camps of military instruction and for the prescribed number of armory drills for which pay is allowed."

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the Secretary of War and each Member of Congress from Massachusetts.

Whereas that in justice and equity to the officers of the National Guard or Organized Militia who have entered or may hereafter enter the Regular Army: It is

Resolved, That the Massachusetts National Guard Association at its regular meeting, Friday, April 21, 1922, urge the adoption of Senate bill 2803, which provides—

"That all persons who have entered or may hereafter enter the Regular Army as commissioned officers shall be entitled to compute their prior service in the National Guard or Organized Militia whether in State or Federal service for longevity pay and retirement."

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the Secretary of War, the Senate and House Committees on Military Affairs, and each Member of Congress from Massachusetts.

Whereas the selective service act under which the American Army during the recent World War was organized provided for an American Army and for the same treatment for all its members; and

Whereas orders were issued abolishing the use of the letters "N. G." and "R" on the collar ornaments and other evidences of different component parts in the one American Army; and

Whereas reserve officers of the Navy and Marine Corps and provisional officers of the Army were recognized as members of their respective branches and National Guard officers and reserve officers of the Army are not so recognized in the matter of retirement for disability; and

Whereas the Bursum bill, so called, United States Senate 1565, having passed the Senate provides for placing the National Guard and reserve officers on the same basis as their regular confreres in this respect, thus carrying into effect the intent of the country for the same treatment for all members of the one American Army: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the National Guard Association of Massachusetts in regular meeting assembled on Friday, April 21, 1922, at Boston, Mass., heartily indorses this bill and urges upon the Members of Congress from Massachusetts the adoption of this bill at the present session of Congress; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of this organization be instructed to send a copy of this resolution to the Massachusetts Members of the House of Representatives in Congress and all members are urged to write their respective Congressmen in its behalf.

NATIONAL GUARD ASSOCIATION OF MASSACHUSETTS,
L. P. SAWIN, Secretary.

Mr. LODGE presented resolutions adopted by a convention of delegates from Jewish organizations of Arverne, Edgemere, Far Rockaway, Rockaway Park, and Rockaway Beach, Jacob Rosenberg, chairman; South Brooklyn, Bay Ridge, Bensonhurst, and Coney Island, Samuel Polstein, chairman; Brownsville, East New York, and Central New York, Bernhard Block, chairman; Williamsburgh, Greenpoint, and Ridgewood, Rabbi I. Inselbuch, chairman; Staten Island, Max Levy, chairman; Bronx, Dr. Simon Hirshdansky, chairman; Harlem and Washington Heights, Rabbi A. M. Kaplan, chairman; Manhattan district between Twenty-third and One hundred and tenth Streets, Joseph Polstein, chairman; Manhattan district between Houston and Twenty-third Streets, Leo Wolfson, chairman; lower east side of the Manhattan district, Jacob Weinberger, secretary; all of New York City, praying for the passage of Senate Joint Resolution 191, favoring the establishment in Palestine of the national home for the Jewish people, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. NICHOLSON presented a resolution adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of Grand Junction, Colo., favoring the passage of the soldiers' bonus bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution of the Senate of Colorado, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Senate Resolution 2.

Whereas for many years a condition of revolution, with attendant loss of life and property, has existed in our neighboring Republic of Mexico; and

Whereas there has finally been elected to the Presidency of the Mexican Republic a man who promises to be the true savior of his country, the most honorable Gen. Alvaro Obregon; and

Whereas President Obregon, himself a man of the people, enjoys the entire respect, confidence, and enthusiastic backing of all classes in his country; and

Whereas a new era of peace, prosperity, and friendly relationship has been brought about by His Excellency President Obregon; and

Whereas it is most fitting and appropriate that the great State of Colorado should join her sister States in a formal expression of friendship for the people of our sister Republic and of commendation and confidence in President Obregon: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Colorado, That it declare itself to be most pleased with the election of and administration by President Obregon and takes pleasure in congratulating the people of Mexico upon the new era of peace, prosperity, and friendly relationship which has been established; and be it further

Resolved, That we believe that the best interests of all concerned demands the prompt recognition of the Republic of Mexico by the Government of the United States; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of the senate is directed to forward copies of this resolution to the President of the United States, to the President of the United States Senate, and the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, and to each of Colorado's Senators and Representatives in Congress; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of the senate is directed to forward to President Obregon a copy of this resolution.

EARL COOLEY,
President of the Senate.

Attest:

N. N. MCLEAN,
Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. NICHOLSON also presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Colorado, which was referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

Senate Joint Resolution 4.

Be it resolved by the Senate of the Twenty-third General Assembly of the State of Colorado (the House concurring), That we regret and deplore the delay in the United States Senate in passing the adjusted compensation bill for service men of the World War; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to the Senators from the State of Colorado and to the President of the United States.

EARL COOLEY,
President of the Senate.

Attest:

N. N. MCLEAN,
Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. NICHOLSON also presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Colorado, which was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, as follows:

Joint Resolution 3.

Whereas the Secretary of the Interior, Albert B. Fall, has ordered the removal of the office of the United States Reclamation Service from Denver to Washington, D. C., to take effect July 1, 1922; and

Whereas the General Assembly of the State of Colorado is convinced that the service can be more economically and satisfactorily performed from a headquarters located in the West, and that Denver is the logical center of the great irrigation projects either constructed, under construction, or contemplated: Therefore be it

Resolved by the General Assembly of the State of Colorado, That the honorable Secretary of the Interior be requested to suspend said order until full investigation may be had.

EARL COOLEY,
President of the Senate.

Attest:

N. N. MCLEAN,
Secretary of the Senate.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. JONES of Washington, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 23) creating a joint committee to determine the indebtedness of the United States to the District of Columbia or of the District of Columbia to the United States, growing out of relations existing since the organic act of 1878, reported it without amendment, and moved that it be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, which was agreed to.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 651) for the relief of Ethel Williams, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 686) thereon.

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 4356) for the relief of Arthur J. Burdick (Rept. No. 687); and

A bill (H. R. 8173) for the relief of Mrs. E. H. Jackson (Rept. No. 688).

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. JONES of Washington:

A bill (S. 3544) to enlarge the powers and duties of the Department of Justice in relation to the repression of prostitution for the protection of the armed forces; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. NICHOLSON:

A bill (S. 3545) to correct the military record of John R. Smith; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CULBERSON:

A bill (S. 3546) to extend the benefits of the employers' liability act of September 7, 1916, to Alton Harwell (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

RESTRICTION OF IMMIGRATION—CONFERENCE REPORT.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives agreeing to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 268), extending the operation of the immigration act of May 19, 1921.

Mr. COLT submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 268) extending the operation of the immigration act of May 19, 1921, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert "1924"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 2. That clause (7) of subdivision (a) of section 2 of such act of May 19, 1921, is amended to read as follows: '(7) aliens who have resided continuously for at least five years immediately preceding the time of their application for admission to the United States in the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, the Republic of Cuba, the Republic of Mexico, countries of Central and South America, or adjacent islands.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 3. That such act of May 19, 1921, is amended by adding at the end thereof a new section to read as follows:

"'SEC. 6. That it shall be unlawful for any person, including any transportation company other than railway lines entering the United States from foreign contiguous territory, or the owner, master, agent, or consignee of any vessel, to bring to the United States either from a foreign country or any insular possession of the United States any alien not admissible under the terms of this act or regulations made thereunder, and if it appears to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Labor that any alien has been so brought, such person or transportation company, or the master, agent, owner, or consignee of any such vessel, shall pay to the collector of customs of the customs district in which the port of arrival is located the sum of $200 for each alien so brought, and in addition a sum equal to that paid by such alien for his transportation from the initial point of departure, indicated in his ticket, to the port of arrival, such latter sum to be delivered by the collector of customs to the alien on whose account assessed. No vessel shall be granted clearance papers pending the determination of the liability to the payment of such fine, or while the fine remains unpaid; except that clearance may be granted prior to the determination of such question upon the deposit of a sum sufficient to cover such fine. Such fine shall not be remitted or refunded unless it appears to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Labor that such inadmissibility was not known to, and could not have been ascertained by the exercise of reasonable diligence by, such person, or the owner, master, agent, or consignee of the vessel, prior to the departure of the vessel from the last seaport in a foreign country or insular possession of the United States.'"

WILLIAM N. VAILE,
JOHN E. RAKER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. COLT. In connection with the report I would like to say that there were three Senate amendments to the joint resolution as it came over from the House. The first of the three amendments adopted by the Senate was that making the extension two years instead of one year, as provided by the House. That amendment was agreed to by the House. The second of these amendments was that requiring five years' residence of aliens in contiguous territory, like Canada and Mexico, instead of one year's residence, as provided in the present law, before aliens may obtain admission into the United States. That amendment was also agreed to by the House. The third amendment penalizes the steamship companies for bringing in aliens in excess of quota, and that amendment was also agreed to by the House, with a change which permits the Secretary of Labor to remit the fine in cases where he is satisfied that the steamship company had no knowledge that it was bringing in aliens in excess of quota and could not with reasonable diligence have acquired such knowledge.

Therefore, I move the adoption of the conference report. I may say that it is quite necessary that this extension should go into effect promptly; in other words, that the measure should be adopted in order to give sufficient time before it goes into effect for the Department of Labor to send out notices.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Rhode Island a question. As I understand, the Senate adopted three amendments, as the Senator has stated, and two of those amendments, namely, the extension from one year to two years and the proposition of aliens in contiguous territory being compelled to remain there five years before they enter the United States were concurred in by the House.

Mr. COLT. That is true.

Mr. HARRISON. The only change was in the third amendment adopted by the Senate, the penalty provision for steamship companies that bring into the United States aliens more than the allotted quota and was made in conference. The change was merely to give to the Secretary of Labor the discretion of allowing in certain instances the penalty to be removed or not to be imposed on the steamship companies where it was shown by the steamship companies to the Secretary of Labor that they had a good excuse for bringing the aliens in, that they could not by reasonable diligence have ascertained that the quota had been exceeded. Is that correct?

Mr. COLT. That they did not know and with reasonable diligence could not have known that they were bringing in aliens in excess of the quota. They must show that to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Labor. The Senator has stated it correctly.

Mr. HARRISON. I have just read the debate on the conference report in the House, and there is one phase of it that particularly appeals to me for this modified amendment, in that this penalty attaches to the steamship companies at the same time the law goes into effect, namely, June 30 of this year, and that there might be instances where they had brought in aliens over the quota.

Mr. COLT. I understand the law goes into effect at once, being an amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. Upon the signing thereof by the President.

Mr. COLT. As to the penalizing of the steamship companies and also the five-year provision as to aliens coming in from contiguous territory.

Mr. HARRISON. May I say to the Senator that if I did not have so much confidence in the present Commissioner of Immigration, the man who now holds that high position, I would not feel as I do about the matter. I believe he is one of the most efficient and capable men in the Government service to-day. I think he understands immigration questions better than any man in the United States to-day and is rendering great service. I believe that his inclination is in favor of restricting immigration. If some other character of individual occupied the position, I should be opposed to the modification of the Senate amendment.

Mr. COLT. I entirely agree with the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. I can understand how excuses may be presented to the Department of Labor or to the Commissioner of Immigration in such a way as to lead to the nullification of the law; but, as I have previously stated, I have so much confidence in the individual who is now the commissioner that I do not believe he will permit that to be done. So much good will be accomplished by this amendment to the present law, particularly in connection with the provision against aliens moving to this country from contiguous territory for a period of five years, and the penalty which will attach to steamship companies for violation of the law, that I shall vote for the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi yield to me?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HEFLIN. I wish to ask the Senator from Mississippi, if the fines are remitted and the steamship companies do not have to pay the penalty for bringing over a number of immigrants in excess of the quota provided for in the law, what becomes of the number of immigrants in excess of that quota who may be brought over by the steamship companies?

Mr. HARRISON. I am taking it for granted that the immigration authorities are not going to permit any excess number of immigrants to come in.

Mr. COLT. Mr. President, if I may be permitted to answer the question of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], I desire to say that under the present law any number of immigrants who come in in excess of the quota are deported.

Mr. HEFLIN. Then this amendment to the law simply makes it easier for the steamship companies to violate the immigration law, because they can bring immigrants here, accept the fare for transporting them across the sea, and then take the chance of avoiding the penalty. This amendment, it seems to me, makes it easier for them to get around the law. I said when the amendment was under consideration in the Senate that there always seemed to be a loophole provided through which they could get around the law and make it easier for the steamship companies to violate the spirit of the law and continue to bring undesirables into this country. It seems to me that the conference report provision will afford an opportunity for them to do that very thing again.

I think, Mr. President, that the fines imposed on the steamship companies for the violation of the immigration law ought to be very heavy, and they ought not to be permitted to say that they could not find out whether they were bringing in a number of immigrants in excess of the quota, for the steamship company which has a proper regard for this country will know the facts. There is but one way to make them have a proper regard for the immigration law, and that is by putting heavy penalties on them for violating it. I have known in times past of instances where steamship companies would bring in immigrants by the shipload without regard to their fitness for citizenship in the United States. They brought them here purely and wholly for the purpose of making money out of the traffic. We make it easier for the steamship companies to load their ships down with undesirable immigrants and bring them here if on their arrival on this side there is provided a loophole through which they may pass and avoid the penalty.

So I feel, Mr. President, that we are following the same old beaten track, and that immigrants of the character of those who have come into this country and poisoned the very life of it for years will still have an opportunity to come in under the very proposition which is presented here to-day.

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to say to the Senator from Alabama that, without question, there is a loophole in this proposed legislation for the steamship company to get around the law. The conference report contains a modification of the amendment that was placed in the bill by the Senate; but before the Senate adopted that amendment there was no penalty whatever attached to the steamship companies. According to the conference report the only way for a steamship company to get around the law is under the provision that—

> Such fine shall not be remitted or refunded unless it appears to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Labor that such inadmissibility was not known to and could not have been ascertained by the exercise of reasonable diligence by—

And so forth.

Of course, that is a modification of the penalty. That provision has been incorporated in the Senate amendment; but it is so much better than the law before the Senate amendment was adopted that I hesitate to oppose the conference report, in which there is so much good.

Mr. HEFLIN. There is no doubt about the legislation that we enacted on this subject being very much better than the old law, and I want to safeguard its provisions. If this amendment is accepted, who will be here to dispute the statement of the steamship company when he appears on this side of the water and says, "I used every precaution possible"? Who will be here to dispute his statement? Therefore the powers that be here say, "Very well, we will excuse the act," and the steamship agent goes back and takes the chance over and over again. It looks to me as though it is letting down the bars to allow immigrants to enter the United States, just as was the case before.

We can not be too particular about this matter. Those who make money out of the business of bringing foreigners by the thousands into our country have got to be closely watched and heavily penalized every time they violate our immigration laws.

Mr. COLT. Mr. President, I wish to say that the steamship company has got to prove the facts. There might be cases where the steamship companies would be entirely blameless; but in all such cases we must depend upon the Department of Labor and the Commissioner of Immigration not to waive the penalty unless the facts in extenuation are clearly shown and proved.

We might imagine a case where a steamer started from Naples on Monday, the officials of the line having competent information that they were bringing in immigrants within the quota. Another steamship starts on Wednesday. The first steamship is a slower one or is detained at sea, and the immigrants on the steamship which started last, if you please, fill the quota, so that those coming on the first but slower steamship would be in excess of the quota by a considerable number. There are certainly cases arising in which it would be absolutely unjust to make the proposed law mandatory, and it therefore follows that there should be some discretion on the part of the Department of Labor to waive the penalty in cases in which it is shown the steamship companies are innocent. It was along that line that the House conferees insisted that the provision should not be made absolutely mandatory, and, therefore, we consented to the modification.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. COLT. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. What method is pursued of enabling an immigrant seeking to come into the United States or a steamship company ready to transport him to determine whether he comes within the quota?

Mr. COLT. Under the act the Department of Labor is called upon to furnish information as to the quotas.

Mr. ROBINSON. There is no requirement in the law or in the regulations of the department to the effect that before sailing an immigrant must have authority to sail.

Mr. COLT. I think not.

Mr. ROBINSON. Then, it must be apparent to everyone that under some circumstances it will be physically impossible either for the immigrant or for the steamship company to know with absolute certainty that the immigrant comes within the quota. Therefore, why should not the relaxation of the rule apply to the immigrant as well as to the steamship company? Why should the immigrant who in good faith is seeking to conform to the provisions of the law limiting immigration be penalized or be deported and at the same time the steamship company which transports him be relieved from penalty? Why should not the department have express authority to admit in excess of the quota under circumstances which show the immigrant is not to blame?

Mr. COLT. The Senator is suggesting another exception.

Mr. ROBINSON. I am.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator if it is not a fact that the consuls general of the United States in the respective countries are authorized to issue only a limited number of visés for a particular period; that the steamship company will not accept any immigrant who has not had his passport properly viséed, and that those visés are divided throughout the year?

Mr. ROBINSON. That is a very intelligent procedure; but if that is the case, how does it happen that we had more than 2,000 persons, whom the Department of Labor properly admitted temporarily last year, in excess of the quotas of the various nationalities? The method suggested by the Senator from Nebraska is a very intelligent method, and some practice of that kind will finally have to be adopted if the quota limitation shall be made effective. It can be accomplished in no other way. It is manifestly oppressive to permit persons who desire to come into the United States to secure passage and make the trip with the hope that they will arrive ahead of other immigrants who are competing with them for an opportunity of entering, only to find when they have arrived that they are a little too late.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is not an easy matter, considering the area of country covered, but I know, as a matter of fact, the method referred to is pursued. A proposed immigrant, say, in Poland, applies at Warsaw for a visé of his passport. The consul there tells him, "I can not visé that passport now; come back in July or August," and he gives him a number. When that time arrives the prospective immigrant again applies at the consul's office, and, if the consul finds that the quota has not yet been reached, he visés the passport, to be used not before a certain date. I think the Government has undertaken to provide in a way a protection against the limit being overrun, and I have never understood how it was overrun, except that there may be a number of different consuls viséing passports in the same territory.

Mr. COLT. That is the reason why we want to have the law passed now, so that proper information may be conveyed.

Mr. President, I ask for the adoption of the conference report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report submitted by the Senator from Rhode Island.

The report was agreed to.

POST OFFICE APPOINTMENTS.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, yesterday morning the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] saw fit to place in the RECORD a statement from some publication, the name of the publication not being given, in which occurs the following language:

Senator FRANK B. WILLIS, of Ohio, is quoted as follows in a letter said to have been written to Miss Katherine Riley, of Bellefontaine, explaining why women are not appointed postmasters.

The Senator from Ohio was not explaining anything of the kind, because women are being appointed postmasters.

I know the Senator from Arkansas wants to be fair, and I, therefore, ask permission to print all of the letter, only a part of which was quoted in the RECORD; also a letter from the Civil Service Commission bearing on the same subject, and likewise the report of the Civil Service Commission relative to the particular post-office appointment referred to. An examination of the document will show that the facts are contrary to the charges which have been made here. The appointment in that case was that of a soldier. The lowest man on the list was appointed; but he was appointed on the recommendation of the Representative from that district because he was an ex-service man. That this appointment was in entire harmony with the usual policy of the administration is shown by the following news item from a local paper:

600 EX-SERVICE MEN NAMED POSTMASTERS UNDER HARDING ORDER.

How the Government is taking care of the one-time service men became known yesterday in the announcement of the Post Office Department that 600 veterans of the World War had been appointed to be postmasters since President Harding issued his Executive order May 10.

Postmaster General Work, commenting on the announcement, said this is a remarkable record, particularly because the veterans had had no previous post-office experience and a large number of them no business experience of any kind.

I ask unanimous consent that the letters and document to which I have referred may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Ohio what is the case he refers to? I am not familiar with it.

Mr. WILLIS. The case of the appointment of a postmaster at Franklin, Ohio. The Senator's colleague read from some publication—I did not learn what it was—in which was quoted a portion of a letter written by me. I am asking leave to print all of the letter, the letter from the Civil Service Commission, and the report from the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. ROBINSON. I am not familiar with the subject matter which the Senator was discussing. I observe that my colleague, the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY], is not in the Chamber.

Mr. WILLIS. I think the Senator's colleague would not object, because this is simply printing all of the letter, a portion of which he quoted.

Mr. ROBINSON. Of course, it is eminently proper that the entire letter should be published.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

MARCH 24, 1922.

Miss CATHERINE RILEY,
Bellefontaine, Ohio.

DEAR MISS RILEY: I am in receipt of your letter of March 22, and note your question, "Why may not women be appointed postmaster now, when experienced?"

My answer is that they can be and are. We have named quite a number this week, at least one woman being appointed by the President in Ohio. Congressmen all over Ohio are naming women as postmasters. But the first requisite is that they attain rating of the Civil Service Commission on the eligible list of three; with this rating no one but the commission has anything to do. I most certainly have never attempted to influence them and, so far as I know, no Congressman has attempted such an unwarranted action. I think it would do more harm than good if anyone did attempt to influence ratings.

Then, because we believe in party, not personal, government, we have asked the successful candidate to secure the indorsement of the Republican county committee, which is the body upon which the party must depend for its work back home. My experience with these committees has been that they aim to deal fairly with women candidates, although, of course, they can not indorse every woman who aspires. As time goes on more and more women will be considered and appointed, but just now it is natural that more men should be, for they have much longer done political work which deserves reward.

I trust these explanations will appeal to you as just. I shall be glad to send you information from the Civil Service Commission as soon as it makes reply to the letter which, I regret, was wrongfully inclosed.

Yours very truly,

FRANK B. WILLIS.

UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., March 27, 1922.

Miss CATHERINE RILEY,
149 West Sandusky Avenue, Bellefontaine, Ohio.

MADAM: The commission is in receipt of a letter from Senator F. B. WILLIS in which he requests that you be furnished with the ratings attained by you in the examination for postmaster at Franklin, Ohio.

Your attention is invited to the Executive order of May 10, 1921, under which this examination was held, which reads in part as follows: "The said commission shall certify the results thereof to the Postmaster General, who shall submit to the President the name of one of the highest three qualified eligibles for appointment to fill said vacancy." In view of the fact that the commission is doing its utmost with its limited force to expedite the rating of the papers resulting from the large number of postmaster examinations, it is not practicable or economical to give numerical ratings except to those from among whom selection must be made under the Executive order referred to above.

Under date of February 7, 1922, the commission certified to the Post Office Department the names of the highest three qualified eligibles in the examination for postmaster at Franklin, among whom it appears you were not included. Since you were not found to be among those from whom selection must be made, you were not assigned a numerical rating in the examination.

The result of this examination does not reflect upon your ability or character, neither does it necessarily indicate that you are not qualified to be postmaster at Franklin. It merely means that in the competition under the rules it was decided that the rating of three other candidates was higher than yours.

By direction of the commission.

Very respectfully, ——— ———, Secretary.

MEMORANDUM AS TO PRESIDENTIAL POSTMASTER EXAMINATION OF OCTOBER 14, 1921, FOR FRANKLIN, OHIO; SALARY, $2,500.

UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., April 12, 1922.

In the record of proceedings before the special committee of the Senate conducting an investigation of the United States Civil Service Commission appear references to a letter signed by Catherine Riley, applicant for postmaster at Franklin, Ohio, in which the writer expresses dissatisfaction with the action of the Civil Service Commission in failing to include her name among those certified as eligible for postmaster at Franklin.

The examination for postmaster at Franklin resulted as follows:

	Business experience and fitness.	General average.
		Per cent.
Arthur L. McCarthy	85	82.00
Donald D. Thirkield	78	76.80
John R. Miller	65	[1] 71.80

[1] Includes 5 per cent preference.

Applicants Henry E. Libecap and Catherine Riley were not assigned numerical ratings because it did not appear that their names could be placed among those from whom selection must be made under the Executive order of May 10, 1921.

As an aid to a thorough understanding of the reasons which controlled the commission in its treatment of this case, it will be helpful in the beginning to briefly recount the business training and experience of the three highest applicants, Messrs. McCarthy, Thirkield, and Miller, together with the claims of Miss Catherine Riley. The statements as hereinafter summarized are taken substantially as presented in their applications, subjected only to the omission of unnecessary details.

ARTHUR L. M'CARTHY, AGE 52.

Education, common school.

Business experience: 1888–1913, employed by tablet and writing paper companies as superintendent of ruling department; salary, $15 to $19.50 per week. 1913 to date of examination, postmaster at Franklin; chairman of local Red Cross during the war; president of the Franklin Club during the war; present chairman of the Franklin Men's Club; member of the board of managers and board of trustees of the Miami Valley Chautauqua; members of Boy Scout commissioners; secretary of home-service section Red Cross until 1921; member of all war activities during World War.

The testimony regarding this applicant is exceptionally favorable. The vouchers are, with one possible exception, in entire accord in expressing their commendation. It is made apparent that during his years of service as postmaster and in his participation in public-spirited movements Mr. McCarthy has demonstrated those qualities which identify a popular and efficient public servant. The applicant is very generally referred to by those who testify as the best postmaster Franklin has ever had. There is not a single objection registered against him on any ground, and upon review the rating of 85 assigned to Mr. McCarthy on the subject of business training and experience, if at all open to criticism, might be regarded as somewhat conservative.

DONALD D. THIRKIELD, AGE 30.

Education, common school; three years high school.

Business experience: 1909–1912, clerk and cashier in department store owned by father; had charge of all books, cash credits, and collection for more than one year of this time. April, 1912, to October, 1912, in lumber camp in California. January, 1913, to November, 1913, cashier of gas and electric company. Had charge of all books and cash, handled complaints and met all customers at office window. October, 1913, to July, 1916, several positions as clerk and salesman in Chicago. July, 1916, to March, 1918, salesman in department store owned by father. March, 1918, to February, 1921, bookkeeper and office manager, later secretary-treasurer of electric company; as sales manager increased sales from $27,000 a year to over $80,000 a year; beginning salary, $1,200 per year; salary at time of leaving, $2,500; owned part interest in company; from 20 to 52 employees supervised; did hiring and firing. February, 1921, to date of examination no regular employment. Doing occasional bookkeeping and clerical work.

This applicant shows considerable business experience of a kind calculated to develop a capacity for the duties of postmaster. He has had executive experience and is evidently accustomed to employing and supervising men. He appears to have actively participated within more recent years in the management and direction of responsible business affairs. Moreover, the testimony concerning Mr. Thirkield, while perhaps not so universally approving in its tone as that regarding Mr. McCarthy, is nevertheless decidedly favorable. He is in every case credited with good habits and excellent local standing. It very clearly appears that he is a man of an unusually pleasing personality, possessing the quality of dealing tactfully and agreeably with those among whom he lives.

JOHN R. MILLER, AGE 28.

Education, common school and four years high school.

Business experience: 1914–1917, deputy county treasurer of Warren County, Ohio; $400,000 handled annually by the office; $65 per month; 1917 (four months), bookkeeper and clerk in bank; $60 per month; no supervision; June, 1917, to March, 1919, United States Marine Corps; March, 1919, to present date, employed with father on farm.

Mr. Miller is an ex-service man, having served nearly two years in the Marine Corps in the recent war; and, under direction of the President, credit is given for such service in World War toward establishing eligibility for a position as presidential postmaster. The reason given for this direction is that service in the war interrupted the careers of those who entered it, and they should not be penalized in consideration for a postmastership by reason of such military service. After considering the experience had by Mr. Miller for three years as deputy county treasurer of Warren County, Ohio, and his experience as a bookkeeper and clerk in the bank, with the experience following the war in connection with the management of a large farm, together with favorable testimony concerning Mr. Miller's personal characteristics and ability, the examiners and the commissioners reached decision that he was entitled to a rating of 65 per cent in the subject of business experience and fitness, which, with the five-point bonus added for military service, gave him the general eligible average of 71.80.

MISS CATHERINE RILEY, AGE 52.

Education: Common school, high-school graduate, one year normal university, six months' bookkeeping course.

Business experience: 1886–1896, school-teacher; 1896–1900, postmaster at Franklin, Ohio; third-class office; salary, $1,700 per annum; two clerks in office; 1902–1904, clerk in dry goods and millinery store; salary, $80 per month; 1906–1908, bookkeeper for manufacturing plant; salary, $50 per month. In 1917 (length of time not indicated), "in munition plant of Platt Iron Works Co., Dayton, Ohio; had charge of 25 or 30 women, giving the necessary supplies and allowing no loafing other than in the rest room." 1917–1918 (about six months), selling tickets in electric railroad ticket office; salary $85 a month; 1919 to date of examination, school-teacher; salary in 1921, $100 per month.

For eligibility for the position of presidential postmaster it is required that the candidate must show not only the possession of certain qualifications and abilities tending to fit him for the administrative and executive duties of the position, but also ability to meet and deal with the public satisfactorily. The commission has before it confidential testimony secured from 20 leading citizens and business men of Franklin qualified to speak from a city-wide viewpoint concerning the different candidates for postmaster, and a very considerable number of them either omit any reference to Miss Riley or state that she is not qualified by personality and temperament to serve as postmaster at Franklin. There is no charge whatsoever against her character; it is simply that she has not demonstrated, in the judgment of these business men, ability to meet and deal with the public satisfactorily. For this reason the commission did not feel that it could properly place her name among those of the highest three eligibles for consideration by the department and the President for appointment as postmaster at Franklin.

THE TARIFF.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7456) to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I desire to submit some observations on the pending bill with special reference to 29 important industries insistent on protection, showing the cost of such protection to consumers, and the Government revenue derived from it.

In considering this subject we may logically deal with it first from the political standpoint, and then, with increased emphasis, from the economic standpoint.

It is presumable that the party platforms would be kept in view in framing a tariff bill.

The Republican platform of 1916, after indorsing in the fullest sense the policy of tariff protection, said:

> We favor the creation of a tariff commission with complete power to gather and compile information for the use of Congress in all matters relating to the tariff.

The Democratic platform of 1916 said:

> We reaffirm our belief in the doctrine of a tariff for the purpose of providing sufficient revenue for the operation of the Government economically administered.

The platform declared in favor of establishing—

> A nonpartisan tariff commission to make impartial and thorough study of every economic fact that may throw light either upon our past or upon our future fiscal policy with regard to the imposition of taxes on imports or with regard to the changed and changing conditions under which our trade is carried on. We * * * declare ourselves in sympathy with the principle and purpose of shaping legislation within that field in accordance with clearly established facts rather than in accordance with the demands of selfish interests or upon information provided largely, if not exclusively, by them.

Accordingly, a Democratic Congress passed the law, and a Democratic President approved it, creating the Tariff Commission, being the act for that purpose of September 8, 1916. The record discloses no extensive participation in the public hearings on the pending bill by the members of this Tariff Commission. On the other hand, many, many pages, bewildering in extent and detail, give evidence that "selfish interests" were heard without denial and without limit. That their demands did not fall upon unheeding ears, and their clamor did not reach unwilling listeners, the various schedules in this bill, as reported, will indicate.

The Democratic platform of 1920 says:

> We reaffirm the traditional policy of the Democratic Party in favor of a tariff for revenue only, and we confirm the policy of basing tariff revisions upon the intelligent research of a nonpartisan commission rather than upon the demands of selfish interests temporarily held in abeyance.

We recall how proponents of this bill during the Democratic administration were given to casting slurs upon and belittling the Tariff Commission. It is not surprising that they should give first place in considering this bill to the parties immediately concerned as beneficiaries under it.

It will be noted in all references to this commission that Democratic declarations have referred to it as a "nonpartisan commission." It should, of course, justify that description if the purpose of its creation and its usefulness are to be preserved.

The Republican platform of 1920, under the heading "International trade and tariff," says:

> The uncertain and unsettled condition of international balances, the abnormal economic and trade situation of the world, and the impossibility of forecasting accurately even the near future preclude the formulation of a definite program to meet conditions a year hence. But the Republican Party reaffirms its belief in the protective principle and pledges itself to a revision of the tariff as soon as conditions shall make it necessary for the preservation of the home market for American labor, agriculture, and industry.

This language suggests the inquiry at the outset: Has the condition of "international balances" become certain and settled? Has the "economic and trade situation of the world" become normal? If not, is it not premature to undertake the "formulation of a definite program"? Is it at this time, when conditions are still unsettled and changing from day to day here and abroad, in many respects material to a fixed policy, "necessary for the preservation of the home market for American labor, agriculture, and industry" that there should be right now a "revision of the tariff"?

It need not be dwelt upon, but we know what the disturbed situation is regarding exchange, how incomplete is the recovery from the world upheaval, in foreign countries particularly, and how dangerous it is to speculate upon the eventual productive or purchasing power of those with whom we would trade.

Surely the proponents of this measure do not propose to confine their vision to the "home market" alone. In view of the fact that we produce a large surplus of agricultural products, for which we must find foreign markets, and because our manufacturing industries can not flourish without an outlet for their goods beyond our borders it must be short-sighted beyond excuse, unreasonably provincial, a ruinous policy, that would ignore or scorn the foreign market. We should preserve as far as possible the "home market" and at the same time we should welcome those who would come to us for the things they need and who must come to us or go hungry and unclothed. Not only so, but we should not make it impossible for them to obtain the things we have in excess of the "home-market" demand.

We have a tariff law. No permanent tariff legislation should be enacted at this time, in view of home and world conditions. Perhaps I should not use the word "permanent," because, although this bill in some form will pass, it will last only until the Democratic Party again comes into power, and that means that it will not be "permanent." It is urged now as though we had no tariff law. We have an established Tariff Commission functioning in good order. We have the tariff act of 1913, which, by reason of the war and its consequences, has had no chance to prove its full value and efficacy. It is, however, in operation, and is serving its purpose of producing revenue without causing or inviting the formation of intolerable trusts and combinations, and without imposing unconscionable burdens on the people such as will result from the operation of the pending measure when enacted.

The baseless fear of "dumping" brought on a sort of hysteria among manufacturers, and we needlessly, as we now know, passed an "antidumping" law. The act of 1913 affords incidental protection and yields revenue, probably not less than this measure will produce. Why not continue it as it is until an equilibrium is reached and experience has shown that there is need of modifications?

ECONOMIC STANDPOINT.

We are told that we must impose a tariff that will equalize the cost of production at home and abroad; that there is danger of flooding the "home market" with goods which have been produced at less cost than our people can produce them. Germany is often instanced as promising competition which we can not meet. Hence we propose by this bill to impose a duty on dolls and toys of 70 per cent of value, while knives, scissors, surgical instruments, and aluminum ware must pay around 60 per cent or more. A tariff of 80 per cent is levied on the value of jewelry. Watches and clocks must pay 50 per cent.

I have before me the Manufacturers' News, of April 27, 1922, which gives a very graphic account of the situation in Germany.

Among other things, it says:

During this past year rentals have increased from 40 per cent to 70 per cent. Postal rates have increased over 400 per cent, railroad rates have increased 300 per cent, and foodstuffs have increased from 150 per cent to 250 per cent. There has also been an increase in the cost of clothing and all other necessities to a much greater extent than is indicated by the figures given above. All these are increases over the prices that prevailed previous to January, 1921, and which were then considerably higher than pre-war prices in the first three items mentioned and from 1,000 per cent to 1,500 per cent in the latter items.

These increases in necessities have already resulted in almost a 150 per cent increase in wages during the past year, and as rents make a further advance, which they eventually will do to a parity with the prices of other necessities, and prices of foodstuffs go up because of the lack of these subsidies that are paid at present and which the Government must eventually abandon, a further increase in wages will have to be paid to enable the wage earner to live and these wages will, of necessity, be comparable to those paid in other countries, regardless of the rate of exchange in marks.

A large proportion of the raw materials used in Germany must be imported by her manufacturers from outside countries at world market prices and the domestic raw materials are only procurable at lower prices because of the lower wages of the producers at the present time. As wages increase, these domestic raw materials will also gradually reach world market prices.

While in all countries where the exchange is normal or almost so, wages and prices are stationary or showing improvement by going down, in Germany, on the contrary, wages and prices are constantly increasing. Last November when the mark went to over 300 to the dollar, prices of all commodities jumped to a very considerable extent and the demand for increased wages was very general. In December, however, when the mark improved to 160 for the dollar, prices did not depreciate any; instead, they continued to increase. Since this last increase in the value of the mark it has again fallen to a little over 200 per dollar, but at the time this was written it was showing some improvement, which may continue through the coming summer. Should it happen that this improvement carries the mark where it stood last July, the price advantage that German manufacturers have enjoyed would be wiped out.

With raw materials at world market prices, railroad and postal rates raised to a point where no Government subsidies will be necessary for the maintenance of these enterprises, and wages increased so that the wage earner can meet the higher cost of living, it is only a question of time when the German manufacturers' productive costs will increase to such an extent that they will reach a normal basis in comparison to those prevailing in other countries. Then, it is only reasonable to suppose, his selling prices will have to be raised in conformity with these productive costs and one dollar's worth of German products will cost a dollar's worth of marks, or as near that equivalent as prevailed during the years previous to 1914. Thus Germany's underselling power will be cut.

Plainly this apprehension of German competition is unfounded and is, ignorantly or purposely, exaggerated. Many of these schedules are directed against Germany, and yet you expect to sell Germany goods, will not accept her mark, and you know she has not the gold with which to buy.

Your position is indefensible, which, however, is the common one throughout this bill. For instance, you impose a duty of 30 cents a bushel on wheat in order to slap Canada in the face, the best foreign market we have, and our next-door neighbor, whereas the price of wheat is fixed in Liverpool and the duty helps the grower not one cent. The same is true as to corn, on which you place a duty of 15 cents a bushel.

You place a duty of 2 cents a pound on hides, and on manufactures of leather not otherwise provided for 40 per cent ad valorem, and on most of the manufactures a great deal more. For instance, men's leather gloves must pay $5 per dozen, and the manufacturer gets the benefit of that tax, which consumers must pay twice over.

In the case of wheat, corn, and hides you hope to deceive the farmer, whom you do not in any wise help but you penalize him in millions of dollars by the real duty on the manufactured goods he must have, which is doubled when it is passed on to him as a consumer's tax. Perhaps he can do without gloves, but furniture he must have, and you tax that 60 per cent of value. There are other things he must have which I will speak of later.

Let me refer to what Mr. Miles said in his statement before the committee, page 5206, part 58. I shall have occasion a little later to refer to Mr. Miles and his very important testimony before the committee. Representing the Fair Tariff League, of which he is president, he said:

The Fair Tariff League includes in its membership representatives of 1,500,000 farmers.

We believe that the farmer, for both moral and economic reasons, must insist that protective rates be moderate both on manufactures and on his own products.

The farmer sells, of necessity, at the lowest prices in the world, being export or world prices. He buys in the dearest market in the world. He sells his wheat in Liverpool at about 80 cents per bushel net and at the same price in the United States. If he could buy his supplies in Europe, many of them under normal conditions would cost him one-third less than in American stores, where imported articles average 50 per cent higher in price than in European stores, because of our tariff. Consequently he too often finds his meager return of 80 cents per bushel depreciated in purchasing power to about 50 cents in this country.

Representing, as he does, 50 per cent of our consuming power, he loses on his purchases $2,000,000,000, or one-half of the $4,000,000,000 of the surcharge in domestic prices due to overprotection. He is in no condition to lose this $2,000,000,000. Strange, indeed, if his leaders permit it to continue in consideration of excessive rates on farm products which for the most part the farmer can not realize on because not even Providence can make our tariff increase export prices.

NATIONAL HOME FOR JEWISH PEOPLE IN PALESTINE.

Mr. LODGE. I report back unanimously from the Committee on Foreign Relations, with amendments, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 191) favoring the establishment in Palestine of the national home for the Jewish people. I shall be very glad to have immediate consideration of it. I certainly shall not keep it before the Senate if there is to be any debate.

Mr. ROBINSON. Let it be read.

The joint resolution was read, and the Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to its consideration as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were, in line 4, after the words "Jewish people," to strike out the words "in accordance with the provisions contained in the declaration of the British Government of November 2, 1917, known as the Balfour declaration"; in line 9, before the word "non-Jewish," to strike out the word "existing"; and in line 10, after the word "Palestine," to strike out the words "or the rights and political status enjoyed by Jews in any other country," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That the United States of America favors the establishment in Palestine of the national home for the Jewish people, it being clearly understood that nothing shall be done which may prejudice the civil and religious rights of non-Jewish communities in Palestine, and that the holy places and religious buildings and sites in Palestine shall be adequately protected.

The amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE TARIFF.

Mr. FLETCHER. I was very glad to yield for the purpose of having that business attended to, which I regard as very appropriate and commendable.

I submit an editorial from the Florida Times-Union of April 28, 1922, entitled "Deceiving the farmers." I ask leave to have it inserted without reading.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DECEIVING THE FARMERS.

[From Florida Times-Union, April 28, 1922.]

The tariff bill introduced a few days ago could not be passed without the consent of Senators representing the classes it will rob. As a class the farmers will be the chief sufferers, but members of the agricultural bloc have been brought to support the bill by alleged concessions to farmers that will do them no good whatever.

An emergency tariff bill was passed about a year ago purporting to give protection to agricultural products. Did it cause any increase in values of the products on which duties were imposed? As a matter of fact, the products on which duties were imposed declined for a considerable time after the tariff went into effect, and the decline was not stopped until a great shortage in the wheat crop was discovered.

Of course, the price of farm products did not decline because duties were imposed on them, but they declined despite the fact that duties were imposed, and the duty did not interfere in the slightest with their decline. The farmers of this country had for sale more wheat, more corn, more meat animals, more potatoes—in fact, more of nearly every agricultural product than were needed in this country, and they were numbered by the millions and were competing with each other. The result was that the prices of these products were lower in the United States than anywhere else in the Northern Hemisphere. The tariff could not add to the price at which they were sold in foreign countries, and if they were sold lower at home than abroad, as was the case, the tariff had no effect on the prices received at home.

The United States also manufactures more iron and steel products than the American people need, and yet these products bring a higher price in this country than they do anywhere else. Why is this? It is because the iron and steel manufacturers are comparatively few and can combine, and do combine. They charge what the tariff allows them in this country and ship their surplus and sell it for whatever they can get beyond the tariff wall. They are enabled to sell the foreigner cheap products because they are permitted by the tariff to charge the American people excessive prices, thus making Americans help to pay for what the foreigner buys.

More clothing is made in this country than the people buy, but the price paid for it in this country is almost twice as high as abroad. It is because the manufacturers, few in number, can combine and do combine to extort excessive prices from the people.

The passage of this bill will strengthen every trust in the United States, and if the public are reluctant to buy at the prices they will charge they will close down factories and throw workmen out of employment in order to restrict the product to what the people will buy at extravagant prices.

Mr. FLETCHER. With reference to our trade with Canada, this brief editorial from the Tampa Tribune of April 28, 1922, is as applicable to this tariff bill now pending as to the emergency tariff act. It is as follows:

A COSTLY WALL—FOR THE UNITED STATES.

[From Tampa Tribune, April 28, 1922.]

When the fathers made the Constitution they were careful to forbid the imposition of a tax upon exports. They couldn't foresee that the zeal of the tariff makers would bring about all the evils of an export tax without affording the Government the revenue.

The people of Canada like to do business with the people of the United States. The result of their recent election was, in part, an expression of their desire for closer trade relations. But on this side they find the "emergency tariff" wall erected against them and they are forced to turn away.

The effect has been a restriction, not only upon the imports from Canada, which, of course, the tariff advocates desired, but a much greater restriction upon our exports to Canada, which can not but result in great loss to every interest of the United States. The calculation of an accurate observer recently made shows that "for every dollar of American trade lost by Canada through the operation of the American high tariff the United States has lost up to date and stands to lose in the future two dollars of Canadian trade." The loss in American exports to Canada is nearly $400,000,000.

And the damage is not that merely of the present. The trade driven away is seeking other markets and establishing connections which bid fair to be permanent. It is a heavy price to pay for a very doubtful measure of protection.

It is most regrettable that in this uncalled for way we adopt a policy which will result in unnecessarily restricting our trade with our good neighbor and friend to the disadvantage and hurt of both of us.

There are numerous other absurd and inconsistent features in the bill.

One of those would be ludicrous if the matter were not so serious. In the frank statement of the chairman of the committee when laying the bill before us, he said, "It will not alone bring a revival of business; there must be a reduction of costs to within the reach of the consumer's pocketbook before there can be a return to old-time prosperity."

You may call up the spirits, but will they come?

If this legislation does not increase prices, it surely will disappoint its framers. Its actual and intended effect, as is the case with all protective tariff legislation, is to increase prices, where different and competitive conditions would exist without such tariff. Otherwise there would be no point to it. The reason for it would be absurd. What basis can there be, then, for the expression that there "must be a reduction in costs."

An increase in costs is the whole idea of the tariff. The tariff is a tax which the consumer must pay, and it is added to the cost of the article he buys where it affords protection as this bill permits. It is intended to keep away from the consumer commodities which sell at a lower price than the tariff makers want. It is to permit the special privilege interests to set a price on their goods and with a tariff protect them from goods that would cost less. The Republican idea is not so much to provide revenue as it is to protect for higher prices, and that produces monopoly, and to say that prosperity will not come from it is not only an admission of its futility but rather adds to the injury suffered by the people who must pay the bill.

It will of course not aid but retard prosperity. Living costs instead of falling will rise. The people who have endured much must expect to endure more. How patiently remains to be seen. The cost of protection to consumers and the Government revenue derived should be considered in connection with this bill.

Confining discussion to some of the important schedules of the bill and some of the items in common use, I wish to submit a table showing the cost of protection to consumer and the Government revenue derived for the calendar year 1919, the cost to consumer and revenue collected for the fiscal year 1914 under the Payne-Aldrich law, and the revenue collected for the calendar year 1920. This table covers 29 industries, embracing those who are crying loudest for protection.

It will be noted that under the Underwood-Simmons law, covering the calendar year 1919, the cost to consumer is invariably greater than for the year 1914. This is because of the unusual high prices prevailing, due to postwar conditions. It will also be noted that the cost to consumer is just double the protection allowed to manufacturers. This holds good in every industry with the exception of sugar, it being assumed, of course, that the domestic manufacturer avails himself of full tariff protection.

In other words, the consumer is paying twice what the Government is supposed to get by reason of the protective tariff. Under the column "Revenue collected" the figures shown represent the amount of revenue collected that actually went into the Treasury. It will be interesting to note that the totals show that so far as these 29 industries are concerned the protection allowed to domestic manufacturers was $2,663,000,000; the cost to consumer, assuming that the full tariff allowance was used, was $4,741,000,000, while the revenue actually collected was but $53,200,000. That illustrates the operation of the tariff bill if it is enacted into law. The articles which are mentioned in the table cover wool, manufactures of; cotton, manufactures of; silk; cutlery and edge tools; lead, ore bullion, pig, manufactures of; aluminum ware; chocolate and cocoa; collars and cuffs; corsets; umbrellas and canes; wires, wirework, rope, and so forth; glassware, including plate and window glass; oilcloth and linoleum; paints and varnishes; asbestos, manufactured; furs; clocks and watches; glucose and grape sugar; starch; hosiery and knit goods; earthen, stone, and china ware; gloves, leather; files; buttons; automobiles; toys and games; carpets and rugs; men's shirts; hardware.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I understand the Senator has said that the customs tax on these articles within one year paid into the United States Treasury was only $53,000,000.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is correct.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. How does the Senator figure that the cost to the consumer was greater than that?

Mr. FLETCHER. The figures show that the protection allowed to consumers and manufacturers in this schedule on these articles or commodities amounted to $2,663,000,000. The experience and information of the experts and those who have knowledge of the subject is that the amount is practically doubled when it reaches the consumer, and that the consumer had to pay, if the manufacturers took advantage of the whole tariff allowed them. $4,741,000,000.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator reaches that by computing the percentage of tariff on each particular article and doubling it as the profit put on by the manufacturer?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; practically double. The table is furnished me by experts from the committee, and, of course, I must rely upon it. It is practically a duplicate of the table furnished by Mr. Miles in part 58, page 5268, of the hearings before the Finance Committee. I omit in this table the first column which I find in the Miles table, under the head of "Tariff allowance to manufacturers," and give simply the cost to consumer if the tariff allowance is used and the revenue collected in each instance as to 1914 and 1919.

One of the most interesting witnesses before the Finance Committee, and one of the, if not the, fairest, was Mr. H. E. Miles, and I want to call more particular attention to his statement. Mr. Miles, as I have stated, is president of the Fair Tariff League. He said in his statement:

> The Fair Tariff League is composed wholly of protectionists, manufacturers, representatives of 1,500,000 farmers and wage earners, women's associations, merchants, and others. We believe absolutely in our American institutions, in the vigor and strength of our people, and as protectionists we believe that every American industry that is worth while should have the utmost fair consideration of Congress.
> We are thoroughly opposed to excessive rates, knowing them to be tremendously injurious to the national interest. We find many industries operating under excessive tariff rates that are no more "protection" than burglary is honest work. This is the judgment, as nearly as I know, of the majority of the manufacturers of the United States, only a few of whom press Congress for excessive rates that let them overcharge the American people.

Mr. Miles said that he himself is a lifelong manufacturer at Racine, Wis.; a manufacturer and merchant for 25 years, making wagons and carriages, and then agricultural implements, owning and managing one of the four largest carriage factories in the country, four retail houses, and six or eight wholesale houses. This statement, therefore, comes from a manufacturer, a protectionist, who represents in his association or league the idea of protection. I submit it is entitled to very considerable weight.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, I did not hear the Senator very well. I would like to ask from whom he is quoting?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. H. E. Miles, chairman of the Fair Tariff League, of Racine, Wis.

Mr. McLEAN. I assume the Senator from Florida does not believe in a protective tariff and I will say to him that Mr. Miles likewise does not. Though he claims possibly to believe in a protective tariff, he insists that the present law—that is, the Underwood Act—is a protective tariff, whereas the sponsors for that act, especially the then chairman of the Committee on Finance [Mr. SIMMONS] frankly announced when the bill was passed that it was not a protective tariff and that the theory to equalize the difference in the cost here and abroad was repudiated by the committee. Mr. Miles, I think, at one time was in business. He is not in business now and has not been for years. Whether he failed in business or not I do not know, but any manufacturer who adheres to his view in this country will soon fail in business.

Mr. FLETCHER. With regard to the present law I am quite prepared to agree with Mr. Miles that there is at least incidental protection in it and such as ought to be sufficient to satisfy the reasonably exacting producers and manufacturers.

Mr. McLEAN. If there is incidental protection, no credit is due for that fact to the committee because the committee frankly stated that they did not intend the act to be a protective measure.

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course, it was not framed upon the idea of it being protective tariff legislation. It was framed with the idea of producing the greatest amount of revenue with the least burden upon the people.

Mr. McLEAN. Does the Senator from Florida believe in a protective tariff?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not. I do not claim that; but I am speaking with reference to the legislation to which the Senator is referring and which he said Mr. Miles mentioned.

Mr. McLEAN. If the Senator will look up the history of the gentleman he is quoting, he will find that whilst he said he believes in a protective tariff he represents a lot of free traders at this time.

Mr. FLETCHER. I of course must be governed by what Mr. Miles himself stated before the committee as to himself, his business, his relatives, his views, and I do not find anything in the record that in any wise contradicts him. I submit that his statement is eminently reasonable and fair, and he gives facts to support his contention. He evidently understands the subject; he expresses himself clearly and admirably and frankly.

This table, which is, as I said, practically what Mr. Miles furnished to the committee, I ask to have incorporated in the record at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida asks unanimous consent to have incorporated as a portion of his remarks the table which he has described. In the absence of objection that order will be made.

The table referred to is as follows:

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I want to call attention to what Mr. Miles submitted by way of comment upon these various articles and the duties upon them and the revenue derived from them without perhaps taking up all of them, because that would require rather more time than I would feel justified in consuming. I do, however, want to refer to what he has said regarding the principal items. At page 5245, for instance, he took up the first one, wool and manufactures thereof. Mr. Miles there said:

> In 1919 labor got 15.6 per cent of the factory selling price, and yet the tariff was 31.6 per cent, or twice the total wage, except that these wage percentages are averages and include some simple processes. The wage percentage on cloth is about 20 per cent of the factory selling price.

He is dealing here with the proposition about making the tariff such as to equalize the cost of production at home and abroad, and showing that as to these articles the duties are so high that the tariff more than covers the total wage cost in their production. Not merely the difference between the wage cost abroad and here, but the total wage cost is more than covered by the duties imposed.

> Remember that these rates apply on the foreigner's cost of material, labor, and overhead, plus his profit, and that material is half the total cost of production.
> Present tariff rates are so high that very little is imported, and domestic makers can and do put their prices where they choose in good times. Investigation in one of the great department stores of the country failed to find a single yard of woolen dress goods from abroad. All the fabrics, plaids, blue serge, etc., for women's dresses were domestic products. Their buyer was just back from Europe without making purchases, because prices there, plus the duty, were prohibitive.
> To illustrate, a certain piece of men's wool suiting, costing $1.71 in England, costs $2.89 duty paid in New York. The price of a duplicate American product is $2.85, not because of American costs, as we are compelled to believe, but because the tariff permits of this high price. Under the proposed American valuation clause the duty hereafter would be on the $2.85 price, which would bring the imported cloth up to $3.40, when the domestic goods might advance to $3.25, which would be the basis for the next importation, and so on.

I do not wish to indulge in any discussion of the proposal to base the duties on the American valuation plan, because that has not been adopted by the committee reporting the pending bill. However, Mr. Miles further says:

An authority on woolen goods tells us that the average farmer and wage earner is clad in winter in a cotton worsted suit that is 40 per cent cotton, 30 per cent shoddy, and 30 per cent wool; in underwear that is 80 per cent cotton; and a rag-shoddy overcoat. We know that this was substantially true before the war, and will be true again. The advancing price of wool puts a great premium on this adulteration. At best the wool tariff only makes doctors' bills for the farmer; not a cent of profit, as we will show.

The specific duty on these mixed goods is 45 cents per pound on the basis that they are all wool. We submit that this is grossly unfair. It gives the manufacturer two-thirds of the weight duty in many cases, sometimes more, which duty is intended for the farmer only. Blanket manufacturers are insisting that blankets of all cotton with a little shoddy be assessed as if all wool.

Discussing this matter further, he says:

In the normal pre-war year 1914 our woolen manufacturers had 94.5 per cent of all domestic business, imports being only 6.5 per cent. In 1919 they had 99.1 per cent of all domestic business. In 1920 they had 97.4 per cent, and imports were in the nature of novelties either in design or quality.

When they ask for greater restrictions on imports, higher duty, and a congressional sanction to further raise their prices it is time to question whether this country belongs to the people who constitute it or to the manufacturers.

Figuring on the basis of the Tariff Commission's statement, that domestic prices tend to at least equal the foreign price plus the duty, it is fairly estimated that the tariff protection granted the wool manufacturers—not including makers of carpets and wearing apparel—in 1914 was $192,000,000 above foreign prices; in 1919, $214,000,000, while the Fordney bill would give them $240,000,000, with all these amounts doubled at retail to the consumer.

This is his view based on his experience, observation, and study of this question, that the amount which the tariff makes possible for the benefit of the manufacturer is doubled by the time the goods reach the consumer. Reading further:

Against these enormous sums the Government collected from customs duties on imports of these woolen goods only $2,900,000 in 1919 and $8,600,000 in 1920.

The consumers had to pay $214,000,000 in 1919 and the Government received in revenue only $2,900,000. Now, Mr. Miles says:

These enormous sums to manufacturers, with relatively no return to the Government, were voted on the supposition that they protected the most efficient wage earners in the world, who got only 20 per cent of the factory sales price. The difference in the wage cost per yard produced here and abroad is, of course, only a fraction of the total American wage cost.

The principle of protection is expressed in the declaration of the Republican Party in 1908 that each duty shall measure only "the difference in the cost of production here and abroad," figured with reasonable liberality. It seems impossible that Congress will continue the present charge on woolen goods against the consuming public of over half a billion dollars per year in the face of these figures, and do so only upon the general and interested statements of the would-be beneficiaries, who could easily submit their cost books, and withhold costs only because their submission would enormously reduce their tariff privileges.

Passing on, for instance, to cutlery and edge tools, in which the people are greatly interested, Mr. Miles says:

Some domestic cutlery manufacturers say we are the cheapest makers in the world of common table and kitchen cutlery.

One manufacturer of cutlery goods says Germany produces more cheaply. The special provision against the unusual German situation is doubtless needed here.

A good English 6-inch butcher knife costs $2.13 per dozen at the English factory, and $2.87 in New York, duty paid. A better made knife is sold by two American makers for $1.50, which indicates a low production cost and a wage cost of very few cents per knife. The Fordney duty on these would be twice the American manufacturer's selling price. We exported of table cutlery only in the first nine months of 1921, $1,082,662, or three times as much as our entire imports of all kinds of cutlery taken together, being $312,000, of which $205,475 came from Germany. There has been a considerable decline in both imports and exports of cutlery in the last three months. We exported 48.9 per cent of all domestic production of table cutlery in 1919, and in 1920 71 per cent of 1919 production.

Speaking with reference to edge tools and miscellaneous cutlery, he says:

In edge tools and miscellaneous cutlery exports far exceed imports. Our shears (usually 5 inches or more in length, with blank handles) are both the best and cheapest in the world, and have no competitors in any market. Protection is needed on high-grade cutlery, fine scissors, penknives, and like goods.

With reference to files, Mr. Miles says:

Files: Ordinary sizes and kinds made so cheaply here that our makers freely export them, sending 25.2 per cent of the entire production of 1919 abroad, and a still greater amount in 1920, while imports were only 1.8 per cent in 1914 with its normal pre-war conditions, and 0.4 per cent in 1920. These imports were especially fine and small patterns which our people do not like to make. In 1914 the wages in the file industry were only 38 per cent of the selling price, and yet the Payne duties were 56.1 per cent. In 1919 wages were 30.2 per cent and the tariff 25 per cent.

Investigation indicates a single ownership of many factories operating under separate names; price agreements for many years, or at least closely related prices.

In 1908 under the 56 per cent protection of the Payne law the file people charged 60 per cent more for domestic use than they charged foreigners. To-day they are exporting at 20 per cent under domestic prices. The large volume of their exports and their special discount thereon indicate the need of no protection on standard sizes.

After giving the file makers control of the domestic market to the possible cost to the consumer of $8,000,000 in 1919 the Government collected in duties only $10,000, and $30,000 in 1920.

At page 5256 of this document Mr. Miles discusses aluminum, with reference to which he says:

Aluminum is made substantially as cheaply here as abroad. The domestic production is controlled by a single corporation, which charges 24 cents per pound for the refined metal as against a price of 15 cents per pound made in England at the same cost. The American corporation began business with almost no capital. It has accumulated $70,000,000. The elements of cost are, in order of their importance, freight, material, fuel, and labor. The wage cost of refining is very little. The trust is said to make it unpleasant for Americans who buy the English metal at 15 cents instead of the American metal at 24 cents. The trust wants 5 cents per pound protection.

With reference to aluminum ware, he further says:

Aluminum ware: Production increased from $19,600,000 in 1914 to $75,000,000 in 1919, the increase being mostly in prices, imports virtually embargoed, being 0.03 per cent in 1919 and 1.1 per cent in 1920. The protection given the industry in 1914 was 20.4 per cent, or $6,000,000, and in 1919, $13,000,000, against a total wage of $15,773,254, or 21 per cent of the factory prices of the product, while the House bill would make the protection $22,000,000. Imports virtually embargoed, customs receipts being $200,000 in 1920.

I am quite sure the Senate committee bill does not lower the duty which is carried in the House bill on aluminum ware. I find the duty in paragraph 374 on aluminum ware, and so forth, is 5 cents per pound. The Finance Committee of the Senate makes no change in the provisions of the House bill in reference to that article. Ware that is made of aluminum is very important to the people of this country, and the industry should not be put into the hands of a trust or a combination to such an extent that the people will be taxed an exorbitant rate while the Government will not receive any appreciable benefit from the tax.

Take, for instance, collars and cuffs, paragraph 918 of the bill. Let us see what that duty is. Those articles might be classified as necessities. Under the bill as it came from the House the provision is:

Shirt collars and cuffs, of cotton, not specially provided for, 25 cents per dozen pieces and 12½ per cent ad valorem.

The Finance Committee of the Senate proposes to change that by striking out "25" and inserting "35," and striking out "12½" and inserting "15," so that the duty would be 35 cents per dozen pieces as to shirt collars and cuffs of cotton and 15 per cent ad valorem in addition; so that they propose to raise the duty. Now, let us see what Mr. Miles says about that item, on page 5253 of Document No. 58.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, before the Senator leaves the aluminum schedule, let me ask him is not the tariff under the present law 2 cents a pound?

Mr. FLETCHER. That is my recollection.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have just turned to it, and I find that it is. Is it not a fact that under this tariff the aluminum industry has been very prosperous and a number of great fortunes have been made out of it?

Mr. FLETCHER. That is unquestionably true, according to the statement of Mr. Miles, and I know nothing to the contrary. He says:

The American corporation began business with almost no capital and that it has accumulated $70,000,000.

And he refers to it as if it were already a trust; and, of course, if these high duties go on the wall will be built so high that it is inevitable that the whole production will be controlled by this organization.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I will state to the Senator that at the time the present tariff law was written—the law of 1913—very exhaustive hearings were given on the subject of aluminum. It was gone into by the committee very thoroughly. It was an article on which some revenue could be raised; and there is no doubt in the world that the present rate, established then, was an adequate rate as long as they were willing to have any competition at all. It seems clear to me that the raise in this bill to 5 cents can be for no other purpose than to shut off foreign competition entirely. It will have only that effect.

Mr. FLETCHER. I thank the Senator for his reference to the subject and for the information which he gives us. I have not any question but that this rate will eliminate practically all revenue and put these people in a position that will give them an absolute monopoly as to prices. It looks that way, very clearly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Some of the basic patents in this industry have expired, my information is, since the present tariff law was written, and of course on the basic patent that would give an opportunity for competition; but, as a rule, these basic patents are supplemented by patents that are added from time to time that make it very difficult for one to go into the industry, even where the basic patent has expired. The result is that they practically have a monopoly now, with no competition except foreign competition.

Mr. FLETCHER. I take it that the Senator regards this proposed increase in the duty as indefensible under those circumstances.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Undoubtedly.

Mr. FLETCHER. It occurs to me so.

Going on further with this matter of collars and cuffs, Mr. Miles says:

These collars formerly retailed at 2 for 25 cents, now 20 cents each, made of two thicknesses of ordinary cotton costing 19 cents a yard and 16 cents a few months ago.

Then he produces a sample and observes:

The price of the cotton is the same here as in Europe. There is almost no waste in the cutting. The face of the collar used to be made wrong side out and then turned and a second line of stitching run around. Now brass clamps so hold the unsewn pieces of cloth together that the needle zips around once, and all is done. There is nowhere in the world any cheaper production.

These collars can be bought from English factories for $1.20 a dozen, but the English goods would cost $2.10 here duty paid. This lets the American manufacturer charge what he will up to $2.10 per dozen wholesale. He does charge $1.60. He pays 70 cents a dozen for cutting, sewing, and ironing, or slightly under 6 cents per collar.

The labor in the collar and cuff industry was 24.2 per cent in 1914 and 15.6 per cent in 1919.

That is the total labor cost—not merely the difference between the foreign and domestic cost but the total labor cost.

The present tariff gives 30 per cent protection, or twice the wage in the industry, and the House bill would add 50 per cent to that duty. The protection given the industry in 1914 was $7,000,000, in 1919, $11,000,000, and the Fordney bill would make it $17,000,000. All these amounts would be about doubled to the consumer. Testimony before the House committee indicated great profits in the industry. Against these huge sums the Government collected the petty total of $20,000 in 1919 and $40,000 in 1920.

Think of that duty on collars and cuffs, the protection cost to the consumers being $11,000,000 and the Government getting out of it a revenue of $40,000 in 1920!

I find nothing at all to contradict these statements, and Mr. Miles goes into such detail about the matter and is so positive and clear about the facts that I can not question in any way what he says, or argue with him about it. He makes it perfectly plain; and in view of these facts it is ridiculous, it is absurd to insist upon these duties.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. FLETCHER. In just one minute. As I believe I read from paragraph 918 of the bill as now reported to the Senate, shirt collars and cuffs of cotton, not specially provided for, bear a duty of 35 cents per dozen pieces and 15 per cent ad valorem on top of that.

I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I merely wanted to state that after Mr. Miles gave that testimony before the Finance Committee no one appeared to contradict his statement, and so far as this record shows, if I am correctly informed about it and sufficiently familiar with it, there is absolutely nothing in the entire record taken either by the House Ways and Means Committee or by the Finance Committee of the Senate to contradict in any way the statement made by Mr. Miles, as the Senator has been referring to it.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am obliged to the Senator for making that statement. I know he has been a most diligent and energetic member of the Finance Committee. I am not a member of the committee at all, but I have tried to read the hearings and keep up as best I could with the matter. I have not been able to find anything contradicting Mr. Miles, and I am glad to be assured by the Senator from New Mexico that his statement here stands undisputed in this record.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, it would seem from this big advance in the tariff on a very productive article, collars, that this is where the consumer "gets it in the neck." [Laughter.]

Mr. FLETCHER. That may depend a little bit on the kind of collar, but I have no doubt that that is, figuratively speaking, the case. He gets it in the ribs as well as in the neck. He gets it in his stomach, on his back, in all his vitals under this bill.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I think I may state further that of all the witnesses who came before the Finance Committee to explain any of the schedules regarding this bill, Mr. Miles, in my judgment, has by far more facts and more detailed information regarding the general bill and the especial matters to which he referred than any other witness who appeared before the committee. I do not think I ever talked with anybody who seemed to have more detailed facts regarding the tariff and its operation, not only now but in the past, than Mr. Miles. He himself is also a manufacturer and has been for years, and it has been his business for some years to make a special study of tariff legislation, and I do not know of anyone who is better able to give information on this subject than Mr. Miles, to whom the Senator from Florida is now referring.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the Senator confirms the impression which I obtained in reading over very carefully, more than once, Mr. Miles's very forceful statement. He talks like a man who knows what he is talking about. I think he is absolutely sincere, he means to be thoroughly fair and reasonable, and he presents the matter in a very clear and able way.

The next article on this list to which I was referring is corsets. I pretend to know very little about that subject, and I shall not take a great deal of time in considering it; but perhaps it would be in order to give Mr. Miles's statement regarding it, as this refers to what I understand to be a very useful if not an absolutely necessary article, and a great many people in this country are deeply interested in it. He says, at page 5265, under the head of "Corsets":

Production, $75,537,000 in 1919. Imports, one-tenth of 1 per cent in pre-war, 1914, and two one-hundredths of 1 per cent in 1920. The industry evidently has complete control of the domestic market under the present duty of 30 to 60 per cent, with a wage cost of 17.3 per cent, or, say, half of the duty. The industry is closely organized, in few hands, and produces at low costs.

Protection given in 1919, $53,000,000; this amount to be doubled at retail if the manufacturers use their protection, as they easily may.

I might add, as they undoubtedly will. Think of that, proposing to continue a duty of 30 to 60 per cent on corsets, when the total wage cost is only 17.3 per cent, and when the importations in 1920 were only two-tenths of 1 per cent. As the Senator from Nebraska suggests, this is where the consumer gets squeezed. That may depend also on the character of the article; but they get "trimmed" up, anyhow. The proposal in this bill, Mr. President, to tax the consumers of this article in this country over $50,000,000 a year, in order to keep out all importations and give the manufacturers a monopoly of the home market, is certainly without any excuse or justification whatsoever.

I turn now to the next item, umbrellas and canes, very useful articles; umbrellas, particularly, are almost necessary. Mr. Miles make reference to them at page 5265 of this document, No. 58 of the hearings. He says:

Umbrellas, parasols, canes, sticks, etc.: Production in 1914, $14,000,000; in 1919, $25,307,000. Imports negligible, being 1.6 per cent in 1914 and 0.8 in 1920. Wage per cent in 1914, 15.7 per cent, and in 1919, 13.2 per cent, against which the present tariff averages 34.4 per cent on umbrellas and parasols and 30 per cent on canes and sticks. Protection given in 1919, $6,000,000, which doubles at retail.

Think of that, not merely the difference between the cost of production abroad and at home but the total wage cost in this industry in 1919 was only 13.2 per cent, and yet the tariff averages 34.4 per cent. The tariff is nearly double the total wage cost in this industry. The importations are practically nil, amounting in 1920 to only 0.8 per cent, so that already the manufacturers have the home market. There are no importations. They need no protection, and imposing these duties simply enables them to raise their prices to the home consumers.

The next item is wire, wirework, and rope. Those are very important articles. Wire is used very extensively in the building of fences and for other construction purposes. The price has gone up almost beyond reach. Wood is fast disappearing. Timber is gradually passing beyond the reach of people who would build fences, and they are resorting to the use of wire for that purpose. Farmers, country people as well as city people, are more than ever using this very necessary article. It is fair to say that barbed wire, plain or galvanized, is still carried on the free list. I refer to paragraph 317 of this bill (H. R. 7456), where the duty is one-half of 1 cent per pound. Let us see how that subject is treated.

On page 5261 of this pamphlet Mr. Miles has this to say about wire:

Wire, wire rope, and wirework: Production in 1914, $82,000,000; in 1919, $162,000,000. Exports in 1914, 16.3 per cent, and in 1919 and 1920, 32 per cent, while imports were negligible, being 1.2 per cent; in 1914, 0.6 per cent. Protection given the industry, $35,000,000, costing consumers $70,000,000 in 1920, with customs receipts $200,000. As all ordinary steel is made as cheaply here as anywhere, undoubtedly the tariff is used against the consumer. For over 30 years our steel people have shipped abroad at far less than domestic prices, while usually holding domestic prices to foreign prices plus the duty, and often plus ocean freight.

Think of that. People everywhere engaged in agriculture, engaged in raising chickens, or what not, absolutely need this article. It is proposed to make it cost them millions of dollars, without any comparative benefit to the Government whatever.

Mr. Miles says the protection given the industry was $35,000,000, costing the consumers seventy million in 1920, and the customs receipts amounted to only $200,000.

With reference to glassware, including plate and window glass, at page 5254 of this pamphlet, Mr. Miles says:

Glassware, including plate and window glass, glass cutting, mirrors, and optical goods: Production in 1914, $168,000,000, rising in 1919 to $385,000,000. We produce plate glass in this country as cheaply as anywhere in the world, coal being a large factor, and cheaper here than elsewhere, and still more economically where we use natural gas, as in some plants. We produced 70,000,000 square feet of plate glass in 1921 and imported only 3,000,000 square feet, the latter being of superior quality that we do not care to produce, for fine mirrors, etc. The plate-glass tariff has been one of the worst in our history. It is virtually a trust.

In the Dingley days it secured rates running from 50 to 150 per cent, whereupon it doubled many of its prices against domestic consumers and warned its customers that they must not buy abroad even those sizes which could be brought in to advantage after the trust had increased its prices.

I asked a plate-glass merchant about this. He said, "Yes; I got one of those notices, and it took me several days to answer it. But I saw I would lose my business unless I yielded, so I sent the promise and a memorandum of the orders I had already abroad, with a promise not to order any more."

He said the trust later advised customers to order ahead liberally, as prices were going up. They so ordered, and then, instead of raising prices, they were cut 35 per cent.

What an example of "American" valuation we would have had here had it then been in effect.

Common window glass and the like is made very cheaply in this country, and the freight itself is a considerable protection from abroad.

Then he proceeded to discuss pressed glass and other kinds of glass, and stated:

One of the biggest manufacturers in America told me in 1908, when we were before the Payne committee, that he had a wholesale house in London that cost him $10,000 a year; that he sold pressed glass pretty freely over Europe and added the cost of his London house to his American prices. When the McKinley tariff was being written this gentleman and some of his competitors recommended that pressed glass be put upon the free list. But it came out in the law 65 per cent protected, and in such uncertain language that the makers themselves were bothered to find out what the rate was.

Some optical goods are coming in from Germany under depreciated currency at a very low price, quite destructive, apparently, of our production.

The extent to which domestic producers dominate the home markets is shown by imports in 1920 of only 2.2 per cent of all kinds of glass put together, while exports were 8 per cent, or $30,086,000.

The total wages paid in the glassware industry are only 28.3 per cent of the selling price, while the present duty averaged 35.2 per cent, and the House bill would double or treble these duties.

The industry was given protection to the extent of $100,000,000 in 1919, which would become $200,000,000 at retail, against which the Government collected in duties only $600,000, and $2,000,000 in 1920.

The House bill would greatly increase this sum.

I need not dwell upon that item further. We might pass to another one which is also important, oilcloth and linoleum. At page 5258 Mr. Miles discusses that. I will read very briefly from his statement, as follows:

Oilcloth and linoleum: Prices to-day of imported and domestic products indicate that little duty is needed. At present exchange the British factories' price inlaid linoleums, landed in New York, duty and all expenses paid, at $1.80 net for No. 1 gauge, $1.53 for No. 2 gauge, and $1.33 for No. 3 gauge, the present duty being 35 per cent.

Domestic inlaid linoleum of substantially the same quality is priced by one leading factory at $1.23 for No. 1 gauge, and by another factory $1.31 for No. 1 gauge.

The price of No. 1 gauge at the English mill to-day is $1.30, as against $1.23 for an American product at an American mill.

British costs are said to be two and one-half to three times the pre-war level, a competent day laborer getting $5.50 per week in 1914 now getting $13.75 commonly throughout England. Machine repairing costs three to four times more than pre-war. Ocean freights are more than doubled.

Prices in the United States were doubled over pre-war in 1918–1920.

So that this theory about wages going down in other countries does not hold good in some, at least, of the principal industries.

Paragraph 1018 carries the item "linoleum, including corticine and cork carpet," on which the House fixed a rate of 28 per cent ad valorem, and on floor oilcloth 20 per cent ad valorem. The Senate committee proposes to change these figures so that linoleum, including corticine and cork carpet, shall carry a duty of 35 per cent ad valorem, and floor oilcloth shall carry a duty of 25 per cent ad valorem.

Nearly every citizen is interested in paints and varnishes. Mr. Miles's statement in connection with paints and varnishes is most interesting. At page 5257 of the hearings he said:

Paints and varnishes: Production increased from $146,000,000 in 1914 to $351,000,000 in 1919, being largely an increase in prices only. Exports in 1920, $28,600,000, with imports only $3,200,000, or 0.9 per cent. The per cent of wages in the industry is only 6.9 per cent of the price of the product. With the wage so small, there can be substantially no difference in cost of production here and abroad. The present tariff is 11.4 per cent, giving the industry, in 1919, $36,000,000 protection and costing consumers, if used, up to $72,000,000, against which customs receipts were $100,000 in 1919 and $400,000 in 1920.

I operated a paint factory for 15 years to supply my carriage factory. There was so little labor in it that I never stopped to figure it. The percentage of wages in the paint and varnish industry is, all told, 6.9 per cent. Protection is 11.4 per cent. They did not care enough about any protection to pay their respects to either tariff committee of Congress.

Asking for nothing, the paint and varnish people were surprised to find the House bill giving them 25 per cent, and American valuation further increasing this to from 50 to 80 per cent. A little like the soap people, who said they didn't mind particularly, but would be content to have 5 per cent, so the House bill gave them 20 per cent American valuation.

Senator LA FOLLETTE. They were just carried in on the flood?

Mr. MILES. Just carried in on the flood; but not hurt like the cottonseed oil makers who recently begged Congress to take their protection against foreign vegetable oils away; that it is ruining them. Rather like the automobile people who asked for 30 per cent, and made no objection when asked if less would do. The House bill made it 30 per cent American valuation, which means 45 per cent.

Linseed oil: If this is going to be highly protected now, the paint people will have to have some protection on paint products taking linseed. You know of the oil joker in the linseed proposal, whereby the crusher gets a drawback on the flaxseed cake, so that the net to the farmer is 1½ cents per bushel less under the new bill than the old, and the net to the crusher is 600 per cent more than he gets now.

Senator LA FOLLETTE. That is helping to prosper agriculture?

Mr. MILES. There must be exceptions, you see, Senator, like this Linseed Trust of seven companies, Standard Oil domination, says Moody in "The Trusts." It has always been a child of the tariff except for the Underwood law. Under the Dingley law it had 50 per cent protection, with only 3 per cent of its selling price going to labor. With Congress thus preventing importations, the trust charged American consumers, according to the census of 1905, $27,577,152 for that year's product, and exported at international prices $203,712, against imports of $5,712, paying $2,856 duty. The House bill returns to about that situation, but less openly. It gives 25 cents duty per bushel on flaxseed, with about one-fourth of the duty returned on the flaxseed cake exported and made from imported seed, although flaxseed cake generally is free. This makes the flaxseed duty net 18.5 cents, instead of the present 20 cents, while the duty on the oil at 2.5 cents per pound equals 45 cents per bushel of seed and nets the crusher 26 cents above the flaxseed duty, on an operation as simple as brewing tea, with a labor cost to-day of only 2.5 per cent of the crusher's selling price.

That is the observation of a man who has been actually engaged in the industry and the figures are unquestioned, so far as I can find.

ATTORNEY GENERAL DAUGHERTY.

Mr. CARAWAY. Will the Senator from Florida yield to me for a few moments?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, yesterday I had occasion to repeat what I thought was a pretty well-founded rumor with reference to the Attorney General's connection with the pardoning of Morse. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] entered as a denial what lawyers call a negative pregnant. He denied specifically that the Attorney General had accepted directly a "fee" to procure Morse's pardon, but did not deny what was in effect the charge that the Attorney General was interested in procuring the pardon for Morse and had been paid for it. I do not know what the facts are. I know the denial of the Senator from Indiana left room for the supposition that there was a connection between the Attorney General and Morse in the matter of the pardon.

The Attorney General this morning is quoted in the papers as saying that he ought to have a place on the floor of the House and Senate so that he might "answer irresponsible people." If he answered all the people who charge him with offenses, more or less grave, he would be the busiest member of the Cabinet. Two members of his own party in the House recently charged him with offenses and, if they meant what they said, they intended, unless he should act, to move to have him impeached and removed from office. He immediately got busy, I presume, to avoid action upon their part. Whether he was afraid or suddenly had waked up to his duty I do not know and I do not care.

He said in conclusion that he did not have time to talk politics. I did not know that he had anything else to do. He has "fired," as I understand, all the honest inspectors in his department who had called his attention to the swindlers of the Government that he did not want to prosecute. If any of them are left, I do not know their names. He has put back into office the physician who helped, on a fraudulent plea, to get a pardon for Morse, and if there is any other duty that is incumbent upon him I have not heard of it, and he has manifested no disposition to perform any other duties.

But before I go further I would like to say to the Attorney General now that I waive all immunities, personal and otherwise, for what I said about him yesterday. I waive every immunity that I may have as to what I shall say about him to-day, and if he can not be accorded the floor I shall be glad to see him anywhere at any time under any circumstances that suit the Attorney General. All immunities are waived as to what I say or have said or shall say.

This morning a man whom I never knew, but whom I have seen, came, I take it, from the Attorney General. He came rushing—if the Senator from Indiana will allow me to use that word without getting into a colloquy with him—into my office and introduced himself, and by way of recommendation assured me that some woman in my State had been so misguided as to have married him. He thought it was a title of nobility, and

I think myself she conferred great credit on him when she did it. But that is the only recommendation he had—that he had married some lady from my State. He wanted immediately to take on himself blame, but I rather think he thought it was a credit, for having obtained the Morse pardon. His name is T. B. Felder. He said he used to live in Atlanta, Ga. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Georgia [Mr. WATSON] if he knows the gentleman?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, for the last 40 years I have known Thomas B. Felder well, and I have known him to be a crook. I know him to have been a professional lobbyist of the whisky ring, opposing every one of the temperance laws that I was advocating and other temperance people were advocating in Georgia. He combated us at every step. We had to close the barrooms over his protest; and he never ceased to be a lobbyist in Georgia until the attack made upon him by myself and by others destroyed his usefulness as a lobbyist. Then he left the State and went to New York.

I would not say this here if I had not said it to his face, in a State convention in Atlanta. I denounced him to his face in that convention, and he turned about as white as a piece of paper and did not open his mouth. I am asserting a fact in saying that he was not a lawyer, but a lobbyist; not an honest man, but a knave; not a witness whom anybody would believe, but a man who, in the State of Georgia would be impeached if offered as a witness on the trial of a case by men of the highest standing and character, who would say that from their general knowledge of his character they would not believe him on oath.

Mr. CARAWAY. By the way, is he the same T. B. Felder who was indicted in South Carolina?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. He is the same man.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is the kind of man that somebody sent, and I presume because he came to me as a witness for the Attorney General he was sent to me by the Attorney General to assume the responsibility, whatever it may be, of deluding the President into pardoning Morse. I think myself he is very likely a very worthy representative of the man whose offenses he wanted to assume.

I have in my hand a letter written by a man of unimpeachable character, a man who has been honored by appointment under an Attorney General at one time, a man whose name unfortunately, because of his relation to the Government, I can not give, though I should not object to showing it to some serious-minded Senator who wants to see it. I want to read two or three sentences from his letter. He knew Morse well, and he knows the man who helped to make out the fraudulent certificate that Morse was dying of Bright's disease. He knows all the circumstances, and the Attorney General knew them, and the Attorney General—whether he had some connection with it or not I shall leave others to say—immediately put this man Fowler back into the office of physician at the penitentiary at Atlanta, so that if Mr. Morse goes back he will be on hand to make him another certificate.

He knew all the circumstances, and before this controversy came up at all he happened to have written a Senator about the matter. Here is what he said:

> The Attorney General is going to put Doctor Fowler in charge of the hospital—

That is, at the Federal penitentiary.

> He was former physician to the institution and resigned under fire of an investigation in 1911—that referred to the Morse pardon—

Now, mark you, Mr. President—

> He was Morse's physician, while Tom Felder represented him in Atlanta, the present Attorney General being his leading counsel.

That is not an idle rumor; and if the Attorney General wants an investigation in order to ascertain what his connection was with reference to this matter, I shall be very glad to help him find the evidence. I do not mind the little, cheap sneer of a man like the Attorney General; that does not worry me at all. He is going back to the obscurity from which he came as soon as the people have an opportunity to vote in another national election. Everybody knows what his reputation was, because reputation is made up of what people say. I presume nobody else enjoys that close intimacy with him which the Senator from Indiana enjoys; they have social times together and talk over all these rumors that are circulated against him; but if the Senator from Indiana is to run to the Attorney General with all the rumors he hears affecting the reputation of the Attorney General he is going to be the busiest man in this body.

The Attorney General has not said anything as to the truth of the charge made against him. He has not denied it. I want the Attorney General now to say, either himself or have some of his friends say for him, positively whether he did have any connections with Morse, and just what those connections were. He owes it to himself, and he owes it to his friend from Indiana, who so valiantly rushed to his rescue, to tell the country just what his connection with this matter was, and to turn over to the country all the correspondence that may be in existence touching it. He owes that to the country, and I hope he may find it convenient to make a full statement. He must do it.

I never saw the Attorney General; I never had any curiosity to see him. I used to be prosecuting attorney, and I think I saw as many people of that kind as I cared to see. I have no interest in seeing him. I have no prejudice against him and no love for him. I never saw him, as I have stated; I never had any acquaintance with him, and I never expect to have. I wish to repeat, however—and this is all I am going to say about it, and then I shall be through with the matter, so far as discussing it on the floor is concerned—that I shall and do waive and have waived every immunity which I have or may have in connection with this matter, legal, personal, and every other kind; and the Attorney General may, without being accorded the privilege of the floor, have all the opportunity of a discussion with me at any time that he desires it.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I had not thought to make any observations relative to this matter, because I do not have any personal knowledge of the subject which has been discussed by the Senator from Arkansas. I know nothing at all of the relationship of the present Attorney General to the Morse case other than the information I obtained from the statement, a portion of which I heard yesterday from the lips of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], who is entirely competent to take care of himself. But as one who has known the Attorney General for a good many years, I rise simply to say that nobody who knows Harry M. Daugherty, who knows the character of the man, will in any way impugn his integrity, his ability, his courage, or his honesty. I say that not as his close political associate, for it has been my very great misfortune at times to differ with him as to policies and individual preferences; I have known him as fair foe as well as loyal friend.

I know something of the fierce light of Ohio political contests that beats pitilessly on every participant in party warfare. I know something of the enmities, particularly in the capital city of my State, where this man for a quarter of a century has been an active, aggressive, successful practicing lawyer; and I want to say to my friend from Arkansas—and I say it in perfect good humor—that, knowing the enemies of Mr. Daugherty as I know them, if there had been any flaw in his armor it would have been found long since. He has been the subject of attack as he is now the subject of attack. The man who engages in political contests such as we have rather commonly out in the Buckeye State must expect not only warm friendships but bitter enmities. The Attorney General has his full share of stalwart friends and of bitter enemies.

I know nothing about the details of this matter, and therefore I shall say nothing concerning them. All I desire to say is that, knowing this man as I do, I have absolute and unqualified confidence in his integrity and his honor. If anybody thinks there is anything wrong with the conduct of his office, in my judgment he will find the Attorney General will welcome the most searching investigation, because he is not only a man of honor but a man of courage; nobody can ever question that. This much I want to say in behalf of my friend, who, I think, has been unjustly assaulted in this matter.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida further yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. CARAWAY. I will occupy only a moment.

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. CARAWAY. I have no objection to the Senator from Ohio defending his own. He says that the Attorney General has some very bitter enemies in Ohio. I presume he means that he ought not to have any, because he stands sponsor for the Attorney General's good conduct, and I presume he wants to be understood as implying that those who fall out with the Attorney General are themselves bad people. No other inference would comport with his statement. That, however, is a row for Ohio; I have no interest in it, one way or the other. Until Ohio does better than it did in 1920, politically, I do not think it is going to concern the white people of this country—I take that back; I was trying to be facetious; but that, perhaps, is not in good taste.

I do not know the Attorney General. He may be all that the Senator from Ohio thinks he is. If Felder is the kind of an agent the Attorney General chooses—and I presume he is, because he started his conversation with me by saying he wanted to defend the Attorney General, and I presume he came with the Attorney General's sanction and at his request—all I have to say is the Attorney General is at liberty to choose his own friends, and I am not hurt that I do not fall within that charmed circle.

THE TARIFF.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, continuing the discussion of this table, embracing articles produced by 29 important industries of the country, I will now refer to asbestos and note what Mr. Miles has to say regarding that important commodity. He says:

As in other textiles, the raw material represents one-half the cost of the finished product. Asbestos costs the same the world over, 75 per cent of it coming from the mines of Canada; therefore no tariff consideration should be given the 50 per cent of cost representing raw material, but the other items only—labor, overhead, and profit—and any tariff on the finished product is equivalent to twice that amount on these differentials of labor, overhead, and profit. The protection now given is 17.3 per cent, being equivalent to 34.6 per cent of the total labor—

Not the difference between the labor cost here and abroad as to commodities manufactured out of asbestos, but on the total labor cost a protection is given equivalent to 34.6 per cent of the labor cost, overhead, and profit.

The protection now given is 17.3 per cent, being equivalent to 34.6 per cent of the total labor, overhead, and profit of the foreign manufacturer and over twice the total average American wage cost. The total labor in converting asbestos into cloth is about 11.5 per cent in the United States, and into sheeting 14.2 per cent, and tape 21.5 per cent. This wage per cent is now, partly because a single operator controls several of the automatic looms on which the work is done.

I presume the word "now" should be "low," so as to read:

This wage per cent is low, partly because a single operator controls several of the automatic looms on which the work is done.

Of course, the American valuation plan having been abandoned, we must turn to the bill as it comes to us from the Finance Committee, and we find this item under "Sundries," Schedule 14, paragraph 1401. There is a long list of details which I will not trouble to read, fixing various percentages and describing various manufactures; but coming down to the close of the paragraph the following provision appears in the bill:

all other manufactures of asbestos, or of which asbestos is the component material of chief value, not specially provided for, 20 per cent ad valorem: Provided, That none of the foregoing rates of duty shall exceed 40 per cent ad valorem in the case of mantle threads or woven fabrics, 30 per cent ad valorem in the case of yarn, and 25 per cent ad valorem in the case of any other article specified in this paragraph.

So that the bill now before us would seem to provide that the duty is to be from 20 to 25 per cent on these articles manufactured from asbestos and referred to in Mr. Miles's statement. Under that statement there can be no question whatever that that duty is wholly unwarranted and that its effect is simply to increase the price of these articles to the consumer without producing revenue for the Government and without being called for by any principle upon which the tariff is built, difference between the cost of labor abroad and here, or any other principle.

The next item to which we might refer is clocks and watches, very useful articles to the people generally, and Mr. Miles discusses those articles on page 5260 of his statement. I shall not read it all, and I might begin this statement with a declaration of his position on the subject of the tariff, which he gives at this hearing. At page 5260 of part 58 he says:

As to the tariff, it only concerns us that Congress shall cease to support and aid high prices. It is horrible for Congress to put the tariff wall so high that the public can not get relief from abroad and must pay any prices domestic manufacturers and merchants charge. Ninety days from now, or whenever the public buys freely again, prices will go up largely because of the tariff.

I submit that is sound and the conclusion is logical.

With reference specifically to watches he says:

Our ability to sell good, dependable watches at international prices was demonstrated years ago by heavy shipments of Waltham, Elgin, and other watches abroad at 60 per cent to 75 per cent below their prices to American consumers, due entirely to the enslavement of American buyers to American price-fixing watchmakers by the Dingley tariff.

The total wages in the watch industry are 39.6 per cent of the factory selling price, while the tariff is 27.8 per cent.

The protection given clocks and watches in 1919 was $17,000,000, against which the Government collected on imports $3,400,000. There are considerable importations from Germany, as in other lines, due to depreciated currency. There has always been considerable importation of extra cheap clocks from Germany and Switzerland, attractive but poor timepieces. Imports of clocks and watches have run from 12.5 per cent in 1914 to 19.4 per cent in 1920, with exports in 1914 and 1919 of 8 per cent of domestic production.

Passing on to another item, omitting glucose, grape sugar, starch, hosiery, and knit goods, we come to earthen stone and china ware. Paragraph 212 of the bill proposes a duty of 45 per cent ad valorem on these items; if painted or colored or any work is done on them, 50 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. Miles says with regard to these articles at page 5252 of this pamphlet:

Domestic producers controlled 93.7 per cent of the American market in 1914 and 97.5 per cent in 1919, when imports were only 2½ per cent of domestic production. In 1920 imports were 3.8 per cent of domestic consumption. Imports are noncompetitive, being novelties in design or quality, English, French, and Japanese wares of superior taste or quality. The American breakfast table is less tasteful and pleasing to the eye than it ought to be, because of the influence of the almost prohibitive tariffs on many things for a generation past.

On the subject of wages in this industry he says:

In 1914, pre-war, the total wages paid in the industry was 41.1 per cent of the factory selling price, while the tariff averaged 58.2 per cent, or 142 per cent of the total wage. In 1919 the wages paid were 37 per cent of the factory selling price, while the tariff averaged 47 per cent of the selling price, or 127 per cent of the total wages paid. * * *

The protection given this industry amounted to $65,000,000 in 1914 and $94,000,000 in 1919, while the Fordney rates would give them $108,000,000, which this industry says is the least it can prosper under. All these figures would be doubled on reaching the consumer at retail. Against these great sums the Government collected in duties $5,600,000 in 1914, $3,400,000 in 1919, and $5,200,000 in 1920.

Here it is proposed to impose a duty of 45 per cent ad valorem, and where the ware is painted or treated in any way 50 per cent ad valorem. The total wage cost in the industry is only about 40 per cent. This high tariff, of course, simply enables the manufacturers here to charge the consumer these high prices, and at the same time the duties are not justifiably revenue producing.

On the subject of gloves Mr. Miles has to say, at pages 5280 and 5281 of this document:

The United States may be called the bare-handed Nation. Its Republican Congresses have required its male population to go without gloves. Standing at the entrance to the House of Representatives, I sometimes wonder if any of its Members wear gloves. My newest pair is two years old, and inquiry seldom finds a man with a newer pair. Few self-respecting men would pay the prices of recent years, though cold and soiled hands are an uncomfortable and unhealthy alternative. Why not make cleanliness and health a consideration in the next glove schedule. One had to go to Europe in pre-war days, where gloves were half our prices, to learn how comfortable they are.

Factory prices of gloves advanced from $8.15 per dozen pairs in 1914 to $24 during the war; another quality from $18 to $44; another that was $12.25 in 1914 was $23 in September, 1921. These prices were about doubled to consumers.

To most women gloves are by custom about as necessary as stockings. To the Payne Republicans, however, stockings were luxuries, being dutiable at 72 per cent, though made as cheaply here as anywhere, while leather gloves were then averaging 45 per cent. The Fordney bill rates stockings about 75 per cent and leather gloves 80 per cent.

* * * * * * *

The protection given the industry in the fiscal year 1914, Payne law, was $7,000,000; in 1919, $6,000,000. The Fordney bill would make this $15,000,000. These amounts would be doubled at retail.

The glove tax is an especial burden to the army of men and women office workers who must have hands both clean and warm upon entering their work places. Most glove schedules have been determined by political manipulation rather than essential facts.

So that now it is proposed to levy a duty of something like $5 a dozen on leather gloves. It is little short of cruel treatment of the American people to impose any such duty on that article, so much in use by all.

I pass over the subjects of buttons, automobiles, toys and games, carpets and rugs—another great industry—and men's shirts, and come to hardware. With reference to that, Mr. Miles, at page 5265 of this pamphlet, has this very pertinent comment to make:

Hardware: Production in 1914, $73,000,000, and in 1919, $145,000,000. Exports in 1914 and in 1919 were 8 per cent, rising in 1920 to 12 per cent. Wages, 28 per cent of the manufacturer's selling price, with the tariff 20 per cent. For many years certain hardware has been exported at less than domestic prices. Under the Payne tariff screws were exported at one-half the domestic price; files 40 per cent off, now 20 per cent off. A pipe fitter's tool is now exported at 45 per cent off the domestic price. We make many types of medium hardware of high quality as cheaply as anywhere in the world, barring the passing situation in Germany. Mr. Sargeant, founder of the Sargeant Hardware Co., said some 20 years ago:

"I have no difficulty in exporting those of my products that carry the greatest amount of the highest paid American labor. I have difficulty in exporting products that carry either little labor or cheap labor."

Bolts, nuts, washers: Production in 1914, $23,403,000, rising to $91,655,000 in 1919. Made in automatic machines, a single operator feeding long rods into a group of them, from each of which finished bolts come so fast one can not easily distinguish one bolt from another. Duty now averages 10.5 per cent, which prevents importations, which were 0.1 per cent in 1914 and 0.07 per cent in 1920, against exports of 7 per cent in 1914 and 8.4 per cent in 1920. The present duty is small, meaning only about $7,000,000 to the producers and twice that to consumers.

But it is wholly unnecessary.

With reference to brass, bronze, and copper manufactures, Mr. Miles says:

Our genius for automatic and semiautomatic machinery is fully evidenced in this industry. The Fordney rates are higher than the Payne, which averaged 35 to 42 per cent. This industry is substantially twin sister to steel, iron, and hardware.

He continued discussing steel and iron, as follows:

What reason can be given for duties on steel and iron? We have the greatest ore deposits and production in the world, minimum cost, maximum efficiency; large exports in all lines, imports entirely negligible, principally as ballast to the Pacific coast from Europe, made possible by our heavy transcontinental freight rates. Shall all America be taxed $150,000,000 per year to keep California from these small imports and to convenience a $3,000,000,000 industry?

Then he sets out a table in this statement, and concludes under that head with this statement:

Friends of industry say these small duties steady prices. Without them "vexatious quotations from abroad" would unsettle buyers, who, after all, could not afford to purchase abroad. This tariff means hundreds of millions of dollars on our total consumption in this "iron age," pyramiding from ore to rails, skyscrapers, implements, penknives, tinware, and scissors. The question of protection is not involved, as our costs of production are minimum.

That is on the whole steel and iron schedule. Referring to tinware, at page 5264, Mr. Miles said:

In the five years, 1902–1906, the wage cost of converting the black steel sheets into tin plate was, per box of 100 pounds, 19 cents, or 6 per cent of total factory cost. The steel sheets then cost $2.04; tin, per box of product, 63 cents; flux, fuel, and supplies, 11 cents; incidentals, 7 cents; general expense and depreciation, 14 cents. Total per box, $3.18. Nowhere can it cost less. The present duty of 15 per cent means some $12,000,000 to the makers, if added to prices, as it can be readily, and fully twice that to consumers with the tinware manufacturers' percentages added, then the wholesalers, and then the retailers—an entirely unnecessary and wicked total of $24,000,000.

This comes from a protectionist, a manufacturer, a representative of great organizations, and a great many people who are consumers, and I presume he is a Republican also. On this subject of tinware he said:

With tin free and their other raw material, steel sheets, produced very cheaply in this country and exported in huge quantities, the tinware makers are, nevertheless, given 20 per cent protection.

With a protection of 20 per cent and a total wage cost of 19 per cent, it is proposed to continue disregarding totally the question of the difference between the wage cost abroad and that in this country, more than covering the total wage cost by these exorbitant duties. He continued:

Production in 1914, $82,000,000, and in 1919, $234,000,000. The present duty of 20 per cent virtually embargoes imports, which were 0.2 per cent in 1914 and 0.37 in 1920, and presumably novelties. Exports are not separately shown and probably only about 1.5 per cent.

* * * * * * *

If the tinware makers used all their tariff allowance of 45 per cent in 1914, it netted them $25,000,000, less what they probably passed back to the tin-plate makers, who then had 35 per cent protection. This 45 per cent to tinware makers in 1914, if used, cost consumers on their tinware $50,000,000, against which the Government collected on imported tinware $60,000.

Mr. Miles had a word to say in behalf of the farmers, on pages 5246 and 5247, in part 58, of the hearings before the Finance Committee. I will not dwell further on that. My recollection is that I have heretofore mentioned it.

I do want, however, to especially call attention to what he said on the subject of the cost of protection, at page 5267 of this document, as follows:

When Congress fixes any percentage of duty it assumes that this percentage should be added to foreign prices to bring them up to our domestic prices based upon domestic costs. That is, if the duty is 30 per cent the domestic price may be, if the manufacturers so elect, 130 per cent of the foreign price, and domestic consumers must pay the prices so made. Says Mr. FORDNEY: "Whatever duty you put on is for the purpose of bringing the foreign value [price] up to our value."

How the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means can have any hope that there will be a reduction in prices, or may be, under this bill, is beyond my comprehension. The purpose of the bill will be defeated if that happens, but it will not happen. It is a vain hope to expect these manufacturers, for whose benefit these duties are imposed, to surrender and give up those benefits in the interest of the consumers of the country. This statement shows the purpose and the theory upon which a protective tariff is built. Mr. Miles continued:

On this basis the amounts voted by Congress for use of domestic manufacturers at their discretion, without check or control, is shown for 29 industries on the chart here presented.

That is practically the table which I submitted and which has been included in the record, appearing on page 5268 of this pamphlet. Mr. Miles said further:

The amount collected by the Government in duties on these products is also shown. The Government collects in thousands of dollars and makes consumers liable in millions. In short, the Government collected $1 for each $100 it made the consumer liable for. The tariff used to provide one-third of the Federal revenue; now only 8 per cent. It never meant so little to the Government nor so much to the consumer.

These manufacturers never showed their cost books nor gave any proof of their needs. They simply talked to committees of Congress in loose and general and often disingenuous terms. They now ask for great increases in their rates, to cost the public additional billions.

As retail prices on highly manufactured articles—excepting such large or conveniently handled articles as automobiles—are double the manufacturers' prices—due to their passing through several hands from the manufacturer to the consumer—these great grants of protection to industries cost the consumer up to a possible $2,467,000,000 in 1914 and $4,741,000,000 in 1919, as here shown. As these industries yield only about 30 per cent of all customs revenue the total cost of carelessly granted duties is very large when those not here listed are allowed for. The industries were voted sums equal to the war expenses under which we groan; the Government went elsewhere for its sustenance. The products of these few industries cost the consumers an average of $40 in 1914 and $104 in 1919. The per cent of the product going to labor in 1914 was 20.3 per cent. In 1919 it was only 16.9 per cent.

He was referring to these industries mentioned in the list which I have heretofore incorporated in the record. He continued:

In the old days of sharp competition manufacturers added only the part of the tariff necessary for fair profits. Competition would not let them add more. Competition was the protector of the consumer, just as the tariff protected the manufacturer. In time manufacturers learned by consolidations and price agreements to add all of the tariff and to work Congress for more. McKinley failed to see the danger. He was father to more trusts than Abraham had children. Count the trusts incorporated under the McKinley tariff and note their relation to the McKinley tariff rates—their excessive capitalization and high prices. The tables on pages 5239–5240 tell part of the story.

I wish very much that this pamphlet, No. 58 of the hearings before the Finance Committee, could be in the hands of every citizen of this country. I have perhaps wearied the Senate with too many references to it to-day in connection with these observations, but I want to get as much of it as I can, that which applies especially to these vital industries, in the minds of those who are to vote on this bill, and also to the people of the country, who have finally to pass upon its wisdom.

There is just one other subject to which I wish to refer, and then I will conclude. Hearings have been going on for five weeks, every day during that time except one Saturday, before a joint committee composed of members of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee of the House and the Commerce Committee of the Senate. They have been hearing what those who favored the bill for the establishment of an American merchant marine, commonly known as the subsidy bill, have to offer in support of it.

There is no argument needed here or anywhere else to show that we ought to have an adequate American merchant marine. We ought to have ships American owned and American operated for the benefit of American commerce, sufficient to carry from 50 to 60 per cent of our overseas commerce. I say there is no need to offer any argument in support of that proposition, because I think it is pretty well conceded all over the country that that would be a most desirable thing. There is no argument against it. The only question is how to get it. How can we create and establish this adequate American merchant marine that all our people, particularly after our experience in the war, fully realize ought to be created and established?

The proposal is that the Government shall pay out a certain amount for direct subsidies to American ships and that various other subventions and indirect subsidies shall be provided. I shall not go into the details of the bill; that is another story, and we shall have to talk about that later. I am simply mentioning this to show that we are seriously considering going into the Treasury of the United States to the extent of from $30,000,000 to $100,000,000 a year in order to create and establish a merchant marine under our flag to carry our products to all the ports of the world and bring to us the things we need.

The question arises if we are going to raise a tariff wall here so high that to a very great extent the products of other countries will be shut out, Is it worth while to tax the people $50,000,000 or $100,000,000 a year to build ships simply to move our products to other markets, ships which will have to come back in ballast? Can we ever build an American merchant marine on any such basis as that? Is it possible for any nation to build a merchant marine when the ships must go empty across the ocean, or return empty even though the ships go loaded down with our products?

We can not expect to load them with our products very long unless we are going to take the products of other countries in exchange, because people with whom we trade have not the gold with which to buy our goods. They can only buy them with their goods. What is the use of going on here to devise a plan to build up a merchant marine if we are going to build up a tariff wall that will so restrict and limit importations as to make it impossible successfully or profitably to operate such a merchant marine?

I refer once again to Mr. Miles's statement at page 5231 as bearing on that point, where he said:

If you build this tariff wall high, you shut the foreigners out and at the same time you shut us all in and make the general consuming public the victims of circumstances and the domestic manufacturers.

That is the whole story. We can not afford to tax our people to build up a merchant marine if we are going to pass laws that will oblige those ships to return to us empty.

Mr. President, I apologize for going into this matter in such a tedious way, but it is very important, and the facts which I have attempted to present ought to have some weight, it seems to me, in passing upon the merits of the bill.

Mr. BROUSSARD obtained the floor.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I make the point of no quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, I wish to take up at this time for discussion one of the schedules which will come up a little later on. In order to submit the facts to the Senate I desire now to take up for consideration the rice schedule.

Mr. President, the domestic rice industry on a large scale is decidedly a new one. By consulting the annual yearbooks of the Department of Agriculture we find that as late as 1895 rice was not grown in sufficient quantity in this country to receive any mention. The rapid strides made by this industry can best be illustrated by calling attention to the fact that in discussing "The Combined Yield of Ten Principal Crops," the Secretary of Agriculture, on November 15, 1920, takes up the rice industry as the third one for discussion and consideration; and in the treatment of the rice industry mentions the fact that the crop of 1920 amounted to 54,000,000 bushels.

In order to show to what extent the rice industry was developed previous to the depreciation of farm values and farm products subsequent to the war I desire to insert here an excerpt from the Monthly Reporter, United States Department of Agriculture, for December, 1920, which shows the acreage of rice in the United States for 1920 by States, and the yield per acre of each State for that year, to wit:

State.	Acreage, 1920.	Yield per acre, 1920.	Production, 1920.
		Bushels.	Bushels.
North Carolina	400	25.0	10,000
South Carolina	4,100	25.0	102,500
Georgia	1,100	26.4	290,400
Florida	3,000	24.0	72,000
Missouri	500	50.0	25,000
Alabama	500	31.0	15,500
Mississippi	3,000	31.0	93,000
Louisiana	700,000	36.0	25,200,000
Texas	281,000	34.0	9,554,000
Arkansas	181,400	44.0	7,981,600
California[1]	162,000	60.0	9,720,000
United States	1,337,000	40.2	53,064,000

[1] Figures include only 45 per cent crop of California.

It will be noticed that out of a total production for 1920 of 53,064,000 bushels, Louisiana produced 25,200,000 bushels and had under cultivation in rice 700,000 acres of land. This table shows that in 1920 there was a total of 1,337,000 acres cultivated in rice in this country.

It is quite true, Mr. President, that the rate on rice in effect for that year was the Underwood-Simmons tariff rate, which is the same proposed under the Finance Committee amendment. But the demand for foodstuffs during the World War had removed all the injurious effects of a low tariff rate; the price of all foodstuffs had so increased in the war period between 1914 and 1918 and extending to 1919 that the production of rice, as well as of other agricultural products, had been stimulated, with the result that the 1920 crop was the largest rice crop ever produced in the United States. But 1920 saw smashed prices for all agricultural products, which could find no market at all or had to be sacrificed at a price much less than the cost of production. The rice producers were forced to sell at a loss of $1 per bushel less than the cost of production. It was found that rice from the Orient would flood the American market, unless a higher tariff rate were adopted, because the Underwood-Simmons rate, which is the rate proposed under the Finance Committee amendment, was too low. Consequently, when the emergency tariff bill was adopted, on May 27, 1921, the rate on rice was doubled and was fixed at nearly the identical rate as that passed by the House in House bill 7456, the pending tariff bill. And that is nearly the identical rate which I ask the Senate now to adopt. The rate under the amendment proposed by me is certainly not too high, because under it there were imported in 1921, notwithstanding the large surplus of rice in this country, hundreds of millions of pounds of rice, as I shall show later; and I shall show, moreover, that it is less than any tariff rate on rice adopted by Democratic as well as Republican Congresses in the past, with the single exception of the Underwood-Simmons bill, which, as I have said, is the same rate as that now proposed by the Finance Committee.

Mr. President, the total farm value basis on December 1, 1918, 1919, and 1920, of rice is shown by the same monthly report above quoted.

Mr. President, I shall not take the trouble to read the table, but ask that it may be inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks without being read. I shall content myself with referring merely to the totals given.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table referred to is as follows:

Rice crop of the United States, 1918–1920.

Mr. BROUSSARD. It will be seen from the above figures that the average value of rice on December 1, 1920, was $1.189 per bushel. But in 1921, before the enactment of the emergency tariff bill, rice was selling at 50 cents per bushel. The total farm value of rice on December 1, 1920, was $63,837,000. The bottom had dropped out of farm products at that time and necessarily affected values, for the same table shows that at the peak of prices in the previous year, on the corresponding date, December 1, 1919, the value per bushel of rice was $2.688, while the total farm value of rice was $114,152,000. The farm value of rice on the 700,000 acres of land cultivated in rice in Louisiana alone was $53,420,000.

It is interesting, Mr. President, to note that the rice crop produced in 1919 on 1,091,800 acres was valued at $114,152,000, while the rice crop of 1920 produced on 1,337,000 acres was valued at only $63,837,000. The figures are more interesting when we consider that the Department of Agriculture placed a value for the crop of 1920 at $1.18, while little of it was sold in 1920, and in 1921, before the enactment of the emergency tariff act, could sell for only 50 cents per bushel. This illustrates the utter collapse at the time of markets for farm products.

So far as the rice industry is concerned it was one of the industries saved by the emergency tariff bill. It has not recovered any of its enormous losses of 1920, but the measure has saved the industry by saving the rice farmer from incurring subsequent losses, which would have destroyed him. The farmer needs to-day, and will need in the future, the same rate which the emergency tariff act gives him. It will be readily seen, therefore, that the rice industry is a very important one and that its development has been phenomenal since, as previously stated; previous to 1895 the Annual Year Book of the Department of Agriculture did not find the rice culture of sufficient importance to mention rice as an agricultural industry.

It is rather difficult to obtain figures showing final difference of the cost of production in this country and in the Orient. I may refer to some of the items and compare the cost in order to impress the great necessity for protecting American labor and American investment. For instance, in Louisiana Bulletin No.

172, issued in September, 1920, the average cost per acre of irrigation for the crops of 1910–1918 in the Southern States is shown to be $6. The United States Department of Agriculture ascertained that the cost reached $10 in 1920. Comparing this cost per acre for irrigation to that in the Orient, as given in the book published by Dr. F. H. King, formerly professor of physics at the University of Wisconsin and former chief of Division of Soil Survey, United States Department of Agriculture, we see the great disparity. The cost per acre there of irrigation is shown to be from 77 to 96 cents per acre for the season.

Doctor King has recently investigated thoroughly the agricultural conditions in Japan, Korea, and China and explains how, due to cheapness of labor, it is not found profitable in those countries to irrigate the land by means of modern pumps operated by machinery. He shows that the coolie labor in China gets $8.60 (American money) per year, with board and lodging, and we know that this labor is fed entirely on rice, of which so much is cultivated in the Orient that our total American production is less than 1 per cent of their production. Chinese labor, therefore, is necessarily very cheap. The irrigating pumps in the Orient are operated by man power. The devices for the various pumps have been invented thousands of years ago. To illustrate as to the cost of labor, Doctor King shows that in China the rice seed is considered so valuable, when compared to the cost of labor, that it is sprouted in beds and then transplanted by hand. The cost per acre for transplanting the young rice plants average "nearly 21 cents." The work of transplanting, irrigating, and harvesting is done by men, women, and children. In Louisiana Bulletin No. 172, above referred to, the average cost itemized for producing 1 acre of rice in the years 1917–18 was $31.95 per acre, the increase being due to increase of wages in the latter part of that period. For the year 1910 the cost per acre had been $27.26, while for the year 1920 the cost had increased so enormously that it was conservatively estimated at $60 per acre. Mr. President, I desire to insert here the table showing the itemized estimated cost of the production of 1 acre of rice, as printed in Louisiana Bulletin No. 172, obtained at the United States Department of Agriculture. I ask that the table may be inserted in the RECORD without reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table referred to is as follows:

Itemized estimated cost of production of 1 acre of rice.

	1917–18	1910
Plowing	$1.46	$1.26
Disking	2.68	2.13
Harrowing	.89	.28
Pulverizing	.54	.30
Drilling	.68	.20
Fertilizer	2.00	1.40

Cutting roads	.20	.18
Harvesting	2.81	2.25
Threshing	3.00	3.00
Hauling	1.00	1.00
Warehouse and insurance	1.00	1.00
Water rent	6.00	6.00
Shop and tools	.20	.20
One-half automobile expense	.50	.40
Telephone	.07	.07
Insurance	1.20	1.20
Fencing	.10	.08
Taxes	.62	.50
Interest on investments	3.00	3.00
Total	31.95	27.26

Mr. BROUSSARD. Doctor King further refers to what he considers one of the most important farms in China—that of Mrs. Wu. He reports that she employs seven men at the rate of $24 (Mexican) for five months' work, which is the time devoted to the rice crop, furnishing their meals; and he states:

> The cash outlay for the seven men was equivalent to $14.45 of our currency per month.

So that we are informed by Doctor King, whose figures are not challenged and whose reputation is well established in this country, that the rice farmer may employ coolie labor at the rate of $2.06 per month if labor is only wanted for a period to grow and harvest one rice crop; while if it is desired to employ coolie labor per year, the cost is $8.60.

Doctor King states that some of the farms in China produce two rice crops per year; but in China, Korea, and Japan all other rice lands produce each year one other staple crop beside rice. I have visited China, Japan, and the Philippine Islands. In China and Japan much of the lands have been in cultivation for 3,000 or 4,000 years. These must be fertilized, and for that reason the water must be drained off the land to permit the application of the fertilizer, which consists mostly of mud from the rivers, and human manure. But in case the land is more recently brought into cultivation, as I have seen in the Philippines, the cost of irrigation and weeding is avoided by keeping the same water in the field; the plants being set in the water in rows by hand at a cost of 21 cents per acre or less.

Of course, any American who would expect American labor and capital to compete with this class of labor can not have at heart the welfare of American citizens. Our farmers are expected to read newspapers and magazines in order to exercise intelligently their rights of suffrage. They are expected to attend church and to dress decently, to educate their children, and to properly clothe and feed them; and it is impossible for our farmer to compete with a farmer of the Orient, of whom Doctor King states it is estimated that his wardrobe, once procured, could be maintained with an annual expenditure of $2.25 of our currency. This amount would be sufficient to maintain both repairs and renewals. These comments refer to the farmer; but I have already shown that the coolie laborer works for a wage of $8.60 per year, with board and lodging, and we may assume the character and type of the coolie laborer's wardrobe if we take into consideration the obligation which, as the father of a family, he must discharge toward his wife and children. The economic conditions in the Orient are such that mothers and children of tender age are forced to assist in earning their own living; their food consisting entirely of a rice ration, which is the cheapest food in Japan, Korea, and China.

The production of rice in this country requires unusual equipment and considerable plant investment. Special implements, requiring six to eight large mules, or tractors, are needed. These implements are very costly and require handling by skilled experts, and for the best results the highest degree of intelligence in the laborer is essential. The irrigation plants consist of the most modern engines and pumps, and in most instances cost thousands of dollars. The reaper and binder and thresher are likewise expensive equipments, all of which demand the most careful handling by trained hand and mind. It will be seen, therefore, Mr. President, that this industry depends upon the energy and the production of other industries in this country, and that it encourages—and further developments will in turn assist to encourage—those engaged in the raising of horses and mules, in the manufacture of implements and machinery, in the manufacture of sacks and bags, and in the lumber and fuel trade and other industries, all of which are bought in the American market by the rice farmer.

Mr. President, I take from the Summary of Tariff Information, 1921, page 695, the following statement:

> Compared with the enormous crops and exports of the Orient, the domestic production is insignificant. However, with the exception of certain kinds imported to meet special requirements, the American output supplies substantially the entire domestic demand, and permits an export of over 400,000,000 pounds.

This statement, unless explained, would leave a wrong impression, as the period referred to is not mentioned. It can be made to cover the last two years, which are abnormal years, although the figures are too large. We all remember how, due to the demand for foodstuffs, all production of foodstuffs increased, and how then the market broke. This was the cause of low values for agricultural products, which necessarily affected the price of rice and the demand for rice in this country.

Due to the large amount of rice on hand for which there was no demand in this country, the surplus was offered at a very low price to any domestic or foreign buyer, and I know of many instances where large quantities of rice were exported from this country as a gift to starving people in Europe. In one shipment of which I have personal knowledge 5,000 tons were donated to the starving Armenians. There were other donations, while other large quantities were sold at very low prices, as low as $1 per bushel in the year 1920, and in January, 1921, rice had reached the low price of 50 cents per bushel. Like the western farmer who refused to buy coal and burned his corn crop as fuel, the rice farmer tried in every way to get the surplus on hand out of the way before the next crop came in. But the statement that we produce enough rice to export 400,000,000 pounds per year is not accurate, in that it applies only to the last couple of years, when conditions were extremely abnormal. Even then the table which I shall read to you shows that it is an exaggeration for these two years. This statement, beyond controversy, is proven by the following statistics taken from the Monthly Summary of Foreign Commerce, which I ask may be printed at this stage in connection with my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The totals of imports and exports for each year have been added by fiscal years and show the following result:

	Pounds.
1921:
Exportation	440, 855, 298
Importation	96, 804, 612
Surplus exportation over importation	344, 050, 686
1920:
Exportation	483, 385, 259
Importation	179, 921, 961
Surplus exportation over importation	303, 463, 298
1919:
Importation	363, 726, 263
Exportation	193, 128, 000

Mr. BROUSSARD. This table gives the figures for the last 27 years. I wish particularly to call attention to the fact that for the year 1921 we exported 440,855,000 pounds, and imported 96,000,000 pounds, a surplus of exportations over importations of 344,000,000 pounds. So it was in 1920, when we exported 483,000,000 pounds, and imported 179,000,000 pounds, which was a surplus of exportations over importations of 303,000,000 pounds. That, however, is the last year in which this occurred; for we find that beginning with the year 1919, and going back to the year 1895, we imported amounts largely in excess of the exportations. I shall take a few of the years which I have inserted in the RECORD in this table in order to show that my statement is absolutely true.

For instance, in 1918 the surplus of importations over exportations was 259,695,340 pounds; and so it is, taking them at random, in other years.

In 1914 the surplus of importations over exportations amounted to 267,780,591 pounds.

In 1913 the surplus of importations over exportations was 183,000,000 pounds plus.

In 1910 it was 198,000,000 pounds plus.

In 1909 the excess of importations over exportations was 202,000,000 pounds plus.

So it is, Mr. President, that this entire table goes to contradict the statement which was inserted in the summary of the tariff information to show that we produce more rice than this country needs, because the fact is that the average excess of importations of rice into this country supplies fully one-third of the consumption in this country.

The above figures, Mr. President, which have been carefully compiled by the Department of Agriculture, show that only during the last two years have the exportations exceeded the importations of rice. The exportations of previous years were far below the importations. These last two were unusual years, as everyone will admit, and may not be taken as a basis for any conclusions in the face of figures showing a contrary condition for all previous years. The fact that any rice is normally exported at all is largely due to the fact that the American consumer insists upon buying the very best quality of food. The cracked or broken rice is just as nutritious and just as white as the whole grain, but before and when cooked does not look so well. In this country even the average man likes to buy food of the very best quality, and although it may be explained to the consumer that this rice was broken by machinery which threshes and mills the grain, and is just as valuable for food purposes as the rice which is whole, he will not take the broken rice. Our competitors, the peoples living in the Orient, the people of Cuba, Mexico, Hawaii, and other people to whom the exportations are made, will sooner buy the broken grain at a cheaper price than buy the whole grain at a greater price. They are not so exacting as the American trade. The result is that although there is demand for more rice than we produce we still have a certain quantity of rice which finds no market here, especially since prohibition, since which the demand for brewers' rice has been discontinued, and it is for that reason that we export the less valuable quality of rice and balance our account by importing an equal amount of good rice as that exported plus such a quantity as the domestic market requires.

It must likewise be taken into consideration, Mr. President, that the years selected for the statement that we had a surplus of 400,000,000 pounds for exportation were for a period subsequent to the going into effect of the prohibition laws, and that this fact, which destroyed the domestic market for brewers' rice, forced the exportation of that portion of our production which was manufactured into beer. The records furnished by the Tariff Commission to the Finance Committee for the year 1916 show that 141,219,292 pounds were used by the breweries of this country. Prohibition necessarily had the effect of increasing the amount of rice exportations, because there is no demand in this country for this rice since the breweries are no longer in operation; and the rice industry, like other agricultural products, having on hand more rice of all kinds than the demand at home required, it was perfectly natural that every effort should have been made by the rice people for the years 1920 and 1921 to increase exportation and thereby remove from the American market such a large surplus as we had on hand in 1920, which surplus would have depressed the price of rice in subsequent years unless sold at any price in some other than the domestic market.

It is also a fact that some of the exportations in very many instances include rice which was imported into this country and which, finding no market because of its inferior quality, due to its lack of intrinsic food value or due to having been broken in the manufacture, must be exported to such a market as will consume that particular quality, and in that sense some of our exportations, in many years a large portion of it, are imports reexported.

The great importance of the rice industry is clearly shown by the production of that article of food in this country as shown in the table last quoted. The total domestic production in 1896 is shown to have been 96,886,400 pounds. It will be noticed that the total production for each year has been a progressive increase until in 1920, the last year reported by the Department of Agriculture, it reached a total of 1,491,944,444 pounds. I may add at this time that the production of California is reported only to the extent of 45 per cent for that year, which would also increase this total. I venture to say that no other industry, agricultural or manufacturing, can show a like rapid and steady increase. The growth is healthy, and if encouraged will soon meet all the demands of the country under normal conditions. Therefore let us encourage it, because it shows signs of soon being able to take care of itself.

The amendment which I have offered to H. R. 7456 reads as follows:

On pages 104 and 105 strike out entire paragraph 728 and insert the following:

PAR. 728. Paddy or rough rice, 1 cent per pound; brown rice (hulls removed), 1¾ cents per pound; milled rice (bran removed), 2 cents per pound; broken rice and rice meal, flour, polish, and bran, one-half of 1 cent per pound.

It will be noted, Mr. President, that this amendment is identically the same as paragraph 728 enacted by the House of Representatives, with the exception that I have omitted the following:

All the foregoing not specially provided for.

But for the objectionable words, I should have been content to have moved, at the proper time, to disagree to the Senate amendment, which motion, if successful, would restore the House rate with the objectionable words, and the move to strike out the objectionable words, which course I way yet adopt. But, Mr. President, this amendment serves the purpose for a discussion of the merits of restoring the House rate. The words omitted in my amendment, Mr. President, are very objectionable in view of the fact that it was intended as a saving clause to paragraph 1643 of the same bill intended to permit the importation, free of duty, of cleaned rice for use in the manufacture of canned foods. The emergency tariff bill enacted on May 27, 1921, placed the following rates on rice:

Rice, cleaned, 2 cents per pound, except rice cleaned for use in the manufacture of canned foods, on which the rate of duty shall be 1 cent per pound; uncleaned rice, or rice free of the outer hull and still having the inner cuticle on, 1¾ cents per pound; rice flour and rice meal and rice broken which will pass through a No. 12 wire sieve of the kind prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, one-fourth of 1 cent per pound; paddy, or rough rice having the outer hull on, three-fourths of 1 cent per pound.

In order that we may discuss with intelligence the question of the tariff rate, I wish to read to you the tabulation of the different rates under various tariff acts, under Democratic and Republican administrations, beginning with the tariff bill adopted June 30, 1864, down to and including the emergency tariff now in operation, as well as the rate proposed by me under my amendment, which is as follows:

Bills.	Paddy, or rough rice.	Brown rice (hulls removed).	Milled or cleaned rice.	Broken rice, flour, etc.
H. R. 7456	1 cent	1½ cents	2 cents	½ of 1 cent.
Emergency	¾ of 1 cent	1¾ cents	2¾ cents	¼ of 1 cent.
Senate amendment	¾ of 1 cent	⅝ of 1 cent	1 cent	Do.
Underwood bill	do	do	do	Do.
Payne-Aldrich bill	¾ of 1 cent	1½ cents	2 cents	Do.
McKinley bill	do	do	do	Do.
Wilson-Gorman bill	do	⅘ of 1 cent	1½ cents	Do.
Tariff act, Oct. 1, 1890	do	1½ cents	2 cents	1½ cents.
Tariff act, Mar. 3, 1883	1½ cents	1½ cents	2½ cents	20 per cent ad valorem.
Tariff act, June 30, 1864	1½ cents	2 cents	2½ cents
Broussard amendment	1 cent	1½ cents	2 cents	½ of 1 cent.

Mr. President, a comparison of the rates under the classification provided for imposing duties on rice will show that the Senate amendment fixes the identical rate carried under the Underwood bill, which is the tariff act of 1913. There is no previous bill which fixed a duty on rice as low as the Underwood bill, as it will be noticed that the Wilson-Gorman Act of 1894 fixed a duty twice as high on paddy, or rough rice, than did the Underwood bill, and that while the Underwood bill carried a duty of five-eighths of 1 cent on brown rice, with hulls removed, the Wilson-Gorman Act fixed a duty of eight-tenths of 1 cent per pound. And so with the milled or cleaned rice, the Underwood bill fixed a duty of 1 cent per pound while the Wilson-Gorman Act fixed a duty of 1½ cents. Every one of the other tariff acts fixed a duty considerably over the rate proposed by House bill 7456 for cleaned rice, and in two of the acts, that of 1883 and 1864, the rate on cleaned rice was 2¼ and 2½ cents, respectively. The Underwood bill has demonstrated that it affords inadequate protection to the agricultural interests of this country, and the Republican administration and the Republican Party, pledged to a protective tariff rate, can not afford to reenact the Underwood rice rates when their record shows that in the past they have stood for a higher rate than that asked in my amendment, and when it is further considered that the rates proposed by the Finance Committee are much lower than those carried by the Wilson-Gorman Act of 1894.

We have had but a short experience, so far as rice is concerned, with the Underwood bill, because the World War had the effect of suspending all rates. It operated, however, 10 months before the beginning of the war, and we are told in the Summary of Tariff Information, 1921, page 695, that "imports of cleaned table rice in 1914, following the reduction of the duty from 2 cents to 1 cent per pound, were 73,744,997 pounds, about four times those of the preceding year."

It will be seen, Mr. President, that if the rate is now again lowered from the 2-cent rate of the emergency tariff on cleaned rice and graduated downward to the proposed 1-cent rate graduated downward, that even under pre-war normal conditions we would soon be put out of business. But these are not pre-war normal conditions which confront the American agriculturist to-day. We may hope to settle down after a while to a stable condition, but no one expects to see the pre-war normal conditions return, even after the rest of the world becomes stable. We are now and for a long time will be the only people who can pay cash in gold for goods or products. Therefore the world is looking to this market, and consequently we are constantly in danger of having our manufacturers and agriculturists undersold, aye, even at a price far below the cost of production. That condition will last for several years to come. During these unsettled world conditions we should first assure the domestic market to the American producer. But even those who oppose giving the advantage to the American producer would hardly object to allowing such a rate on rice as I propose, because it is even less than the average rate of previous tariff bills, except the two Democratic bills. It would be beyond understanding that this act should fix a rate below that of the Democratic tariff law known as the Wilson-Gorman Act.

I wish to say, Mr. President, that I hope the Finance Committee, through its chairman, will see the justice of the claim which I am presenting to the Senate, and will agree with me that the Senate should disagree to the committee amendment or accept my amendment, because it carries an equitable claim to which so many of my constituents feel they are justly entitled. The bill has been criticized on the ground that its rates are far higher than any previously enacted into law. The contention is without foundation as to many articles which have come under my observation. Certainly the duty on rice is ridiculously low, and I appeal to the Finance Committee and to the Senate to do justice to the American rice grower.

I ask leave to have printed as a part of my remarks the table which I send to the desk.

There being no objection, the table referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[4] Figures include only about 45 per cent of California crop.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, I desired to furnish this information at this time because there are contained statistics and tables in the summary and in the House hearings which deal almost exclusively with the years 1919 and 1920. Those are absolutely abnormal; they are not borne out by the results of any previous year's experience.

Perhaps I have injected this argument at an inopportune time, but it was for the purpose of getting these figures into the RECORD, and appealing to Senators that they may verify them with the documents to which they refer, so as to bear out the statement in time and before the schedule is actually taken up.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I shall avail myself of this opportunity to submit some remarks in connection with the subject just discussed by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD], namely, the proposed tariff rates on rice carried in the pending bill. The amendment which the Senator from Louisiana has indicated a purpose to present is substantially in conformity with existing law. Under the so-called emergency act the rates provided are as follows:

Cleaned or table rice, 2 cents per pound; uncleaned or rice free of the outer hull and still having the inner cuticle on, 1¾ cents per pound; paddy, or rice having the outer hull on, 1 cent per pound; rice flour, rice meal, and rice broken which will pass through a No. 12 wire sieve, one-half cent per pound.

So far as I know there is no convincing information in the record of the proceedings, either of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives or of the Finance Committee of the Senate, which justifies the committee amendment reported by the Senate Finance Committee. No complaint has been submitted to either House of Congress respecting the existing rates. They are believed to be fair and satisfactory, although there are some who think that the rates on certain kinds of rice should be increased.

As a cereal of national importance it can not be said that rice takes a prominent place. In five States it is cultivated extensively, and so far as my information extends it is not cultivated elsewhere in the United States. Those States are Arkansas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Texas, and California. There is some production of rice in Georgia and South Carolina.

In the year 1920 there were in cultivation in Arkansas about 181,400 acres, the average yield per acre being 42 bushels, the total production amounting to 9,889,000 bushels. The average price per bushel December 1 is quoted at $1.31. This statement of average price is in my opinion excessive. The total farm value estimated as of December 1 was alleged to be $11,645,000. The crop value per acre was $64.19.

In Louisiana the acreage was 700,000, the yield per acre 36 bushels, the production 25,200,000 bushels, the price per bushel $1.10, the total farm value of rice produced was $27,720,000, the value per acre $39.60.

In the State of Mississippi the production was quite small, the acreage being limited in 1920 to about 3,000 acres, the yield 31 bushels per acre, the production 93,000 bushels, the average price $2 per bushel, the farm value $186,000, and the value per acre, basis of December 1 last, $62.

In the State of Texas it is said that there were cultivated 281,000 acres, with an average yield of 34 bushels per acre, a total production of 9,554,000 bushels, the price per bushel $1.25, the total farm value of the rice crop that year in Texas being $11,942,000 and the value per acre being $42.70.

I have before me a table showing the acreage, the average yield per acre, the total production, and total farm values for the years 1909 to 1920, inclusive. Later I shall ask leave to insert that table in the RECORD with other facts, but now I wish to point out that from 1909 the total acreage cultivated in rice in the United States increased approximately 100 per cent up to the year 1920, inclusive. There was unquestionably a very great decline in the acreage during the year 1921. My information is that only about 900,000 acres was cultivated during that year.

The cost of production per acre for the years 1917 and 1918 has been investigated by the Department of Agriculture and is compared with the cost of production in 1910, all of which is contained in the hearings on general tariff revision, part 3, tariff information, 1921, page 1719.

The cost of production increased in 1921 to about twice what it was in the year 1917. It is estimated by the Department of Agriculture to have been about $60 per acre for the year 1920. This is more than twice the cost in 1910, 1917, and 1918.

I have also a table showing the importations of clean rice for the various years by months, and I will insert that in the RECORD also for the purpose of showing the effect of the tariff under various laws on importations. The rates carried in the bill as reported by the Committee on Finance are those of the Underwood Tariff Act. It is singular to me that the Finance Committee, having heretofore approved of an emergency tariff bill and secured its passage, would report an amendment to this bill cutting in two the duties on this important product with no reason assigned in the record for that action and with no one urging that course. I think it will be found upon investigation to have been a mistake on the part of the committee and that the amendment proposed by the committee is not justified.

The cultivation of rice in the United States as a farm industry is peculiar and distinct from the production of nearly every other crop. It was about 1895 when rice began to be produced under the present system of irrigation in States outside of the State of Louisiana. It was found that lands productive of rice were unsuitable for the cultivation of almost any other agricultural product. Prairie lands, for instance, in the State of Arkansas, which were formerly of merely nominal value, by reason of their use in the cultivation of rice have increased from approximately $2 to $5 an acre to between $50 and $100 per acre. That increase, in my judgment, has been entirely due to the use of those lands in the production of rice.

The American rice crop is not of sufficient quantity to affect the price of rice in the international trade, and the price of American rice is dependent upon and fluctuates with the price of foreign rice in the world market. It is estimated by the Arkansas Rice Growers' Cooperative Association that there now exists in foreign countries an available supply of foreign rice which may be exported to the United States amounting to more than 117,000,000 bags of 100 pounds each. This amount is approximately nine times the total annual production of the United States.

Oriental rice, rice grown in China and Japan, is produced in the same manner and by the same methods which were applied hundreds of years ago. All of the labor that pertains not only to its production but to the harvesting of the crop in those countries is performed by hand. In the United States the labor that is applied to the production and harvesting of rice is in a very important sense highly skilled labor and very high priced. Unquestionably if the principle of protection in any degree is to be applied to raw materials, if it is to be imposed on any agricultural product, it should be applied to rice. Every argument which may be urged in support of a tariff on wheat or other cereals applies with equal or greater force to the rice product.

It is very difficult to obtain the necessary accurate information for a reliable comparison between the cost of producing rice in the United States and the cost of producing rice in China and Japan and other oriental countries. A casual investigation of the subject would indicate that the labor cost in the United States is from 8 to 10 times the labor cost in the oriental countries. The rice product of this country is unquestionably a better product than that to be obtained from the oriental countries.

While the rice crop is not of great national importance, it is undoubtedly of particular interest to the States in which it is grown. The United States has increased production of rice by 100 per cent during the last 10 or 12 years, and there exists in this country now approximately 3,000,000 acres of land not in cultivation for any purpose which is adapted to growing rice. If the industry is continued this area will within a few years in all probability be cultivated for that purpose.

When the Underwood tariff law was enacted, carrying a reduction below the rates in the Payne-Aldrich law, and below the rates carried in the Wilson Act, importations of rice were very greatly increased. The table which I will print in the RECORD shows the increase which occurred in importations. The American rice acreage is undoubtedly too small materially to affect the price of foreign rice, but on the other hand, the price of American rice fluctuates with the price of foreign rice.

Under the circumstances there is no justification whatever in a bill materially advancing the rates on manufactured products, a bill presented as designed to protect American agriculture, for this amendment which reduces the prevailing rates on rice, and I apprehend that before the debates have concluded that this view will be expressed by the Senate.

Mr. President, I now ask leave to insert in the RECORD a brief, incorporating the tables and other material facts relating to this subject, submitted by the Arkansas Rice Growers' Cooperative Association.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

To the chairman and members of the Ways and Means Committee, Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: The rice growers, land owners, operators of irrigation plants, and the millers and distributors of rice in the States of Louisiana, Texas, and Arkansas, and all others either directly or indirectly interested in the rice industry, or affected by its success or failure, request and urge you to include in the new permanent tariff bill a schedule providing the House rates on rice.

The tariff rates which are proposed and which are thought necessary to safeguard the rice industry of the United States are as follows, and you are respectfully urged to include these rates in the approved rice schedule:

TABLE I.

	Cents per pound.
Cleaned (or table rice)	2
Uncleaned (or rice free of the outer hull and still having the inner cuticle on)	1¾
Paddy (or rice having the outer hull on)	1
Rice flour, rice meal, and broken rice which will pass through a No. 12 sieve	½

As a cereal of national importance rice does not take rank with wheat or corn, but in the three States mentioned it is of prime importance. The acreage devoted to the production of rice, and consequently the total production, has, with few exceptions, constantly increased since the year 1909, as will be shown in Table II below. It will be noted in this table that the production has more than doubled during the past seven years; that the 1919 crop had a farm value of more than a hundred million dollars, and that during the year 1918 and 1920 more than one million acres have been planted to rice, and in 1921 the acreage was approximately 900,000 acres.

[1] Rice Millers' Association estimate of December 20, 1920.

NOTE.—The United States Government estimates the cost of producing an acre of rice during 1920 at $60. At this rate, compared to the present farm value as shown in Table II, the loss to the producer amounts to approximately $17,185,295, to deliver the rough rice to the mills.

In October, 1913, the Underwood law became effective; and on the first full business month—November—after this law became effective, and after sufficient time had elapsed so that changed business conditions could become noticeable, it was perceived that an enormous increase in the importation of rice resulted. Table III gives the importation of cleaned rice by months from November, 1912, to October, 1914, inclusive, and also gives the percentage increase in importation under the low Underwood tariff law, as compared with that of the same months of the preceding year under the higher Payne-Aldrich Act. Your attention is called to the enormous increase in importations up to and including August, 1914. During the months of September and October, 1914, the commerce of the world was greatly disrupted and shipping was at practically a standstill, due to the advent of World War hostilities. However, the Pacific Ocean was open for commerce during this time, and the increase in rice imporations from neutrals during these months showed a perceptible increase over the importations during the same months in 1913.

The Underwood tariff act, effective October, 1913, provided a protection of only 1 cent per pound on cleaned rice, which is one-half the amount of the Payne-Aldrich Tariff Act. The increase in importation of cleaned rice is here shown to be practically wholly due to the decrease in the tariff protection, because over the period shown in Table III there was an actual decrease, approximating 5 per cent, in the importation of broken rice, rice meal, etc., the tariff on which had not been changed by the Underwood bill. For uncleaned rice, including paddy, there was a reduction from three-quarters of 1 cent per pound to three-eighths of 1 cent per pound in the tariff protection. There is normally but little business in this character of rice, but nevertheless this decrease in the tariff protection showed an increase of 5 per cent in the yearly importation following October, 1913, over the importation of the preceding 12 months. Your attention is called in this connection back to Table II, wherein the acreage planted is shown to have decreased from 827,100 in 1913, to 693,530 in 1914, a decrease of 16.2 per cent. This decrease in acreage can, in a large manner, be attributed directly to the unwillingness of the rice planters to embark upon farming operations for the production of a crop which they were admirably suited to produce, but from the sale of which they had no assurance of securing a living price because of the wholesale dumping of cheap foreign rice into our home markets, particularly Porto Rico. The war period again came to the rescue of the rice industry, greater production of all foodstuffs was urged by the Government, and it was certain that the producers of rice in Asia would not be able or inclined to put their wares on the American market during the war period.

[1] Rate on whole grain grade of completely milled rice.

The American rice crop is not of sufficient size to materially affect the price of rice in the international trade, hence the price of American rice is dependent upon and fluctuates with the price of foreign rices in the world's market.

Without considering the vast acreage in China, on which no reliable data can be secured, the United States has less than 1 per cent of the world's acreage, hence in the international rice trade our voice is extremely faint. If we do not have sufficient protection we will not only have to meet foreign rice in foreign markets but the competition will very likely be keen in our own home markets and in the markets of our insular possessions and at prices dictated by the Asiatic exporters.

There is at the present time in sight in foreign countries a known available supply of rice which constitutes an exportable surplus of 117,214,536 bags—100 pounds each—of cleaned rice. This amount is roughly nine times the total production in the United States.

The majority of the rice in the international rice trade originates in south Asia, including India (Burma), Siam, and Saigon, principally, and to a lesser extent Japan, Formosa, Korea, Spain, Italy, and Brazil. The prices, according to the latest quotations, are: Rangoon, grade No. 2, $2.68; Saigon, grade No. 1, $2.60; Siam, grade No. 1, garden variety, $3.45, delivered in Europe. These same rices may be shipped at the present rates of freight and on the same basic prices to San Francisco for $2.75, $2.40, and $3.07, respectively, and to New York or New Orleans for $3.20, $2.85, and $3.52, respectively. The prices quoted are on the regular commercial grades, with the insurance and freight paid to destination, and the prices are quoted on the basis of 100 pounds. It is true that our American rice is of better quality, but this advantage, when expressed in dollars and cents, amounts to only about three-quarters of a cent per pound. Including the present very meager tariff protection, rice from India can be sold at present prices for $3.75 per 100 pounds delivered, with duty paid, and would very likely be purchased by the consumer at this figure whenever the rice produced in the United States sells for as low as $5.75 to $6 delivered in New York. The freight cost for bringing rice from Hongkong to San Francisco is 8 cents less per hundred pounds than the freight rate on American rice grown at Crowley, La., and shipped by rail to New Orleans and by water to New York. It will be seen that when the price of American rice f. o. b. the southern mills reaches the 5-cent basis for "fancy" grade we may naturally expect competition from the Asiatic rices in New York and the adjacent territory.

The price of rice in Porto Rico is one of the most important factors governing its purchase by the natives, who are not connoisseurs of high-grade rice but buy it in large quantities only for its food value, therefore purchasing it at the cheapest possible price. The difference in value of three-quarters of 1 cent per pound, before mentioned as expressing the difference in quality between our rice and the Asiatic products, would not be sufficient inducement for the Porto Rican laborer to buy American rice. At the earliest moment after the price difference between the American cleaned rice delivered and the Asiatic rice delivered in Porto Rico exceeds 1 cent per pound—the proposed tariff protection—we will expect keen competition and underselling in Porto Rico. This is a good and dependable market for 10 per cent to 15 per cent of our production, or, roughly, 1,200,000 to 1,400,000 pockets.

There is another item of interest in connection with this question, and that is a comparison in the cost of production under the American methods and under foreign methods. It is true that in the United States machinery is used extensively in rice production, and comparatively large areas are handled by few men, while in the Orient a single man is able to successfully handle but a few acres. Our labor expense, of course, is in many instances as much as from fifty to one hundred times as great as theirs. Furthermore, the price of machinery and the cost of its upkeep have been materially increased during this era of high prices. The United States Government has just completed a survey of a large number of average rice farms in the State of Texas, and though the final results have not been officially given out, published preliminary reports state that it cost approximately $60 per acre to produce rice in 1920. With this information as a basis and with an average yield of 36 bushels—5-year average United States—per acre, the cost of 100 pounds of cleaned rice is shown to be $6 plus 50 cents, which is considered to be a fair price for milling, yields $6.50 per 100 pounds of cleaned rice when no insurance, transportation, or freight charges, selling charges, storage, etc., are included. Compare this price with the present price of foreign rices, and it is easy to see that there is a real and strong possibility that this country will likely be flooded with the cheap foreign rices. Reliable information as to the cost of production in foreign countries is found to be practically unobtainable even from governmental sources, but it is well known how rice is produced in these countries. In the first place, the family system of production is in vogue. Each family operates on small areas, nurtures by hand practically every square foot of soil, and produces the maximum possible rice crop. These orientals have as their main purpose the production of food for the family producing the rice. In years of poor crops their extremely careful and painstaking methods are found in many cases to stand between the planter and starvation, because even under adverse circumstances they generally produce sufficient for their home needs. With favorable growing and harvesting seasons, it is only natural that a surplus will be produced. Each family, farming its own plot and producing its own home requirements of rice, finds in favorable years that it has a surplus which it can not profitably use, hence it is sold for export. This surplus is gathered, a few bags at a time, by hundreds of traders who operate on flatboats in the rivers, and who buy this surplus rice from the producers. In exchange, articles of clothing, trinkets, inexpensive luxuries, and other commodities of commerce are given, thus still further lowering the price at which the trader secures the rice. These traders move their numerous small purchases through many channels to the great ports of export, where together they ultimately amount to enormous quantities. Since it is not needed in the countries where it is produced, it is offered for export, and the price at which it is offered very often bears but little relation to the cost of its production. For this reason it is very probable that if the actual cost of production of the rice which is now being offered for export at such low prices from the ports of Singapore, Karachi, Port Arthur, Bombay, Madras, Bangkok, and Calcutta were actually known, it would be considerably higher than the prices being quoted to-day by the exporters.

The ocean freight rates, which during the war period were extremely high, have been coming down at a rapid rate until at the present time rice may be transported at practically the pre-war basis of freight, and in some instances for even less.

In summarizing the arguments set forth in this brief it may be mentioned: (1) That though the rice crop of Louisiana, Texas, and Arkansas is of small importance nationally, it is of great importance to these particular States of the Union; (2) that the United States has increased its rice production considerably, and there is good reason to believe that with the proper economic consideration, encouragement, and sympathy it will continue to increase and become one of our great national crops; (3) that when the Underwood tariff bill, carrying a considerable reduction in the tariff rates on rice, became effective there was an immediate and enormous increase in the importations of cleaned rice, but with a decrease in importation of those rices which did not have the tariff rates decreased; (4) that the American rice acreage and production is too small to materially affect the price of foreign rice, but that, on the contrary, the price of the American rice fluctuates with that of its Asiatic competitor; (5) that the rice at the present time from India, Siam, and Saigon, where there is practically an unlimited supply and an enormous exportable surplus available for the international rice trade, may be to-day laid down in the ports of San Francisco, New York, and New Orleans at a price, including cost, freight, and insurance, which the Government has shown is about one-half that of the actual cost price of rice produced in Louisiana, Texas, and Arkansas; (6) that, regardless of production costs in the United States as compared with those costs in the Orient, the American rice producer must market his product in competition with the enormous quantities of this rice which constitutes an exportable surplus, and which is offered in the world's markets at a price which bears but little relation to the production cost in Asia.

An influx of Asiatic rice into the United States and into its insular possessions at prices lower than the American producer can possibly afford to offer it for is not only possible at this time and at any other time when the crops in the Orient are large, but this condition is also extremely probable. The rice producers and millers are taxing themselves to raise a fund for advertising purposes in an effort to help themselves and to popularize the consumption of American rice in America. They desire and expect your sympathetic consideration and request at your hands a proper adjustment of the tariff rates which will be favorable to their best business interests and a protection to the infant rice industry in this country. They request this tariff protection to assure them that America will not be used as a dumping ground for cheap foreign rices, and they are willing to assume all responsibility of placing the rice industry in the forefront of American agricultural interests.

There is still another point which should be given your careful consideration, since it has a bearing upon the food-producing ability of our Nation. There are at this time thousands of good citizens whose livelihood and employment depends primarily upon the success or failure of the rice industry, and also there are thousands and millions of dollars now invested in the many phases of the rice business which very properly expects your consideration. In 1920 there were 1,341,000 acres, in round numbers, planted to rice in the United States. This acreage was largely in the States of Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas, and California. There is, however, as much or more land of a similar type in these States mentioned and an additional acreage of over 2,000,000 acres in the other States bordering on the Gulf of Mexico. It has been estimated that there are now approximately 3,000,000 additional acres of land in the United States suitable for rice production, but which at the present time is unused for any agricultural purpose. It hardly appears necessary to call your attention to the fact that rice is largely produced on land of little value for other agricultural crops, much of it being raised in the great marshes where but few plants thrive except marsh grass. These large areas can all be easily made to produce enormous crops of rice, which is one of the best foods that nature affords, without the expenditure of a single cent of the Government's money for the building of dams or for other reclamation projects. However, without most advanced modern methods rice can not be produced in the United States profitably when thrown in direct competition with that produced in Asia with Hindu, Siamese, and Korean coolie labor, and without some chance of success private enterprise and capital will not take up this reclamation work. The Government now has an opportunity to offer a tariff protection to one of its infant agricultural crops, to lend its influence toward the development of these large areas of land largely unsuited to other crops, to foster the best business interests of thousands of its good citizens who only ask for an opportunity to "make good." By failing to act at this time, and thereby failing to protect the rice industry by adopting and approving an adequate protective tariff as proposed in this brief, there is a strong likelihood that the rice industry will decrease in importance and large areas of fertile land now productive will be turned back to pasture and marsh grass.

Respectfully submitted.

ARKANSAS RICE GROWERS' COOPERATIVE ASSOCIATION,
By CHAS. G. MILLER, Vice President.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, when the so-called emergency tariff bill came before the House dealing with agricultural products I was a Member of the House and voted for the bill. I thought some benefits came from certain schedules, and from other schedules there were disappointments. I do know, however, that the benefits to the rice industry were marked.

I live in the edge of the territory mentioned as the Arkansas rice fields. I knew it before rice was grown there. The lands were practically without value and most of them could have been bought at from $1.25 to $2.50 an acre. They were grazing lands of an inferior character. With the discovery, however, that rice of a superior quality could be grown on those lands they became among the most valuable lands of the State, ranging in value anywhere from $25 to $150 an acre. Prosperous towns and cities grew up in that territory, their future wholly depending upon the rice industry. Those lands are not well adapted for the growth of other agricultural products. The soil is shallow and is underlaid by what is known as a "hardpan," that holds water, so that the rice may be irrigated, and when the rice is ripened the water may be entirely drained off and the rice harvested. There are seven or eight counties in my State whose very life, industrially speaking, depends upon this industry.

The industry will thrive under the rates which were fixed in the original emergency tariff act, but it will perish if the rates which are now proposed in the pending bill shall be adopted. So the Republican members of the Committee on Finance ought to have the courage to do one of two things: They ought to strike out every particle of protection, and let those who are engaged in the rice industry know that they are to be destroyed, or else they ought to restore the rate under which it is apparent that the industry may thrive.

I am persuaded, Mr. President, that the committee will not follow the first suggestion but will follow the other suggestion. In other words, it is idle to offer a certain protection which does not protect but which simply prolongs the life of an industry and lets it die by degrees. If it is intended to protect it, give it the protection under which it may live. I hope, therefore, the committee will restore the rates on rice that were provided in the original emergency tariff act.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I merely wish to make a brief statement in reference to the duty on rice. I could not state the case as to the necessity of a duty on rice any better than it has been stated this afternoon by Senators who have already spoken. I entirely agree with them. I think it is absolutely necessary that there should be a duty on rice in order that the industry may be maintained in this country. So far as I am personally concerned, those Senators shall have that duty if my vote can give it. I am a protectionist not for any particular section of the country but for every part of the country. I hope that as to some of the other items, which are just as vital to other sections of the country as is the rice industry to the South, the Senators from that section will follow out the thought which has been expressed by them this afternoon.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the remark of the Senator from Utah indicates, perhaps, the reason why the Finance Committee, without evidence and without suggestion from any source, reported an amendment taking away the protection from the rice industry and reducing the tariff duty on rice to a purely revenue basis or to even a lower basis.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in order that the Senator from Arkansas may not be mistaken, I desire to say that the testimony which was taken before the Committee on Finance was to the effect that rice is raised in the South in an entirely different manner from that which obtains in any other country. It was stated that the machinery which is used for its production and the way in which the seed are planted are entirely different from the methods employed in China and Japan.

I wish to say further that some testimony showed that, so far as concerned the duty which was necessary to afford protection to rice, the rate proposed by the committee is sufficient. I, however, do not believe it is; but I do not want any misunderstanding about the matter. I speak only for myself and not for the committee; but I do not think any such charge as that intimated by the Senator from Arkansas should be made against the committee on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, there is not any reliable evidence in the record upon which to base the rates on rice which the Committee on Finance have reported. I have read the hearings in the House of Representatives and in the Senate, so far as I have been able to secure them—and, I presume, they are available—and all of the evidence supports the present rates on rice, with the exception that a suggestion has been made for a modification of the rate on a certain kind of rice which is used in the manufacture of canned foods; but that kind of rice, I understand, it is claimed does not come in competition with American-grown rice, for American-grown rice is not used for canning purposes.

In reference to the statement of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]—and I thank him for it—so far as it relates to the fairness of the rate on rice proposed by the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD], it is perfectly manifest, not only to the Senator from Utah but to other Senators, that if a tariff measure is to be based upon the protective principle, if the principle of protection is to apply to agricultural products, those products which are grown in a section of country where public men usually do not advocate the principle of protection ought not to be penalized and discriminated against; that the protection ought to be applied generally and fairly; and I understand that to be the position of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, I may say that I was led to take up the subject of the duty on rice at this time because of the conclusions which might be reached from the statements in the Summary of Tariff Information, which, without pretending to give any statistics for any special year, made the broad statement that in this country we produced enough rice for domestic consumption, and also had a surplus of 400,000,000 pounds for exportation. That, however, applied only to two years. That was the statement which I believed it was necessary to clear up in order to show conclusively the necessity for a tariff duty which would protect us. The statement that we normally made 400,000,000 pounds more than we needed might have been an excuse for the committee to have come to some other conclusion.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, few provisions of this bill are more important than the one which has just been discussed. I look on the other side of the Chamber and I see one Republican Senator present, and then I notice that one who belongs on the other side has strolled on this side. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] is prepared to make a very important speech on an important question. It does seem to me, and I am sure it would seem to the country if they knew the conditions, that the majority Members should stay here so that they may discuss intelligently the questions involved in the tariff bill, or at least sit and listen so that they may come to some intelligent conclusion. So I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator ought to apply his remarks to both sides of the Chamber.

Mr. HARRISON. On this side there are at least a dozen Senators present.

Mr. SMOOT. Frequently during the day there has not been more than one Senator present upon the Democratic side.

Mr. HARRISON. I withhold the suggestion until I state that on this side of the Chamber there are present the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. WATSON], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD], the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE]. I will not take up more time in the enumeration. I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Harrison	Nelson	Sterling
Brandegee	Hitchcock	Newberry	Sutherland
Broussard	Jones, N. Mex.	Nicholson	Swanson
Calder	Jones, Wash.	Norbeck	Townsend
Capper	Kellogg	Oddie	Underwood
Caraway	Kendrick	Overman	Wadsworth
Colt	King	Page	Walsh, Mass.
Curtis	La Follette	Pepper	Walsh, Mont.
Dillingham	Lenroot	Phipps	Warren
du Pont	Lodge	Pittman	Watson, Ga.
Fletcher	McCormick	Poindexter	Watson, Ind.
Frelinghuysen	McCumber	Pomerene	Weller
Gerry	McKellar	Robinson	Willis
Glass	McLean	Sheppard
Hale	McNary	Smoot
Harris	Moses	Spencer

Mr. NORBECK. I desire to announce that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is absent on business of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, there is an amendment proposed by the Committee on Finance of the Senate known as paragraph 33 (a). It reads as follows:

Cyanide: Potassium cyanide, sodium cyanide, all cyanide salts and cyanide mixtures, combinations, and compounds containing cyanide, not specially provided for, 10 per cent ad valorem.

I will state, in the first place, that this is a comparatively new product. It is a new solvent. When I say "new," I mean that it has been in use probably only 10 or 15 years. It has a very great bearing upon the profits not only of the gold and silver mining industry, as is generally supposed, but upon the citrus-fruit industry of the country. It is also a compound that has been found quite economical in the hardening of steel in a cheaper process than other steel-hardening processes. It is also a compound that is used almost exclusively in fumigation and by the various health departments in the destruction of vermin, rats, and disease-carrying animals and insects. That is the use of it. In the mining of gold and silver it is absolutely essential in an economic use. In the protection of the citrus-fruit trees of the country it has no substitute.

Mr. President, what is the purpose of the Senate Committee on Finance? It is to reverse the action of the House of Representatives, which left cyanide on the free list, and place it on the dutiable list. What is accomplished by it? Nothing is accomplished in the way of raising revenue. Who is protected by it? Only one corporation in the United States is protected by it—only one concern. It has no other purpose or effect than the sustaining of a monopoly in the manufacture and distribution of that product in the United States.

The hearings disclose, without contradiction or doubt, that there is but one concern in the United States that manufactures cyanide, and that concern at the time the war commenced was a German-controlled concern. When the war commenced it was controlled by the German cyanide monopoly, the only manufacturer of cyanide in Germany; and when we were about to go into the war this concern over here had a few extra shares transferred from the German subjects to some of the American-German citizens, so as to keep it out of the hands of the Alien Property Custodian. Notwithstanding that, the former Alien Property Custodian found that the sale was fraudulent, and the present Alien Property Custodian demanded possession of that property on the ground that it was controlled by aliens.

There was a dispute as to the transfer of a small part of this stock. That dispute has been settled by the Alien Property Custodian being represented on the board of directors, so that the concern may run; but the fact remains that there is but one manufacturer of cyanide in this country, and that is the Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co. and its subsidiary companies. That is not all. There is but one distributor of German cyanide in this country, and that is the same concern—the Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, will the Senator tell us where it is located?

Mr. PITTMAN. The Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co. has its offices in New York City. Its subsidiary plants are located at Perth Amboy, N. J., and at Niagara Falls, N. Y.

In the testimony of the representative of the Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co. we find the direct admission that individuals and corporations in this country other than Roessler & Hasslacher had been refused the right to purchase German cyanide, because, as the admission says, the Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co. are the sole and exclusive agents of the German concern in this country.

What is the result? You can not buy cyanide from Germany, because they refer you to their American agent, the Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co., and you can not buy it from any other manufacturer in the country because there is no other manufacturer in the country than the Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co. There never has been an attempt by anyone before the committee to show that those are not the exact facts. No one will now deny them.

What do you want to do? You have no competition within your country for this product that is absolutely essential to the citrus fruit industry as well as in mining. What do you want to do? You want to prevent any outside competition. That is what you are trying to do.

When did the outside competition arise? Mind you, the outside competition with this company arose only in this year. Up until now there was not any competition. Why? Because, as the testimony in this matter shows, there were only four producers of cyanide in the world that amounted to anything. They were the German concern, the Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co. in the United States, one big English concern, and a little bit of a concern in Czechoslovakia which never has amounted to anything. What does the evidence further disclose? It discloses the fact that the English concern and the German concern and the Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co. organized a subsidiary company at Niagara Falls and Perth Amboy to make cyanide, and they divided the stock three ways. What does the evidence here further show? It shows that this English concern never has tried to sell cyanide in the United States, and it shows that the German concern never has tried to sell cyanide in South Africa. It discloses absolutely that they divided the world between them as far as this product is concerned.

When this monopoly in the United States came back in their supplemental brief to answer these charges of monopoly they did not attempt to do it except to say, "Our patents have run out." Yes; their original patents ran out, but they have subsidiary patents that are protecting them. What did this agent of the Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co. testify to with regard to the efforts of the United States Government to make cyanide? He said they only had a process by a gentleman by the name of Professor Bucher, and his concern knew the process would not work, and it did not work, and the plant which was built in West Virginia shut down because they did not have the right kind of process.

Why did not the United States Government use the process used by the Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co. if their patent had run out? They could not use it. While the fundamental, original patents had run out the supplemental patents, which were essential to the carrying out of that process, had not run out, and they know it.

What are the profits of this concern in the United States? I want to read them to the Senate. They run up to as high as 900 per cent per annum. These people are talking about protecting a home industry.

I refer now to the hearings at page 4824. This statement as to the profits comes from the report of the Alien Property Custodian, and if it has ever been denied by the Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co. I can not find their denial.

During 1912 it earned 15½ per cent on its capital stock; 18 per cent in 1913; 34.7 per cent in 1914; 80 per cent in 1915; 75.7 per cent in 1916. It paid dividends out of profits to the extent of 16 per cent in 1912; 18 per cent in 1913; 25 per cent in 1914; 50 per cent in 1915; and 50 per cent in 1916.

The Niagara Electric Chemical Co. is a subsidiary of that company, organized solely for the purpose of making one of the essential ingredients of cyanide, and in which the English company and the German company each own a third. During 1912 it earned 852 per cent on its capital stock; 700 per cent during 1913; 894 per cent during 1914; 1,100 per cent during 1915; and 1,162 per cent during 1916. It paid dividends of 850 per cent in 1912; 700 per cent in 1913; 900 per cent in 1914; 1,100 per cent in 1915; and 1,000 per cent in 1916.

The Perth Amboy Chemical Works is another one of its subsidiaries, and we will hear from New Jersey on that subject later. This concern was also organized as a subsidiary company of the Roessler & Hasslacher Co. to exclusively engage in manufacturing cyanides.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, is this one of the industries for which they wanted the benefit of the American valuation plan?

Mr. PITTMAN. This is one of them. I think they asked for 33⅓ per cent ad valorem on the American valuation basis. I will read further. This is the other subsidiary company, the Perth Amboy Chemical Works. It earned during 1913 profits to the amount of 16.5 per cent on its capital stock, 42.9 per cent in 1914, 92.8 per cent in 1915, 90.6 per cent in 1916. It paid dividends of 16 per cent in 1913, 24 per cent in 1914, 75 per cent in 1915, and 100 per cent in 1916. That certainly looks as if that company ought to have some protection.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is that an infant industry?

Mr. PITTMAN. It is an infant industry.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What will it pay when it gets to be an adult?

Mr. PITTMAN. I should say that when that gets to be an adult, under the protection proposed, which protection will exclude the only possible competitor which has arisen, the Cyanamid Co. at Niagara Falls, on the Canadian side, which is made up of American citizens but is operating over there because the water power is a little cheaper, because over there the water power is not monopolized to the extent it is on this side—when this child gets to be an adult, under this protection there is no reason at all why the officers of these companies may not expect to treble the profits in the next three years.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Instead of getting back their capital every year they will get their capital back every four months.

Mr. PITTMAN. There is no reason why they should not, because they can then charge whatever the citrus fruit growers and the miners of this country can afford to pay.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, what is the tariff rate provided for in the pending bill?

Mr. PITTMAN. Ten per cent ad valorem.

Mr. POMERENE. What amount of revenue would that give to the Government?

Mr. PITTMAN. We will get down to the revenue presently. It would not give any to the Government, because the consumption of cyanide in this country was 15,000,000 pounds in 1914, and the consumption of cyanide in this country at the present time is less than 20,000,000 pounds, and the Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co. say that they are now supplying 17,000,000 pounds of that, and that when they are given this duty they will be prepared to supply the whole American demand.

The German monopoly will not attempt to compete, because it is a part of the American concern.

It never has competed with it during the 10 or 15 years the American concern has had the monopoly.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I just came in the Chamber, and I hope the Senator will pardon me for interrupting him, but is not this cyanide used somewhat in the mining of gold?

Mr. PITTMAN. I just stated that it is essential to the economic mining of gold and silver; but that is not all. As a matter of fact, there is more of it used in the protection of the citrous fruits of the country than is used in gold and silver mining.

Mr. CALDER. Does the Senator think that this 10 per cent rate would raise the havoc he has just referred to?

Mr. PITTMAN. It is absolutely certain, for the simple reason that this company can cut prices on the Cyanimid Co. of Niagara, Ontario, until they put them out of business, and when they have put them out of business they can run the price up to anything they please. How can they put them out of business? They are the exclusive agents of the whole German production. There is no question but that Germany can produce cyanide at pretty near half what it costs us to produce it in this country.

Mr. CALDER. Will not that drive out of business the concern to which the Senator is referring?

Mr. PITTMAN. It may drive them out of business, but that concern to-day is meeting that competition to this extent, that it is making its contracts with the miners and citrous fruit growers of this country, and has already entered into contracts with many of them for 25 years, but at a price at which they can not make it if you put this additional tax on them when they come into this country in competition with the Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co.

Let us see about the revenue—where we will get the revenue. The Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co. are now supplying 17,000,000 out of probably 20,000,000 pounds. There is only 3,000,000 to come in. Is not that right? It can not come in here except through that same concern, because they have a contract as the exclusive agents. As a matter of fact, it is the same concern, exactly the same concern.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Where is the location of the American Cyanamid Co.?

Mr. PITTMAN. It is at Niagara Falls, Canada.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. It is a Canadian company, is it not?

Mr. PITTMAN. It is a Maine company.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Is it not located in Canada?

Mr. PITTMAN. I said that at first.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Does it not employ Canadian labor?

Mr. PITTMAN. I said that; but it is not controlled by foreigners. It is controlled by citizens of the United States who were forced out of the United States by reason of the power trust in this country. They are paying just as high wages over there as are paid on this side, just the same wages. There is no difference at all between the cost on the other side and that on this side, except that put on artificially by the power trust on this side.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I presume the Senator knows that the New Jersey industry is American owned, does he not?

Mr. PITTMAN. I know that the New Jersey industry is controlled by the Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. It is controlled by American stockholders entirely.

Mr. PITTMAN. If you want to call that concern an American concern, yes.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I do, if it is controlled by American stockholders who are American born, too.

Mr. PITTMAN. That could be so, but the history of this thing is this, that Roessler and Hasslacher came across to this country from Germany as the agents of the German cyanide concern. They started their concern as the agents of the German company, and the German concern had control of it until a few days before we entered the war. Then the German company transferred just enough stock to these naturalized Americans to put the control in the hands of Americans, and the question now is at issue as to whether that sale was done just for the purpose of concealing the real ownership. The Alien Property Custodian is acting on such contention. But the fact remains that there is not any competition between the German concern and the American concern; not a bit. Whenever it is more profitable to sell the cyanide from the American end of it, they sell it that way; and whenever it is more profitable to sell the German stuff through them as agents, they sell it that way, and the evidence shows it. The evidence shows that they could make 6 cents more a pound by selling some of the German stuff, and therefore instead of making it they took the German stuff and sold it as agents.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Then the question is, Whether we shall protect an American industry, employing American labor, or shall we put this product on the free list and allow it to be imported, at the expense of American labor?

Mr. SMOOT. By the same people.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. And by the same people.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is the question, I will admit for argument. According to the testimony of the Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co. agent, they and their subsidiaries employ 250 men in the cyanide industry. Those are the 250 you are going to protect, and we know there are over 50,000 people directly employed in the industries which are using this stuff. How about that? But competition can not put out of business concerns that make the enormous profits that these companies admit they make.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. That is quite true of any of these articles.

Mr. PITTMAN. We know another thing—at least, the Senator knows it himself—that nearly half of the gold mines of this country are shut down because gold has a fixed price, and the steel, the lumber, the powder, the machinery, the fuel, and everything that they use in getting gold out of a ton of ore has gone up two or three times in price. And when they shut down there are thousands of miners thrown out of work, who are idle to-day. What do you want to do? You want to add 10 per cent of the cost of production in those gold mines, which have no way of passing it onto anybody else, as you can pass on a duty on other things that have no fixed price. They have to pay it and take it out of their profits, if there are any.

It has to be figured as a permanent cost of mining, because they can not add it to the selling price of the gold. You want to throw out of work 20,000 men engaged in mining under the excuse that you are doing the whole thing to help 250 men. You are willing to place a burden on fruit raisers under the excuse that it is necessary to help 250 men. It is the most absurd argument.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The Senator exaggerates. The 10 per cent ad valorem is a very small added cost to the process. It will not throw that number of men out of employment. Furthermore, he loses sight of another very important factor that in connection with this American industry, manufacturing 15,000,000 pounds of cyanide of potassium, the American manufacturers of caustic soda, if this industry is destroyed, will lose the market for 15,000,000 pounds of that product, because it is a component part. The ammonium manufacturers will have to find a market for 6,000,000 pounds of their product, while 7,000,000 pounds of American-burned charcoal will be lost to its producers. I have letters here protesting against the taking off of this duty and asking that it be made 33 per cent, from the wood products people, who furnish the charcoal products for the manufacture of this cyanide of potassium.

The effect is far-reaching. I think we have to look at this from the standpoint of the entire American industry and not only the standpoint of the users—the mines of the West. Under the Payne-Aldrich law there was a duty of 12½ per cent. It was reduced in conference from 25 per cent to 12½ per cent, and it practically destroyed and did destroy the industry in this country, but during the war it was built up again and it was very necessary from the standpoint of national protection. The product was used and utilized as a war product, and it was built up through this factory with German capital that came here and is now Americanized.

But the question is whether we are going to protect that industry and have an American industry, or whether we are going to give Germany and Canada a monopoly. That is the question. Of course, if the Senator wants that he can move to put the item on the free list, but I think it is an unwise policy. I believe in protecting the American industry.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator does not believe in protecting the gold and silver mining industries, in obtaining at a reasonable rate an essential of those industries. He does not believe in protecting the electro factories in this country in obtaining reasonably one of the essentials of their industry. He does not believe in protecting the men who are engaged in certain characters of steel hardening. He does not believe in protecting the fruit growers. In other words, the situation is this——

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I beg to——

Mr. PITTMAN. Just a moment, please. There is but one concern in this country, with its subsidiary, manufacturing this article. Is not that a fact?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Does the Senator contend that no other concern can manufacture it under proper protection?

Mr. PITTMAN. There was protection on this product until it was taken off in the Underwood-Simmons tariff law of 1913, and during the seven years it was under the high protective tariff of the Payne-Aldrich law no other concern could build up in this country, and never did.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. They never made any of it. The Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co. did not make the product. They imported it.

Mr. PITTMAN. But they were supplying cyanide. They did supply cyanide, did they not?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Yes; they imported it; yes.

Mr. PITTMAN. No; they manufactured it, too.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I think not.

Mr. PITTMAN. They said that they built up the manufacture of cyanide of potassium under the Payne-Aldrich law.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. CALDER. Will the Senator tell me whether the added cost of the entire production of a ton of ore is increased more than 2 cents by this added duty?

Mr. PITTMAN. Does the Senator know how cyanide works?

Mr. CALDER. No; I do not know; but my information is that it adds about 2 cents to the entire cost of producing a ton of ore.

Mr. PITTMAN. Of course, that is problematical. It is not used exactly in the same amount in the reduction of different ores. It is used in varying quantities, depending upon the material to which it is applied. I think the amount they would probably use in our section of the country—because I do not know about any other section—would probably run at 10 or 15 cents a ton of ore.

Mr. CALDER. My information is that it was less than 2 cents, and that 2 cents a ton would not tend to stop the mining of it.

Mr. PITTMAN. No; it does not always stop the mining of it, but it does do this. First, let us discuss what may stop mining. It would not affect the mining one particle in my section of the mining country, although it would unjustly take thousands of dollars out of the pockets of miners and give it to a monopoly. It would simply add so much taxes to the output, and that is all. The producers could not pass it on in the sale of their gold and silver, because they get only so much for their gold and silver. They do not sell it to somebody else like shoes might be sold. They would have to pay that tax themselves and could not pass it on. It would cost the people in my vicinity $150,000 or $200,000 for the purpose of giving it to the Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co.

But in California, on the mother lode, where the ore runs about $6 a ton in gold, every penny counts, every cent means something. The mines sometimes run along for months right on the margin of whether they will pay or not pay, just on the edge. When we start to figure 5 or 10 cents a ton on this item and 5 or 10 cents a ton on that item, the first thing we know we have 50 cents a ton, composed of items neither one of which amount to much but in the aggregate they do, and the mine closes down.

They are now trying to open up the great Comstock lode in Nevada, that great lode which produced $645,000,000. They worked it down until now there are great bodies of ore which run between $5.50 and $7 a ton in silver. It takes a lot of cyanide for silver. There is now a Colorado syndicate undertaking to spend $4,000,000 to put up works for that low-grade ore, and that sum must be expended before they can make a cent. The margin of profit estimated by their engineers on that proposition is about 50 cents a ton. Every cent that is added to the cost here and there is jeopardizing the great industry which is just starting up.

It is not that alone. I am not basing my argument so much on that. I am basing it upon the fact that this duty is not even in keeping with the Republican policy and principles as I understand them. I do not believe there is a Senator on the Republican side who will assert that he would use a protective tariff for the purpose of perpetuating a monopoly in this country.

The agents of the Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co. before the Finance Committee complained that the House of Representatives had gone back on the Republican doctrine. They complained that the Republicans in the House had gone back on their protection policy. Why? Because the House almost unanimously refused to grant them any duty on cyanide. The Ways and Means Committee of the House almost unanimously refused to grant them any duty on cyanide. Why? Because the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives and the Members of that body were absolutely convinced from the evidence that this is a monopoly; that there is no competition with it from Germany or from England; and that the only competition at all is a new company, the American Cyanamid Co., with headquarters at Niagara Falls, Ontario, and that it is the purpose and the object of this American monopoly, under the name of the Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co., to do everything in their power to exclude this competition.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. As the Senator undoubtedly knows, there was considerable difference of opinion in the committee not only as to what duties should be accorded to the product but also as to whether any duty should be imposed upon it. The committee decided on a 10 per cent ad valorem duty.

But the Senator from Nevada has just made a statement which I think perhaps needs some consideration in the determination of whether or not a duty shall be given. The Senator said that the American company is a monopoly and that practically all the cyanide is manufactured by this monopoly. What the Senator said is true. That is the case. Canada also has but one manufacturing plant, and that is also a monopoly. In Germany, under their cartel system, they have practically a monopoly; all of the little companies are combined into one, which operates under a single head.

Therefore we have a monopoly in Germany, a monopoly in Canada, and a monopoly in the United States. There is no question that if every one of those three was left entirely alone to fix the prices, we would undoubtedly pay rather heavily for our cyanide. There is competition between the Canadian monopoly and the American monopoly, and also some competition between the German cartel or monopoly and the American monopoly.

The Senator will remember that when we got into trouble and needed this cyanide or sodium cyanide very badly, the price went up from about 10 cents, I think, to practically $2 per pound. That shows the situation we would be in whenever we were not producing it in the United States. Is there not some danger that if we do not protect the home industry, even though we have but one manufacturer, as against another manufacturer in Canada and another manufacturer in Germany, and if we put the American entirely out of business, that the other two may easily combine and fix our prices? Is it not best, if we can do it, to maintain an industry in the United States even though it costs on the basis of what may perhaps in the near future be the equivalent of an ad valorem duty of 1½ cents a pound, and if it comes down to 10 cents a pound, the old price, it would be simply 1 cent a pound? I would like to hear the Senator upon that single proposition of whether or not it is not best, even at a little heavier expense, to maintain an American plant in the United States, even though it is a monopoly, as we all agree that it is.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President——

Mr. PITTMAN. Let me answer the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. WILLIS. I want to ask the Senator from North Dakota a question.

Mr. PITTMAN. I prefer to answer the Senator myself and then the Senator from Ohio can ask him a question.

Mr. WILLIS. Very well.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator from North Dakota stated several hypothetical questions, one whether it is not a good idea to maintain an industry in this country which demonstrated that it was necessary in case of war. I may answer, in the first place, that the American Cyanamid Co., which is a Maine corporation and which is made up of American citizens and which simply has its works across the river there in Ontario at Niagara Falls, because power is cheaper there, not only was more patriotic and more of an American concern than the Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co. during the war, but that the cyanamid company did turn over the entire product of its works in Canada as directed by the various departments of the United States Government, and made such material with that plant as this Government demanded for war purposes.

Mr. McCUMBER. That was because we were in a common cause and united at that time.

Mr. PITTMAN. Undoubtedly. The plant which the Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co. is trying to run out of business, mind you, is that chemical company which has its plant across the river from them and which is made up of American citizens.

That is what they are trying to run out of business. They are not trying to run out the German concern. They were sent over here by the German people. They were sent here to organize an agency in this country and they did organize an agency. As I said a moment ago, the Alien Property Custodian reported that at the time we got ready to go into the Great War the control of the stock of this Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co. was owned by enemies in Germany, and they still own it, according to the stand of the Alien Property Custodian. The German people, with their majority stockholding in the American company, do not care whether the product which is sold here is manufactured here or manufactured in Germany. They are willing that it shall be manufactured where they can make the most money out of it; and that is but natural. If a duty is placed on it here, and it can be sold to the limit of that duty, they will let it be manufactured here, as they have done in the past. Under the duty of the Payne-Aldrich tariff law before the commodity was put on the free list by the Democratic tariff law in 1913, how much do Senators suppose was then shipped from Germany? Not much, as Senators will see if they examine the statistics. Why? They got the benefit of the duty without paying the duty is the reason, of course. We all know that.

I will answer the Senator directly and say that this duty is not essential at all—and I do not believe he thinks it is—in order to keep the Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co. going in this country. I think that the profits of that institution, as shown by the report of the Alien Property Custodian, and as shown in the hearings of the committee, and never denied by the Roessler & Hasslacher Co., prove that they could sell the material for about half what they are now selling it for.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator from Nevada yield to me for another suggestion on that point?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. McCUMBER. Of course, the testimony on behalf of the American company taken before the committee shows that they need a rate which is equivalent to 30 per cent.

Mr. PITTMAN. I know that they wanted 33⅓ per cent.

Mr. McCUMBER. But here is a telegram which I received only the other day—of course, it comes from an interested source and due allowance may be made for that—and this is the way it reads:

NEW YORK, N. Y., April 10, 1922.

Hon. PORTER J. McCUMBER,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.:

An American dye manufacturer has just purchased several carloads of Canadian cyanide at a price 5 cents below American cost to manufacture. Why discriminate by protecting one essential industry with an embargo while another is given a paltry 10 per cent? Our original request for 33⅓ per cent should be granted.

THE ROESSLER & HASSLACHER CHEMICAL CO.
P. SAMUEL RIGNEY.

If what they state is true, does not the Senator from Nevada think that they ought to have some protection, inasmuch as the other company, having the cheaper power, can manufacture somewhat cheaper?

Now, I agree with the Senator from Nevada in that I want competition; and if the duty which we allow should seriously interfere with honest competition in that commodity, I should not be in favor of it. Their statement, however, is right up to date that the Canadian company are furnishing this commodity at about 5 cents a pound less than their actual cost of production.

Mr. PITTMAN. But there has been submitted to the Committee on Finance no evidence which I have seen to sustain that statement, and I have read all of the evidence.. Now, in a telegram sent by an interested party it is stated that a Canadian company is selling the product for 5 cents lower than the American company can possibly manufacture it. I say I do not believe it, and I base the statement upon the evidence taken before the Committee on Finance. The profits which were admittedly made by this concern do not indicate that they were ever running close to the wall when they were selling this product at 21 cents a pound. Even during the World War they never sold it any higher than 30 cents a pound; and during all that time they were making enormous profits—from 50 to 100 per cent on their capital.

If they are held down to the profits to which they are entitled I think their earnings alone will disclose the fact that they can make and sell the product for 10 cents a pound instead of asking 20 cents a pound.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, so far as my State is concerned, of course, the people of Utah are very much interested in getting cyanide just as cheaply as they can possibly get it, and my action has been with a view to bringing that about as nearly, in my judgment, as I thought it could properly be brought about.

The Senator from Nevada speaks of the profits made by this company; but the Senator must know that those profits are not made on cyanide. This company manufactures all sorts of chemical compounds, the manufacture of cyanide is a very small part of their business, and the only reason why I support a 10 per cent duty on cyanide is because I think it is best for every user of cyanide in the United States.

I will state to the Senator frankly why I am of that opinion. The Roessler & Hasslacher Co. are, in my judgment, nothing more than the agents of the German cartel. The cartel has never sold cyanide in this country except through that agency either before the World War or since. That company has the entire agency for all the cyanide which is shipped into this country from Germany.

Mr. PITTMAN. I misunderstood the Senator. I thought he said that they did not have an exclusive agency.

Mr. SMOOT. I said they did have it.

Mr. PITTMAN. Very well. But these subsidiary companies are not engaged in any other business than manufacturing cyanide and its compounds.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, just as surely as we live, this is what is going to happen if we put cyanide upon the free list: So far as the manufacture of cyanide in this country by the Roessler & Hasslacher Co. is concerned, it is going to cease, for they can make greater profits by buying cyanide in Germany and selling it in this country than they can if it is put on the free list, and selling it in competition with Canada.

I am as sure as that I live that that will be what they will do; they will import it into this country, and they tell me that is what they will do under the 10 per cent duty.

Mr. PITTMAN. Of course they will. The only reason they want the 10 per cent duty is to put the Cyanamid Co. out of business.

Mr. SMOOT. They do not want to put themselves out of business if they think they can make cyanide; but if they are going to ship it here from Germany and control the price and destroy the industry in America and kill the industry in Canada—and I rather think they can from the figures shown and the prices submitted—then I want them to pay for bringing it here, because if they destroy the industry in America and if they destroy the industry in Canada they will not only advance the price 10 per cent when that is accomplished, but they will advance it 33⅓ or 40 or 50 or 100 per cent, and we will have to pay that price.

I am perfectly willing to give these people a chance and to say to them, "You shall have an opportunity to manufacture the commodity in this country; but we are not going to give you any more protection than 10 per cent, although we will give you that." If they can produce cyanide in this country as cheaply with the 10 per cent added as it can be produced in Germany, that will allow it then to be made in the United States; otherwise it will be made in Germany and the industry here will not survive. The manufacture of this particular commodity is only a small part of their business. They are making chemicals of all kinds, and during the war they made untold profits, unconsionable profits, which amounted to robbery, if you please; indeed, that is the only way the prices which they charged and obtained may be designated.

Mr. President, I want, if I can, to have competition in this country with Germany and with Canada, and I think the only way we can bring that about and for the domestic industry to live is to provide a 10 per cent duty. If we do not do that, Germany in a very little while will control this market and then our gold miners and our citrus-fruit producers will pay the penalty.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator wants to have this concern in operation in case we need them again as we needed them in time of war?

Mr. SMOOT. I want them to operate.

Mr. PITTMAN. And he wants the same bunch of robbers who robbed us before to continue their operations?

Mr. SMOOT. Not at all. They will have to compete with the Canadian manufacturers to the north, because the manager of the Canadian company when he was in my office—I think he was the manager of the company; if not, he was an officer of the company—told me they could make the commodity for less in Canada than it could be made in the United States, and not only that but they have a better process than that employed in the United States by reason of a patent under which they can make cyanide cheaper than it is being made here.

Mr. PITTMAN. Do I understand that the Senator wants to impose a tariff against improved processes?

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, well, Mr. President, that often happens.

Mr. PITTMAN. It does?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; it often happens.

Mr. PITTMAN. Because manufacturers in foreign countries have better and cheaper processes, the Senator wants to prevent the American people from getting the benefit, not of natural conditions, but of genius and initiative?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Canadian producers have a patented process for the manufacture of acetic acid, so that the United States can not compete with them in the making of that commodity. That process, of course, is patented in the United States and in all other countries of the world, and can not be used by us.

Mr. PITTMAN. Therefore we are not going to have the benefit of inventions in Canada, is that it?

Mr. SMOOT. That is exactly it; there can be no question about it at all.

Mr. PITTMAN. I knew that the Senator favored a duty to protect the American producer against cheaper foreign labor, but I did not know that he favored a duty for the purpose of protecting American industry against ingenuity and genius and the more economical production by virtue of such genius. Is that the idea?

Mr. SMOOT. If we are going to maintain the American industry it is necessary to do that; that is the only way it can be done, with the exception of a method which we have tried time and again to have adopted without success, namely, a provision compelling any firm or individual, foreign or resident in the United States, taking out a patent in the United States to use the patented process in the United States. We can not, however, it seems, secure the passage of such a law through Congress.

Mr. PITTMAN. I expect that the next Finance Committee will be holding hearings to determine whether the Canadian is a better business man than the American, and I assume that if the testimony shows that the Canadian is the better business man, the committee will conclude that a duty of 10 per cent should be levied in order to make up the difference in business ability.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought the Senator from Nevada was discussing the matter in a serious vein and from a business point of view. I did not think that he was going into the realm of speculation and discuss something which is so foreign to any thought we on this side have had that we imagined no one would even give any time to its consideration.

Mr. PITTMAN. I have never had as much to do with business concerns as has the Senator from Utah, but I have learned much about them from the hearings. I know that the Roessler & Hasslacher Co. has been silent with regard to the facts bearing upon their costs of production of cyanide. I know that company and its subsidiaries have made enormous profits at the prices for which they were selling cyanide. There is no proof that they require protection, and the circumstances are against them.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to ask the Senator from Utah a question?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes.

Mr. WILLIS. I am not particularly interested in the merits of different monopolies. The Senator from North Dakota has said, parenthetically, that there is an American monopoly, a monopoly in Canada, and one in Germany. What I want to know is what is there in the nature of this business that will necessarily make this concern a monopoly if we adopt the proposal of a 10 per cent ad valorem duty? Why is it going to be a monopoly in this country? Has this concern the control of a patent? Why can not other concerns enter the business?

Mr. SMOOT. They can, Mr. President; but there is only a limited demand for this article in the United States.

Mr. WILLIS. There is no reason why this duty is going to create or maintain a monopoly in this country.

Mr. SMOOT. There is a monopoly in this country to-day, and there is a monopoly in Canada.

Mr. WILLIS. I understand that, but there is nothing in the duty that will continue a monopoly, necessarily.

Mr. SMOOT. Not at all. Any American citizen or any other citizen has a perfect right to establish an industry for the manufacture of cyanide.

Mr. WILLIS. The Senator from Nevada suggests that the profits ran up to 600 per cent or 900 per cent, and if they are that high there will be a number of concerns entering into it.

Mr. SMOOT. There is an explanation for that. Their profits were not on cyanide. Their profits were more than all the cyanide they made put together, every dollar of it, if it was given to them.

Mr. PITTMAN. Show me that in the hearings.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know that it is in the hearings, because we did not bring it out in the hearings.

Mr. PITTMAN. Oh, you did not? Why not?

Mr. SMOOT. I did not know it until afterwards.

Mr. PITTMAN. I would rather have the evidence on that subject.

Mr. SMOOT. I know the Senator would.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will say that there is no evidence before the committee to that effect.

Mr. SMOOT. There is evidence before the members of the committee, Mr. President. There is no doubt about it at all.

Mr. PITTMAN. I am not talking about the private conversations between the representatives of the Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co. and individual Senators; but I say that in the hearings there is no evidence in support of that statement, and I defy the Senator to point it out.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. I just want to ask this question: Of course I understand that, generally speaking, when it comes to the framing of a tariff bill no American can do anything in competition with a foreigner. That is the patent fact; but I should like to know what the evidence is which demonstrates that cyanide can be made so much cheaper in these other countries than it can be made in this country, particularly in view of these profits. My knees almost smote together when I heard the Senator from New York say that this company that had been making six or seven or eight or nine hundred per cent might go to the wall in the event that we did not impose this tariff; and I should like to know just what the evidence is as to the cost of production in these other countries as compared with the cost in this country, if there is any. Of course I understand what the claim is, that we can not do anything at all in this country compared with the others.

Mr. SMOOT. No; the Senator should not say that. I get my information as to the process that is used in Canada being superior to that used in the United States from members of our own Tariff Commission. That is where I get my evidence from.

Mr. POMERENE. I should like to know what the evidence is. Here is the assertion. I should like to know the evidence. I should like to know the details of it, if we can get them.

Mr. SMOOT. The only evidence is this: After an investigation by experts of the Tariff Commission, they report that to be a fact.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. As bearing upon this question of the necessity for information——

Mr. POMERENE. We do not need that in making a tariff bill.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Apparently it has not been so considered; but a statement has been made here regarding the difference in the cost of production of acetic acid here and in Canada, and the Senator from Utah has referred to that as illustrating the conditions which obtain in the cyanide industry. There is no evidence in the record regarding the cost of either of these products. The Senator from Utah has referred to acetic acid, and, as I say, there was no evidence upon the subject; but I am in receipt of a telegram from the Shawinigan Products Co., of Shawinigan Falls, regarding acetic acid, and here is what it says:

Reference acetic acid, our London office advises Sherwin-Williams offering 80 per cent acid at 30 cents per pound c. i. f. London. Best price we able to make, 42 per pound. Can not explain this except their cost of manufacture less than ours.

There, at least, is a concrete statement.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, that may be one strength of acid and the American product may be another. The Senator knows that he has asked the representatives of the Tariff Commission what the process of manufacturing acetic acid in Canada is, and that is 100 per cent. That is the strength they make it there—100 per cent.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Yes; I understand that.

Mr. SMOOT. And we begin with ours about 40 per cent.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Yes; lower than that.

Mr. SMOOT. Thirty-two per cent, I think.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. No; 28 per cent is the lowest I have seen.

Mr. SMOOT. It may be even as low as 28; and then every process from that up, in order to get it into glacial acetic acid, constitutes added cost in the making of it.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. But the Senator was making all sorts of statements the other day as to why this Shawinigan Falls concern could make any kind of acetic acid cheaper than it could be made in the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. Why, they make only one kind. The Senator from Utah did not make any such statement as that.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator from Utah contended that they could put a little water in it and then they would have a lower grade.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; but the Senator from Utah said that nobody was a big enough fool to do that—to pay freight on water, and reduce the strength of his product, when whoever bought it had to take the water out of it. I knew that even the people up in Canada would not do that, and that is what I said.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I just want to observe that the evidence here surrounding all these items is either absolutely unreliable or absolutely lacking. There is nothing in the nature of definite evidence regarding the cost of production of a single item in this schedule or in this bill. Neither committee in the House or in the Senate called anybody before it to ascertain the actual cost of production of any one of these articles either here or anywhere else.

Mr. SMOOT. Did the Senator say that the Canadian people could not make this product for less than 42 cents per pound?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. That is what this telegram says. They say that the American Sherwin-Williams Co. quote a price of 30 cents per pound c. i. f. London for 80 per cent acetic acid, and this concern wires that it can not sell it there at less than 40 cents.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have here the paper issued called Drug and Chemical Markets, giving daily quotations; and in the issue of April 26, 1922, the price of glacial acetic acid by the barrel of 100 pounds is given as 8½ cents. I can buy 100 pounds of it, 100 per cent pure, for 8½ cents a pound.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, if the Senator will just allow me to make a suggestion, inasmuch as we got through with acetic acid I hope we will not go back every day to this vinegar item. If we continue such a long argument on it, I am afraid that we will pickle the whole tariff bill with this vinegar discussion.

Mr. POMERENE. That would be a good thing.

Mr. McCUMBER. My purpose, however, was to answer the question asked by the Senator from Ohio as to what accounted for the difference in the cost of production on the Canadian side and on the American side. The evidence before the committee is, first, that the use of the hydroelectric power which is used on both sides by the Canadians at one-half the price that the Americans have to pay for their power gives them a very material advantage in the cost; secondly, that the Canadians are not compelled to pay any income tax upon the income derived from the manufacture of this product, as I understand the testimony, which to a certain extent amounts to a bonus for its production. That is the principal difference that accounts for the cheaper production on the Canadian side. They also have a patent on a certain process of manufacture, which gives them a certain advantage. I do not think there is any question but that it costs considerably more on the American side. Whether or not this 10 per cent just exactly measures that difference in cost, I can not say positively, but I think it is very near it.

Mr. POMERENE. As it appealed to me, it seemed to me that there could not be very much difference, either in the cost of the raw materials or in the cost of the labor, between the Canadian plants and the United States plants.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think the cost of the labor is about the same, and undoubtedly the cost of the material is about the same; but the patented process which they have, taken in connection with the fact that their hydroelectric power costs them only about half as much and that they are freed from certain taxes with relation to it gives them a very considerable advantage in the manufacture.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I desire to observe that the recent use of the lash by the Senator from North Dakota is hardly in keeping with his general spirit of urbanity and fairness. Moreover, to undertake to use the lash and then prevent anyone from making any reply is certainly beside the usual characteristics of the Senator from North Dakota. I regret that as this discussion proceeds he should step aside from the urbanity and fairness which is usually found in his procedure. I desire to state that the reason why I mentioned acetic acid at all was because the Senator from Utah referred to it; and if the Senator from North Dakota will observe what is going on, he should use his lash at the place where the trouble starts.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will ask the Senator from Utah if he will kindly accept the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes, I will; and, really, the lash has not hurt me at all. I referred to the patent on acetic acid. I did not refer to the rate on acetic acid, or the price of it.

The Senator from Nevada defied me to produce any testimony here showing the profits of this company—not only the profits of this company in the United States, but its profits in comparison with other companies. I do not want to take the time of the Senator——

Mr. PITTMAN. Oh, I want the Senator to. Go right ahead. If the Senator has found anything there that will enlighten the Senate, let him get it out.

Mr. SMOOT. In answer to the charge that was made here and read by the Senator as to the profits that were made during the war, this is the testimony that was presented to the committee——

Mr. PITTMAN. On what page?

Mr. SMOOT. On page 4847 of the hearings:

The Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co. has been in existence since 1889 and the Niagara Electro Chemical Co. since 1895, and each year a part of the earnings of said companies was used in the earlier enlargement and improvement of their manufacturing plants, so that in 1919 the invested assets of said companies were far in excess of the original capitalization.

On April 30, 1919, the combined capital stock authorized and outstanding of the Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co. and its subsidiaries amounted to $1,800,000, while the total assets on that date amounted to about $8,000,000, no part of which was represented by licenses, patents, or good will.

The balance sheet of the American Cyanamid Co. as of June 30, 1918, shows the authorized capital stock to be $18,000,000, of which $14,588,500 was issued. The balance sheet of said company as of June 30, 1918, gave the total assets as $17,609,135.97, the two principal items of which are $5,523,129.05 for licenses, patents, and capitalization expenses and $4,865,141.30 investments in subsidiary companies.

The total gross sales of the Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co. and its subsidiaries for the four months ending April 30, 1919, aggregated $6,898,088.17, while the total gross income for the same period amounted to $7,092,898.75. The aggregate net income of said three companies for said period was $430,581.87. (From condensed consolidated statement of income and expenditures prepared by the Alien Property Custodian and printed as part of a notice of sale of the German-owned stock of the aforesaid company.)

That is the statement that was made by the Alien Property Custodian.

In order that your committee may draw its own conclusion and make its own comparison of the earnings of the Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co. with that of the American Cyanamid Co., we beg to submit the following figures from the report of the president of the American Cyanamid Co. on behalf of the board of directors, dated August, 1919. This report shows that the gross sales of said company for the full year ending June 30, 1918, amounted to $6,194,668.15; that the total gross income for said period was $8,702,276.40; and the net income derived therefrom amounted to $1,601,410.36.

By comparing the foregoing statements it will be seen that on a gross income of approximately $8,700,000 the American Cyanamid Co. had a net income of $1,600,000, while the Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co., on a gross income of approximately $7,000,000, had a net income of $430,000 and at a rate of less than one-third of the rate of income of the American Cyanamid Co.

The foregoing figures carry more conviction than all the misleading statements printed or spoken by the American Cyanamid Co. or its representatives.

In view of the fact that the American Cyanamid Co. claims to be patriotically American, we beg to submit for the consideration of your committee the report of its president for the year ending June 30, 1918:

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, what the Senator has offered may satisfy him, and it may satisfy the committee. He has read a statement from the Roessler & Hasslacher Co. stating that in addition to their capital there were a great many other assets which were not included in the capital.

Mr. SMOOT. The gains which have been made from the year 1905 and placed in the business.

Mr. PITTMAN. Undoubtedly.

Mr. SMOOT. The profits of which the Senator was speaking were based on the capital stock, but not the undivided profits, or the profit and loss of the company, which was at that time $8,000,000.

Mr. PITTMAN. Instead of this committee trying to find out, if it occurred to them, the cost of production of a pound of cyanide, they have allowed this company to compare its profits with what they call the American Cyanamid Co., which is its only rival in business and only competitor. I am not interested in knowing which one made the most money, and I am not interested in knowing whether the Roessler & Hasslacher Co. made a little more profit than the Cyanamid Co., or whether the Cyanamid Co. made a little more profit. I am interested in seeing that both of them do not make exorbitant profits, and, as a matter of fact, from the statement read, I am satisfied that both have been making exorbitant profits. I do not think there is any question about it. No doubt the Roessler & Hasslacher Co. has turned its profits into capital so as to defeat the excess-profits tax, but the earnings were reported by our Government and never denied.

Mr. SMOOT. As every other chemical company did during the war.

Mr. PITTMAN. There is no doubt but that when we come to the conclusion that these two concerns have been making exorbitant profits, before we give them any protection to hold up those profits they ought to show just exactly what it costs to make a pound of cyanide. I do not know anything about the cyanide business, but I know you can tell just exactly what it costs a ton to mine gold and silver ore. There is no difficulty about that at all. There would have been no difficulty for these Senators who know so much about business to properly cross-examining the representatives of these two cyanide companies and find out the elements of expense entering into the production of a pound of cyanide; but they have not done it. The Senator from Utah has read a comparative statement, given out by one of the agents of the Roessler & Hasslacher Co., showing that the American Cyanamid Co. made a little more profit than they made. That is the situation. As a matter of fact, it is evident from these hearings that both of these companies have been gouging the American public every time they got a chance to. It is evident there is only one way to bring about competition, and that is to turn these two companies loose on each other, and then we will find out where the profits come from.

There is no doubt at all—and it has been admitted from the very beginning—but that this Roessler & Hasslacher concern is the sole producer of cyanide in this country; that it has the sole agency of the German company; that the English are interested in it and never ship any of the product to this country. It is perfectly evident that there is a combination controlling this industry in the world, and it is not a very big industry at that. It is a tremendous money-making industry, but in the matter of pounds of stuff produced it is almost like diamonds. The total consumption in this country is only 20,000,000 pounds, but the evidence is uncontradicted that this business has been divided up in the world between the English concern, the German concern, and the German-American concern. I do not think anyone doubts that at all.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator said that he wanted these two companies to get at one another.

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. The American company can stop making cyanide and go on with their other chemical industries, and it would leave the German and the Canadian companies monopolizing the business; and as soon as the Canadian company was disposed of, then the German agents would sell the cyanide for whatever they wanted to.

Mr. PITTMAN. While the Cyanamid Co., in my opinion, has a better process—and I only state that from the little I have found in the evidence—while it may get some of its rates a little cheaper, its freight rates are higher. Its freight rates are twice as high, in many instances, as the freight rates paid by the Roessler & Hasslacher Co., because you have to use practically twice as much of the same stuff made by the Cyanamid Co. as of that made by the Roessler & Hasslacher Co. to get the same results. As a matter of fact, there is no evidence whatever to indicate that there is any chance that the Cyanamid Co. will run the Roessler & Hasslacher Co. out of business, and I do not believe there is a Senator here who believes that you could run them out of business, whether you put a tariff on this thing or do not put a tariff on it.

This is the proposition: Some of these Senators have this monopoly operating in their States, and they want to give that monopoly something, and you compromised with them. That is what you did. A number of you Senators who were in favor of putting this product on the free list when they demanded 33⅓ per cent compromised with them on 10 cents, without rhyme or reason, just to help those Senators out and support monopolies in their States which support them in their elections.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. STERLING. I wish to call attention, if the Senator will permit me, to what I think are the facts in regard to the profits of the Roessler & Hasslacher Co. They are not all derived from one company. There are various companies controlled by the Roessler & Hasslacher Co.

Mr. PITTMAN. There are three.

Mr. STERLING. The company which manufactures the commodity here in issue made a profit of 900 per cent annually for the five years preceding our entrance into the war, according to the statement, in the manufacture of this one particular product.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no.

Mr. STERLING. Let me quote from the report of the Alien Property Custodian in that regard.

Mr. SMOOT. They make numerous chemicals at the Perth Amboy Chemical Works.

Mr. STERLING. The Perth Amboy company is a separate and distinct company.

Mr. SMOOT. That is where this product is made.

Mr. STERLING. If the Senator will permit me, I read from the report of the Alien Property Custodian:

The Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co. "was a branch of the great Frankfort gold and silver refining company known as the Deutsche Gold & Silber Scheide-Anstalt vormals Roessler, and was organized by Messrs. Roessler and Hasslacher, two old Scheide-Anstalt employees, who came to this country to introduce the goods of the parent house. From the first the German concern and its officers and employees owned about three-fourths of the stock of the American house. * * * In 1895 the Niagara Electro-Chemical Co. was founded to manufacture metallic sodium by means of the electric power available in Niagara Falls. The sodium thus produced was used for the manufacture of cyanide of sodium in this country, a business which immediately became exceedingly profitable. The stock of this company was divided so that one-third of it went to the Scheide-Anstalt, one-third to Roessler & Hasslacher, and one-third to English interests. This company had a capitalization of $100,000, made fabulous profits, and for the five years before our entrance into the war averaged over 900 per cent in dividends annually."

That is the statement. Then he goes on to describe the Perth Amboy Chemical Works, another organization.

Mr. CALDER. Will the Senator tell the Senate who made that statement?

Mr. STERLING. The Alien Property Custodian in his report.

Mr. CALDER. Is that over the signature of the Alien Property Custodian?

Mr. STERLING. I do not see his signature here, but it is in quotations and from his report, which report is published at pages 363 and 364 of the Journal of Industrial and Engineering Chemistry, April 1, 1919, according to a footnote.

Mr. President, if the Senator from Nevada will permit me, I just want to say one word in regard to the combination of these interests. I understand the Senator from Nevada alluded in a general way to the combination. I have here just a little paragraph from a letter which brings this matter pretty nearly up to date. It may have been referred to by some one, but this is a letter from an employee of the Department of Commerce, Mr. Allan G. Goldsmith, Chief of the Western European Division. Writing to the American Cyanamid Co., he said, among other things:

> I wish to say that we have endeavored to obtain information on the processes in use here for the production of cyanide, but have been unable to get anything very specific. The production of this product is practically a monopoly in the hands of the Deutsche Gold & Silber Scheide-Anstalt, Frankfurt am Main. This concern is said to control 95 per cent of the grade of cyanide of soda, containing 50 to 51 per cent cyanogen, which is the product most in demand. An inquiry made direct to these manufacturers elicited the reply that any information desired could be gotten from their American representatives, the Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co., New York City, 709–717 Sixth Avenue, corner Forty-first Street, box 119, Times Square.

That letter was written March 10, 1922.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada permit me to make a short statement in reply to what the Senator from South Dakota has said?

Mr. PITTMAN. Certainly.

Mr. CALDER. The Senator from South Dakota has read a statement purporting to be part of the report of the Alien Property Custodian. I have in my hand a copy of a letter written January 7, 1922, signed by Thomas W. Miller, Alien Property Custodian. This letter says, in part:

> My attention has been called to the statement contained in a brief filed by your opponents—

Referring to this controversy—> purporting to be a quotation from the report of my predecessor, Hon. A. Mitchell Palmer, stating that your company had a capitalization of $100,000, made fabulous profits, and for five years before entrance into the war averaged over 900 per cent in dividends annually. If this statement was made with reference to your corporation, I find it to be absolutely incorrect.

> I am advised that the financial affairs of your company were examined by certified public accountants acting in behalf of the Alien Property Custodian, and that their reports show that the dividends earned and paid by your company during the past six years averaged annually about 37½ per cent on the capital of your company, amounting to $1,300,000, and on the basis of its capital and surplus, or invested assets, averaged approximately 12½ per cent per annum for said period.

This letter is signed by Thomas W. Miller, Alien Property Custodian.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from New York the date of that letter?

Mr. CALDER. January 7, 1922.

Mr. ODDIE. I ask the Senator if he is not aware of the fact that that letter was withdrawn and another substituted in its place?

Mr. CALDER. No; I have never heard of any other letter.

Mr. ODDIE. I think that is the case.

Mr. CALDER. I would like to have the Senator bring it to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, the Senator from Nevada corroborates what I have heard, namely, that the present Alien Property Custodian would have qualified some of the statements he made in that letter.

Mr. CALDER. But I have presented a statement over his own signature.

Mr. PITTMAN. I think he ought to be given a chance to withdraw it, anyhow. It is not based on the facts, and I know that he made a mistake, because he is a nice fellow. Mr. Miller failed to speak about the enormous profits of the subsidiary companies which are exclusively engaged in the cyanide business. I do not think anyone raises any question that the Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co. are the exclusive agents of the German cyanide manufacturers. I do not think anyone raises that question. In the hearings they admitted that fact. I do not think anyone denies at all that they were sent over here by the German monopoly to establish this business for them and that they actually controlled the whole business up until the time we went into the war. No one denies that and no one denies that the Alien Property Custodian has said that they fraudulently transferred a few shares of stock to the American end of it for the purpose of escaping control by the Alien Property Custodian. Nobody denies that.

Now we are coming down to what is denied. Nobody denies that this is one concern of the kind in the United States that manufactures cyanide. Nobody denies that the cyanide we had in this country, before the Cyanamid Co. was established at Niagara Falls in 1917, came from two sources—either from the German monopoly through the Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co. or directly from the Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co. In other words, nobody denies that until the Cyanamid Co. came into existence there was but one source of supply in this country, and that was that one German concern and a concern in this country which it controlled. That situation has not changed a particle.

The representatives of the Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co. were at the hearings all the time. They heard Mr. Hammitt, representative of the American Cyanamid Co., testify. They broke into his testimony two or three times. They heard him testify as to the distribution of the world business by the English company, the German company, and the German-American company. He did not deny it. He came in and filed a supplemental brief afterwards, and there is no denial in that.

The only fact in dispute in the whole matter is that they say they have to have 33⅓ per cent to exist in this country and that if they do not get it they will be run out of existence by the American Cyanamid Co. No one believed that, or the committee would have given them 33⅓ per cent under this statement. May I ask the Senator from Utah why they do not believe it? On what did he base his figures that 10 per cent ad valorem would save them when they said it would take 33⅓ per cent to save them?

Mr. SMOOT. So far as my figures are concerned they were based on statements made to me by one of the officials of the American Cyanamid Co.

Mr. PITTMAN. What were those figures?

Mr. SMOOT. On the basis that the water power alone made that amount of difference—10 per cent. That is the statement which convinced me, and even that was not sufficient fully so far as I was concerned, but I want this 10 per cent because I do not want Germany absolutely to drive out of existence the industry in the United States and then kill the Canadian people, and then charge us double the amount for the cyanide which we must have.

Mr. PITTMAN. Which would this come the nearest to killing?

Mr. SMOOT. It would come the nearest to killing the American company first.

Mr. PITTMAN. All right. Now, if we put 10 per cent ad valorem against the foreign import, which does it affect most, the Canadian company or the German company?

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, I think myself, speaking offhand, that the German company can sell cheaper than the Canadian company, although the Canadian company has even a better process of manufacturing it than Germany has to-day. Canada now manufactures it from calcium carbide. Germany and America we know manufacture it from metallic sodium. The Senator knows that the preparation to manufacture the metallic sodium is a very difficult problem. We were forced into this proposition. So far as competition between the two is concerned, there is no doubt that Canada could drive us out of business here and I am fearful that Germany in the end will drive Canada out. If they do, may the Lord help the people who have to buy from the one concern that would be represented in the United States, the German manufacturers.

Mr. PITTMAN. The price of labor is lower in Germany than in Canada. The exchange makes a difference, too. There is no doubt that Germany can manufacture cyanide or pretty nearly anything else much cheaper than we can in this country or in Canada. There is no difference in the cost of manufacture in Canada and the United States except the difference in the cost of power. So far as labor and materials are concerned they are the same. The expense of transportation of the Canadian product is twice as great as the American product.

The Senator from Utah is so uneasy for fear the Germans will come in here that he has proposed to put a 10 per cent ad valorem duty on the product. I ask him whether that would tend to keep out the Canadian or the German. He knows that if it keeps out either one it will keep out the Canadian and will not keep out the German. That is what he knows, and so do the Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co. know the same thing.

Mr. SMOOT. I know another thing, too, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. PITTMAN. They do not care whether we keep the Germans out or not. Does the Senator think so? Not at all, when they own both institutions.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I said. I am trying to protect the user of cyanide in the United States from just such a condition. The only way to do it, in my opinion, is to put a low rate of 10 per cent upon it, and I do not know whether even that will do it. If the testimony from the Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co. representatives is to be believed, it will not do it. But we are going to take a chance, or the committee has decided to take the chance, that it will do it.

If the manufacture of this product in the United States is destroyed and if we then have Canada and Germany fighting it out, the result in the end will be that Germany will win, and then Germany will make us pay dearly for all that she has lost in driving the Canadian product out.

I could go on and tell the Senator of other items here as to which in the past Germany has done the same thing and in exactly the same way. Take oxalic acid. I suppose the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] knows the history of that very well indeed. There are other chemicals I might mention, but I will not take the time now. When we reach them, I may do so.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator from Nevada I want to ask the Senator from Utah a question. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] has indicated that between Canada and the United States there was a difference in the cost of production of cyanide due largely to the difference in the cost of power. This is my question: When the committee fixed this rate of duty were they trying to cover the differential in cost between the United States and Canada or between the United States and Germany?

Mr. SMOOT. Between the United States and Canada. I will say there is one other item which has not been mentioned here to-day that I know of, but there is no doubt that the raw material is right at hand in Canada and it costs less there than it does here and they admit it.

I wish to say to the Senator from Ohio that I am fearful that the 10 per cent ad valorem duty is not going to protect the industry, but it will give these people who are manufacturing it in this country at least a 10 per cent advantage. If they can ever hold their own as against Germany they would rather take that than to have nothing. Just as soon as they can import their product into this country and make more money I know the agents of Germany will import it. There is no doubt about that at all, but if we are going to import under these conditions the Treasury of the United States ought to have the benefit of the 10 per cent.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from Utah if any evidence was presented before the committee showing the prices at which the Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co. buy power on this side?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I do not remember the exact price, but everybody admitted it was cheaper in Canada than in this country.

Mr. ODDIE. That is, cheaper in Canada than it is as a rule in this country, but has the Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co. a special rate covering a long term of years?

Mr. SMOOT. Even the American Cyanamid Co. admitted that their power was cheaper in Canada than in this country, but, of course, there is only one company that manufactures it in the United States; so this statement must be applied to that company.

Mr. ODDIE. Did they state that it was cheaper than the general going price in this country or cheaper than the price which the Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co. get?

Mr. SMOOT. The Roessler & Hasslacher price, because they were competing with one another.

Mr. PITTMAN. The 10 per cent duty is not going to affect the introduction of the German product if the Germans at both ends of the line want it to come in. It never has affected it. They imported 5,000,000 pounds of it last year. This same Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co. imported 5,000,000 pounds last year, but they did not sell it at any less because they got it for less.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know as to that, because the price kept dropping all the time.

Mr. PITTMAN. Oh, no. The Senator means the price since the war has dropped, perhaps. Of course, the same concern made 6 cents more by importing it than they did by manufacturing it.

Mr. SMOOT. This is what the Tariff Commission had to say about it. They say that in 1918 there was imported 69,279 pounds, of a value of $12,615, and a unit value of 18 cents. In 1920 they imported 7,590,495 pounds, of a value of $1,091,443, and a unit value of 14 cents.

Then for the nine months of 1921, up to the time the hearings were begun, which was all the report we could get at that time, they imported 6,080,406 pounds, at a value of only $639,000, or a unit value of 10 cents.

Mr. PITTMAN. But who imported that? The Senator knows who imported it.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I could not say, because a great deal of it came from Canada.

Mr. PITTMAN. No; I mean the importation from Germany.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I did not say from Germany. I said those were the total importations. Those were from Canada and from Germany. There is no doubt that imports were coming from Germany, because I agree with the Senator and we all agree that the product handled in this country is handled by the German concern. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. PITTMAN. Very well. What was the price in the United States at the same time there was a price of 10 cents for the imported article?

Mr. SMOOT. In 1921?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. I think it was 18 cents, as is shown by the testimony.

Mr. PITTMAN. I think it was 21.23 cents.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not looked it up in the testimony, but it was selling around 18 or 20 cents a pound.

Mr. PITTMAN. I am just stating what happened. They imported cyanide from their German parent, affiliated with their own company, on the basis of 10 cents a pound, and they sold it to the American public on the basis of 21.23 cents a pound.

Mr. SMOOT. And if they had had complete control of the market, unless they could make just as much profit by manufacturing it in this country, they would have charged an even higher price. That is what would have happened.

Mr. PITTMAN. They never came down a cent during all the years those relations existed between the German concern and the German-American concern until what? Mind you, now they are complaining that the American Cyanamid Co. is reducing the price by 5 cents a pound, down to 15 cents.

Mr. SMOOT. I shall not complain if they reduce it to 10 cents a pound, if they can.

Mr. PITTMAN. And they will meet that price. In 1914, when we finally placed cyanide on the free list under the Underwood-Simmons law—the House put it on the dutiable list, but the Senate put it on the free list and it stayed there—then the price came down.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I think the price at that time was even higher.

Mr. PITTMAN. No.

Mr. SMOOT. I will see what is shown from the statistics. In 1908 the price was 18 cents; in 1909 in was 18 cents; in 1910 it was 18 cents and also 17½ cents; in 1911 it was 17 cents; in 1912 it was 17 cents; in 1913, up to the time of the World War, it was 17 cents.

Mr. PITTMAN. What was the price in 1914?

Mr. SMOOT. In 1914 the price was 14½ cents. In 1915 it went up to 16 cents. Then during the war, of course, it went out of sight.

Mr. PITTMAN. Now, here is what was said by them about putting it onto the free list; here is their testimony given then. This is what the agent of the Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co. said:

> The drop in the price of cyanide in 1914 was the result of the removal of the duty under the Underwood Tariff Act.

I remember the circumstances attending that action very well, and I think the Senator from Utah also remembers them. The bill came here from the other House carrying a duty on this article, just as it does now, but the Finance Committee took it off. Then the bill went into conference; old man Hasslacher came down here, and in conference the duty was restored. Then some one went down and got it off again, as the Senator from Utah will remember.

What I am getting at is this: The price dropped down to 14 cents a pound when the duty was removed, and yet the manufacturers made a good living out of it. When they were selling it at 14 cents per pound the record shows that they were making a tremendous profit. The record also discloses the fact that when they were getting cyanide from Germany at 10 cents a pound they were selling it to the American people at 21 cents a pound. The only thing that has ever tended to bring the price down is the Cyanamid Co., the American company doing business on the other side of Niagara Falls, and when it put the price down 5 cents a pound, which brought it down to 16 cents, 2 cents above what it was in 1914, Roessler & Hasslacher claimed that they would be put out of business, just as they claimed it would put them out of business if we put the article on the free list in 1914. However, we did put it on the free list, but they still made a tremendous profit.

Why on earth is it that Senators will stand here and take the word of these interested money grabbers, these robbers, as the Senator from Utah awhile ago called them?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. If I correctly understood the Senator from Nevada, I think he made a statement which is hardly borne out by the record. If I understood him rightly, he said that this company purchased this article at 7 cents per pound and sold it for 21 cents?

Mr. PITTMAN. No; I said they purchased it at 10 cents a pound.

Mr. McCUMBER. The testimony shows in reference to these importations—and those are the late figures—that the price was 14.3 cents, what it cost them from Germany, and that it was sold for 21 cents here as against that 14.3 cents, the German price. It was on that difference between 14.3 cents and 21 cents that they based their claim for the 33⅓ per cent ad valorem duty.

While I am on my feet I wish to make another suggestion.

Mr. PITTMAN. Before the Senator from North Dakota leaves that branch of the subject, I desire to say that I was taking, entirely, what was read from the Tariff Board report.

Mr. McCUMBER. What I stated was the testimony before the Finance Committee.

Mr. PITTMAN. I was merely taking what the Senator from Utah read from the report of the Tariff Board.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that what I gave was the invoice price in Germany at the factory where the article was made.

Mr. PITTMAN. That was the selling price in Germany, f. o. b.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator from Nevada asked a question which I think was very pertinent, and that was this: By providing a duty of only 10 per cent ad valorem will we not, if we allow the German manufacturers still to undersell, put the Canadians out of business? I think that would be absolutely true if they were going to sell as cheaply as they could sell; but there is a general error in supposing that because the German manufacturer can manufacture and sell for a third or a quarter less than the American manufacturer can, he thereby will necessarily put the American manufacturer out of business. I do not think he will do it, even though I think the German manufacturer has the power to do it, for this reason: Germany wants gold; she wants all the gold she can get; she wants just as big a profit as she can get; but even if she can produce at 7 or 8 or 9 or 10 cents a pound, and even though she could sell the article in the American market at such a price that she could drive out the American manufacturer in time, what she wants now is the very best possible price that she can get, and she is selling very closely up to the American price.

In the case of some imported articles, as has been suggested, she is even selling higher. At any rate, she is selling for all she can get; and I do not think that the American industry is going to be put out of business immediately by any German concern, even though the duty were so low that it would be in Germany's power to do so. However, we fixed the duty at such rate as we thought would enable the Canadian product to come in, so that there would be fair competition between the Canadian product, the German product, and the American product.

Mr. PITTMAN. There are two phases of this question that interest me. One of them is as to whether or not there will be driven out the only competitor the American company has, and the other is how much the American people will be taxed to protect the company here. So far I have very largely been discussing the question from the standpoint of the effect it will have on competition, but there are other phases of it. I do not know whether or not it is going to drive the cyanamid company out of business. We only have the word of the cyanamid company for that, and it says it will drive them out of business. We only have the word of this other interested company as to how much it costs them to make this commodity. I would not, if I had been on the committee, have taken the word of either one of them, because they are both interested parties.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think the committee made due allowance for exaggerated statements by either or both.

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes; I think the committee did exactly as a jury does when it does not know anything about a subject—it guesses at it and splits the difference.

Mr. SMOOT. How has the Senator found out the cost of production?

Mr. PITTMAN. I have not found out the cost.

Mr. SMOOT. And nobody else can find out the cost except by an examination of their books; and that would be no better, so far as that is concerned, than the evidence which they have given.

Mr. PITTMAN. There is not any question but that an auditor, if put to work, could discover what it costs them to produce the commodity.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator knows if that had been done in the case of every item in this bill we would not have had a tariff bill for the next 10 years.

Mr. PITTMAN. I want to tell the Senator that I would not make a present to any monopoly in this country, an admitted monopoly, which, during the war, in view of the prices charged, was a robber, as the Senator himself has said, without having evidence to show that it was essential to give them a duty.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, nobody is giving them anything at all; they are not getting what they asked for; they are not getting what they claim they require.

I am not giving anything to them at all; I am advocating a duty in behalf of the man who purchases cyanide in order to give him a chance to enjoy the benefits of competition hereafter, because unless there shall be competition he will pay very dearly for the commodity.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will tell the Senator what he is doing, and he knows it. He is taking money right out of the pocket of every gold and silver miner in his State and handing it over to the Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co.; that is what he is doing.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is mistaken. I think that every gold producer in my State who uses cyanide, if there was not competition, would pay not 10 per cent but 50 per cent and very likely 100 per cent more for the product if it was shipped into this country and controlled absolutely by Germany.

Mr. PITTMAN. And back in 1913, when the same scare about destroying the American industry was brought forth, and we put cyanide on the free list, every producer of gold and silver in the Senator's State was in favor of it, and that action reduced the price of cyanide to them about 4 cents a pound. It saved his State and it saved my State hundreds of thousands of dollars during the little time the provision was effective, as the Senator remembers very well.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question right at that point?

Mr. PITTMAN. I will; yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. What was the result of that in 1916 and 1917 and 1918?

Mr. PITTMAN. In 1916, 1917, and 1918, when the war was in progress, the result was that the cyanamid company, the corporation which the other company is now trying to drive out of business, was furnishing its share of the commodity.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I had reference to prices.

Mr. PITTMAN. Prices at that time went out of sight on cyanide, as on everything else.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not the same as on everything else.

Mr. PITTMAN. They went out of sight.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of course, they went out of sight because we had no production at all; we had been entirely dependent upon Germany.

Mr. PITTMAN. We had not been entirely dependent upon Germany.

Mr. WADSWORTH. We had been almost dependent upon Germany.

Mr. PITTMAN. Oh, no; we had not been entirely dependent upon Germany.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Well, on Canada and Germany, then.

Mr. PITTMAN. Canada did not produce any at that time.

Mr. WADSWORTH. How much did we produce of the amount that we consumed during the war?

Mr. PITTMAN. Canada did not commence to produce any cyanide, to speak of, until 1917.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator quotes the historical fact that the price was reduced to the consumer of cyanide as the result of putting it on the free list.

Mr. PITTMAN. It was.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That makes a very rosy picture until something happens when one can not get cyanide from a foreign country, and then the consumer pays through the nose.

Mr. PITTMAN. I understand what the Senator means, but the articles produced by many industries at home went up just as high or higher. It was not because we could not get them from abroad so much as that the demand for them increased, and profiteers everywhere took advantage of that condition.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does not the Senator think that shutting off the supply from abroad was the major factor in increasing the price during the war?

Mr. PITTMAN. The increased demand at home for the Army was the principal factor.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Was it not because of the shutting off of the supply?

Mr. PITTMAN. The reason was that the Government entered the market to buy quickly and in large quantities commodities which in ordinary course the public would have taken years to buy. We can not cite war conditions at all as governing any of these things, but there is no doubt about the fact that when the war commenced about 50 per cent of the normal demand in this country was supplied by this concern through its factories; about 7,500,000 pounds were supplied by the factories of the Roessler & Hasslacher Co. The remainder was imported from Germany through them as agents. They were the sole distributors of it. We had that much of a supply. At the same time a small quantity came here from Canada. It was negligible, however, and did not amount to a great deal, consisting chiefly of high-grade potassium salts used in chemical experiments rather than for industrial purposes. Now, however, they have built up their plant, so they say, during the war until they practically can supply the demand of the United States with cyanide for all purposes.

The question is its cost to the people. Senators who favor the duty on this commodity think that it is necessary to pay them a little more rather than have them driven out of business, on the theory that if they were driven out of business by the cyanamid company, the cyanamid company would have a monopoly and would put up the price.

That is a theory which has reason back of it; but the trouble with the situation is that the committee are allowing them to raise it 10 per cent in value to keep them from being run out of business without knowing that that is necessary. They have not any evidence of it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, does the Senator know that it is unnecessary?

Mr. PITTMAN. No; I do not know that it is unnecessary; but I say that I would not give a monopoly a bunch of money when no necessity for it is shown, especially when it has to be taken out of the pockets of the American people.

Mr. SMOOT. The 10 per cent that is collected will go into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. PITTMAN. It may if there are any importations; but there will not be any importations, because these people will supply the demand here. You say you are trying to keep the German product out.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, if that is the case, Canada will furnish it, and we want to keep the Canadian production alive.

Mr. PITTMAN. But suppose you kill the Canadian production.

Mr. SMOOT. We are not killing the Canadian production with the 10 per cent, because there is not any question but that it can be produced in Canada at 10 per cent less than it can be produced in this country—no doubt of it at all.

Mr. PITTMAN. There is no evidence of that fact. The trouble about the Senator is that he is constantly making assertions that "there is no doubt about" this or that.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Utah has not made any assertion but that he has proven it in every case by the Tariff Commission.

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not see where the Senator has proven anything.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, if I have not, what is the use of talking to the Senator? Let him go on and get through with his speech.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will do so, too.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator's leave to suggest that there may be an error in the report of the Tariff Commission as to the amount of cyanide imported from Canada and from Germany? I think the Senator will find, if he will investigate it, that there is an error.

Mr. PITTMAN. No cyanide at all was imported from Canada prior to 1917.

Mr. SMOOT. Not at all; not a pound of it.

Mr. PITTMAN. All of it that was imported came from this same German concern and went through this same German-American concern here—absolutely all of it—and there was not any competition, and the price was fixed by the Roessler & Hasslacher Co. They fixed the price entirely; and if they can do away with the American Cyanamid Co. they will again fix the price, because there will be no other competition. They will have the same power to fix the price that they had before; but, without regard to whether it will drive the American Cyanamid Co. out of business or not, the fact remains that you have not shown any satisfactory evidence that this 10 per cent ad valorem tax is essential to maintaining the existence of the American company, and the fact remains that one-third of this tax is coming out of the gold and silver miners of the country, and those gold and silver miners are in a peculiar position.

They have a fixed price for their product. They can not pass that on to the public, like the manufacturer of shoes can or like the manufacturer of any other article can. They can not pass it on to the public even like the raisers of wheat can. It goes as a tax against them and stays there. The gold and silver industries of this country have suffered more by reason of war conditions than any other industry. They are practically the only industries that instead of making money during the war have lost money. Their gold and their silver had a fixed price, while the steel and the powder and the labor and the lumber and everything that they used they have bought at war prices. Now, you propose to levy a direct tax of 10 per cent ad valorem on this production and take it out of their pockets and give it over to a monopoly—an admitted monopoly—for fear that something may happen to this poor old monopoly that is making only 40 or 50 per cent on its investment!

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Has the Senator any figures as to the approximate increase in cost per ton of ore that 10 per cent ad valorem will impose on the mining industry?

Mr. PITTMAN. I answered that question awhile ago to the Senator from New York.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I am very sorry. I was out of the Chamber.

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not mean to say that I object to the question; but the amount of cyanide that is used in the reduction of the gold and silver in a ton of ore depends upon the character of the metal. A chemical reaction takes place, and the more metal you have to handle the more cyanogen you have to have. Cyanogen is the active reducing agent of cyanide. Cyanide is just cyanogen mixed up with salt in the proper way. It would vary, we might say, from 3 or 4 cents to 15 cents a ton. I am just making a rough guess at it. I have not estimated it, and I do not think anyone has.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Does the Senator consider that that is a great tax, a great imposition on the mining industry?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes; I do, and I will tell the Senator why. As I stated before, there are a great many gold mines where the margin of profit is only a few cents. There are some that have been working at a slight loss right along because probably it would be more expensive to start up again after a shutdown than it would be to stand the loss for a while, and therefore they are running at a slight loss. There are probably seven or eight hundred mines in California and Oregon and places of that kind that are closed down and that would run if there were 30 or 40 cents a ton change in conditions. There is a $4,000,000 project now out on the Comstock lode where the margin is only about 50 cents a ton, and when you add 10 cents a ton here and 10 cents a ton there you are soon gone.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada yield in order that I may give to the Senator from New Jersey some figures from the standpoint of the Homestake Mining Co., of Lead, S. Dak.?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. STERLING. They say:

> Under normal conditions we mill and treat metallurgically with the aid of cyanide something over 4,000 tons of ore per day. Our consumption of cyanide is about 0.2 pound per ton of ore treated, or approximately 175 tons of sodium cyanide per annum. The proposed duty adds about 1.6 cents per ton to our costs, or $25,000 per year in round numbers.

Mr. PITTMAN. That was when the proposition was to add 33⅓ per cent.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. One and six-tenths cents?

Mr. STERLING. One and six-tenths cents per ton, according to this, or $25,000 a year.

Mr. SMOOT. But, Mr. President, that was on the basis of 33⅓ per cent.

Mr. STERLING. That is what I say; it was on the basis of 33⅓ per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. So it will be a little less than half a cent a ton.

Mr. STERLING. It will amount to about $8,000 a year to that one company, whereas I think there ought not to be a cent additional on account of any tariff.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, if the Senator will bear with me further, I do not think there is any need of very extended debate upon this question. I think it is simply a question as to whether we are going to protect the industry in this country or turn it back to Germany and Czechoslovakia. That is the situation. This plant is in my State, and I happen to know, and I say on my honor that there is no question of its loyalty. I understand the question has been raised on this floor.

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes; it is raised.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The whole city of Perth Amboy, where this plant is located, knows of it, and knows of the number of employees employed there; and it is not 250, as the Senator stated, but over 500 in this particular department where they manufacture potassium cyanide.

I have here, from the industries of my State who use their product, letters asking that this plant be protected, because if it is not protected it means that as far as the manufacture of potassium cyanide is concerned they must abolish it, and it will go back to Germany and be imported here, and this country will be at the mercy of the German importers. That is the fact; and not only that, but there are over 15,000,000 pounds of caustic soda used in its manufacture, and we use 20,000,000 pounds of cyanide of potassium each year in our various industries. It is not used by the miners only or the citrus fruit industries only, but it is used in metallurgical work; it is used in all of the development of the jewelry industry; and it affects not only this one plant, but it affects the charcoal plants, it affects the ammonia plants, and I venture to say that it affects more employees than the few miners that the Senator is attempting to defend.

It is a question of principle. We could not manufacture enough cyanide of potassium in this country when the war broke out. We were importing 9,000,000 pounds. We were manufacturing 10,000,000 pounds here. This plant increased its capacity and took care of our war needs and utilized American raw materials, employing American labor; and that industry is here. It is necessary for war needs and war purposes should we go to war again. Now, the question is whether this moderate 10 per cent ad valorem tariff to protect this industry shall be imposed by Congress, or whether we are going to turn this business over to Czechoslovakia and Germany and Canada? That is the question.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, the agents of the Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co. before the Ways and Means Committee stated that there were 250 men employed in this cyanide industry. I assume that they did not testify against their own interest. That is the testimony in the hearings before the House committee.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I did not hear the Senator.

Mr. PITTMAN. I say that the agents of the Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co. before the Ways and Means Committee of the House, as shown in the hearings, testified that there were 250 men employed in the production of cyanide in this country. I simply accepted that statement.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I understand that that was so at that time; but I also understand, from the information I get from the Board of Trade of Perth Amboy, that it was increased to 750.

Mr. PITTMAN. In fact, practically all of the facts that I have asserted here to-day have been taken from the testimony of those seeking this bonus in the form of a duty—nearly all of them—and I have failed to find anywhere any evidence backing up the fears of the Senator from New Jersey and the Senator from Utah that this Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co. will be driven out of business unless they are granted a duty of 10 per cent ad valorem on cyanide.

I do know this, that the profits of those institutions, the profits of the Roessler & Hasslacher Co. and its subsidiaries indicate clearly that this company and its subsidiaries have made enormous profits out of cyanide at its present price. If they could make enormous profits selling cyanide at the price which they have been selling it, they could sell it a lot cheaper and make a reasonable profit.

There is no evidence to justify the granting of any duty on this article, and the House Ways and Means Committee said in their action that there was no need for this. They gave as much hearing to this as did the Finance Committee of the Senate. The Committee on Ways and Means is composed of men who believe in just as high protective rates as do the members of the Finance Committee. You know that the Ways and Means Committee of the House would have granted them a duty on this if they did not believe that the evidence did not justify it. You know that the House of Representatives, constituted as it is, overwhelmingly of protectionist Republicans, would have granted them a duty on this had there been any excuse to grant them a duty on it.

You know that the Ways and Means Committee of the House, which heard testimony on this at length, and the House of Representatives, found that this was a grasping monopoly which robbed the people of this country during the war, as was said by the Senator from Utah, and is coming in here now, with its German connections, the same as the other was, seeking to have the Congress of the United States take money out of the pockets of the miners and out of the pockets of the citrous-fruit growers of the West and give it to this concern as a bonus. That is all there is to this whole proposition.

Mr. McCUMBER. Before the Senator from Massachusetts moves an executive session, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate closes its session this calendar day it shall recess until to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, just a word before closing, as it is late. I merely want to say that I offered an amendment on April 18 providing for free cyanide. I am heartily in favor of protecting the gold-mining industry and am going into this matter in detail before the vote is taken, not alone from the standpoint from which it has been discussed this afternoon but from that of the world production and the world's need for gold. We in this country are like an ostrich with its head buried in the sand. We do not realize what is going on about us. Because of our surplus of gold we fail to see the real world need and hunger for gold. Before the next year has closed we will have to do something to protect the gold-mining industry and increase the production of gold. It has suffered as no industry has since the war, and I shall discuss the subject from the standpoint of the need for an increased production of gold as well as from the unjust burden being imposed on this industry.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, in reply to the statement of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] that extortionate prices had been charged for potassium cyanide and sodium cyanide, I wish to insert in the RECORD at this point a table of prices, based upon the prices of sodium cyanide and potassium cyanide for the past 13 years. It shows that the price has been uniform and at a level during that entire period.

Mr. PITTMAN. Let me state that not only was the price uniform during that period but the monopoly was equally uniform.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

No better illustration of the treatment accorded its customers by the Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co. can be given than by the following table of prices, in carload lots, charged by it to the mine operators of the United States for the past 13 years:

Year.	Price based on potassium cyanide contents.	Price based on 96/98 per cent sodium cyanide.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. On behalf of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL], I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the pending bill. I move that it be printed and lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. McCORMICK. I submit three amendments intended to be proposed by me to the pending bill, which I move be printed and lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives receding from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10730) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, numbered 51 and 58 and concurring therein each with an amendment.

Amendment numbered 51. In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert $3,556,183.

Amendment numbered 58. In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert $36,774,173.

Mr. McNARY. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House to amendments numbered 51 and 58.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened; and (at 5 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate, under the order previously entered, took a recess until to-morrow, Thursday, May 4, 1922, at 11 o'clock a. m.

CONVENTIONS WITH AUSTRIA AND HUNGARY.

In executive session this day,

Mr. LODGE, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported a resolution, from which the injunction of secrecy was removed, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

IN EXECUTIVE SESSION,
Senate of the United States.

Whereas under the treaties concluded August 24, 1921, and August 29, 1921, with Austria and Hungary, respectively, to establish securely friendly relations between the United States and each of these two foreign nations, the right is secured to the United States to revive, by giving notice to these nations, any bilateral treaty or convention in force between the United States and the former Austro-Hungarian Monarchy prior to the outbreak of the war: Be it

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the giving of notice by the President to Austria and to Hungary, to revive the Extradition Convention, concluded on July 3, 1856, between the United States and the former Austro-Hungarian Monarchy, and to the giving of notice by the President to Hungary to revive the Copyright Convention, concluded on January 30, 1912, between the United States and the former Austro-Hungarian Monarchy to provide between the United States and Hungary reciprocal protection with regard to copyright.

NOMINATION.

Executive nomination received by the Senate May 3 (legislative day of April 20), 1922.

COLLECTOR OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

Nat Goldstein, of St. Louis, Mo., to be collector of internal revenue for the first district of Missouri, in place of George H. Moore, resigned. Mr. John S. Leahy was appointed to this office but has never qualified.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate May 3 (legislative day of April 20), 1922.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, May 3, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Blessed Father in heaven, we pause at the threshold. We rest in peace because it is not a fearful thing to fall into the hands of God. Our hearts exclaim gratefully that God is love! We have only praise, wonder, and thanksgiving to express. Make us more equal to the tasks of life. Teach us how to apply the standards of duty in their perplexing applications. Let the things that are selfish, proud, and hard lose their power, and may the good, the wise, and humane gather strength. Bless our fellow citizens and always persuade them to be God-fearing and law-abiding. Through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I may be in error, but as I understood the reading of the Journal it said that the unanimous request to dispense with Calendar Wednesday to-day also provided that Calendar Wednesday business should be in order to-morrow. Is that correct?

The SPEAKER. Yes; that is correct, according to the Chair's recollection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 268) extending the operation of the immigration act of May 19, 1921.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 10007. An act for the relief of certain persons to whom, or their predecessors, patents were issued to public lands in the State of Minnesota under an erroneous survey made in 1876.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 2186. An act granting certain lands in Hot Springs, Ark., to the Leo N. Levi Memorial Hospital Association.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following joint resolution:

H. J. Res. 319. Joint resolution making available funds for preserving and protecting, in the present flood emergency, the levees on the Mississippi River, its tributaries and outlets, not under the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. When the House adjourned last night there was under consideration the conference report on the District of Columbia appropriation bill. The conference report has been agreed to, and the House was considering the Senate amendments to the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The regular business, then, is further discussion, if the Speaker desires, on the point of order?

The SPEAKER. Yes; on the point of order.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I think that several gentlemen desire to be heard. Do we have to call up the conference report?

The SPEAKER. It is the unfinished business.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Do we have to formally announce that?

The SPEAKER. No. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10101) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, as I understand the situation——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, it occurs to me that this matter is of sufficient importance to have at least a fair representation of the Members on the floor of the House, and therefore I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The matter is to be addressed to the Chair. However, the gentleman from Kentucky makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. It is evident that there is no quorum present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 267 Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. The unfinished business before the House is the District of Columbia appropriation bill. A point of order was made to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] to Senate amendment numbered 1, and that point of order has been discussed.

The Chair would like to suggest that on a point of order the recognition and the time are entirely in the disposition of the Chair. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS], chairman of the subcommittee, stated last night that there were two or three gentlemen who wished to occupy about three-quarters of an hour apiece. The Chair would like to state that while he does not desire to cut off discussion, and is glad to hear suggestions, yet the subject has been pretty well laid before the House and before the Chair, so that it is quite clear what the question is, and it does not seem to the Chair that it is necessary for the full discussion of the matter that such an amount of time as that be consumed; but the Chair does not wish to prevent anybody from bringing to his attention anything that has not been brought before the House.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, there have been four reasons assigned why this point of order should be sustained. One is that it is not germane; and that, I take it, is the real point to which the Speaker desires the remarks directed.

The SPEAKER. That is the only point on which the Chair cares to hear discussion.

Mr. EVANS. Then I shall pay no attention whatever to the other reasons assigned. If the Chair will bear with me, I would like to review the history of the legislation.

The District appropriation bill as it passed the House contained no legislation, at least none which touched the proposition that is presented by amendment No. 1 or by the amendment presented by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS]. The bill went to the Senate, and in that body there was attached to it the amendment which, as I construe it, touches the entire fiscal relations of the District of Columbia.

The real question is, as just stated, whether the amendment presented by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] is germane to amendment No. 1 attached to the bill by the Senate. In considering that question not only must the amendment presented by the Senate be considered in connection with the amendment presented by the gentleman from Minnesota, but likewise the relation of the amendment presented by the Senate to the bill which is being amended by it; and for that purpose I am intending to call the attention of the Speaker to what is in the act that is amended by the Senate amendment. It is what is called the act of 1878.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman please repeat that again?

Mr. WINGO. I will ask for order, Mr. Speaker. We can not hear on this side.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appreciates that Members of the House are not very largely interested in the discussion of the point of order, but it is necessary for the Chair to hear what is said.

Mr. EVANS. I repeat, that in construing the question of germaneness the Chair must not only take into consideration the relation existing between the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Minnesota as touching the amendment to the appropriation bill attached to it by the Senate, but the Chair must also take into consideration the act of Congress which is sought to be amended by the amendment attached by the Senate. For that purpose I wish to call the attention of the Speaker to the matter which is incorporated in the original act of 1878.

The first section of that act has to do with the creation of a corporation; the second, with reference to officers; the third, with reference to powers of officers, the application of the revenues, which includes the 50–50 provision; provision for collection of taxes as they now are, and the limit of taxation. Section 4 has to do with the regulation of the payment of taxes, the settlement of accounts, the payment of interest on bonds, known as the 3.65 bonds. The fifth section relates to repair of streets, water and gas mains, assessments to engineer commissioner; the sixth, to the police board and school trustees; seventh, the sinking fund commission and transfer to the Treasury of the United States. The eighth section relates to the board of health——

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think it will help the Chair in his decision to know the full contents of that act.

Mr. EVANS. I wish to get this point to the Speaker, that the Senate amendment touches the vital part of that act. If that is conceded, I do not care to go further. If the fiscal relations in that act of Congress are touched by the amendment put in by the Senate, that opens up the whole question. If that is conceded I do not care to go further with reference to that enumeration.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EVANS. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Wherein does the Senate amendment affect the act of 1878?

Mr. EVANS. I will get to that later if the gentleman will wait a moment. In section 3916 of Hinds' Precedents you will find a situation quite similar to this.

The SPEAKER. In what volume?

Mr. EVANS. Volume IV. The District appropriation bill was under consideration, and the pending question was electric lighting. In conference they put on an amendment to provide for the conduit system. I am not going to discuss the questions there presented, as the Speaker can take in the full force of that, but I wish to call attention to that decision as we go along.

Now, if I may, I wish to take up the amendment of the Senate. I challenge the Speaker's attention to the first three lines of that amendment:

> The general expenses of the District of Columbia shall be chargeable to and paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

Those two lines and one word take in everything which has to do with the disbursement of funds for the District of Columbia. That opens up the question so that in an amendment which is germane to it we can provide every method that we desire which meets with the approval of the House for the raising of the fund from which the expenses shall be paid. If not, why not? Suppose we are confined to the proposition as presented by the Senate. Such a ruling deprives the House of the right to express its opinion on the question of the sources from which you will derive your revenue to carry on the District of Columbia. In a number of cases this body has held that it had that right. It would deprive us of that right. Just for a moment examine the general expenses of the District of Columbia that shall be chargeable to and paid out of the Treasury of the United States. The law which it seeks to amend provides that it shall be paid half from the Government and half from the District.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not need any argument to be convinced that this is a method of paying the expenses of the District.

Mr. EVANS. If that is once conceded, there is nothing to do but to consider the amendment that is offered here by the gentleman from Minnesota, as to whether it grows out of that attached by the Senate. I call attention then to the matter that is on the first page of the amendment. Nothing is on that page but what provides for the source of revenue from which the expenses shall be paid and the proportion in which it shall be paid, the latter question having been raised also by the Senate amendment when it provided that all expenses shall be paid out of the General Treasury and levying a tax of $1.75 to be covered into the Treasury, it in effect provides the relation that exists between the Federal Government and the District of Columbia in the apportionment of the revenue.

Now we come to one of the matters which have been criticized, namely, the creation of the surplus. The first two lines to which I call your attention provides for that surplus, because immediately upon the approval of the bill, should it be passed and go to the President and be approved, at least after the 30th of June next, you have provided a surplus or a source from which your revenue shall come which bears the expenses not only for 1923 but for all future years, and this provision which relates to the accumulation of the surplus is simply another method of producing the source from which the expenses may be paid.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EVANS. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. Wherein does the Senate amendment cover that?

Mr. EVANS. The first two lines, where it says that all expenses shall be paid from the Federal Treasury. It creates a fund from which the expenses as they mature shall be paid.

Mr. WINGO. The point I make is the gentleman argues that there is a provision for the accumulation of a surplus. Nowhere in the Senate amendment can I find a provision that relates to the accumulation of a surplus. It says it shall be paid to the Treasury, but that means a revenue, although perhaps it might result in a surplus. Where is there a provision in the Senate amendment that will change the rate of assessment so as to automatically compel a surplus?

Mr. EVANS. It does not compel a surplus of the District funds; it creates a fund out of which the expenses of the District shall be paid. The surplus is another method of creating a fund out of which the expenses of the District can be paid. It certainly would be conceded that that act says the Federal Government should pay half; that has been done.

When it is said that the entire expenses shall be paid out of the Federal Treasury, they have created by that declaration this surplus, if you wish to call it a surplus, and all the amendment does is to seek to make the District carry its share during the same time. It is to prevent the taxation of the people of the United States residing outside of the District for the benefit of the District of Columbia's personal obligation. It is not a change of law, but requiring them to do what they ought to do under the present law.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EVANS. I will.

Mr. WINGO. I understood the gentleman to contend that because the amendment was germane to the organic act, it was not subject to a point of order, regardless of whether it was germane to this amendment or not.

Mr. EVANS. I very poorly expressed my meaning, or else the gentleman from Arkansas misunderstood me. What I meant to say was that in construing this amendment put on by the Senate with the amendment that is presented by the gentleman from Minnesota we should also have in mind the act which was sought to be amended, in order to determine whether or not we are getting outside of the scope of that which is germane. For instance, when the bankruptcy act was amended they amended, as I recollect it, 16 different sections of the act, which contains 70 sections. Having done that, it went to conference and the amendment of that number of sections was held to open up the whole question.

Now, the point I make is this: As they in the Senate amendment attempted to cover the entire fiscal relations—the collection of taxes and disbursement of taxes—we have done no more in the amendment presented by the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman permit an inquiry?

Mr. EVANS. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. Is there anything in the proposed amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota which is incidental with or properly connected with the duties and powers and policy laid down in the Senate amendment?

Mr. EVANS. It was the intent and it is the opinion of every member of the conference that there is nothing in the amendment presented by the managers on the part of the House that is not germane to some portion of the amendment attached to the bill by the Senate. I have called attention to the reason why I think that the creation of the surplus is germane to the first two lines and one word of the amendment.

I want to take up for a moment now the matter of the rates. The rate in the original act is 1.50. The rate in the present amendment presented by the Senate is 1.75 on certain classes of property. It is true that the original bill was amended in respect to intangible property. We have simply taken charge of or attempted to effect the rates which were either in the original act or as fixed by the amendments to that original act, which, of course, were tied to it, and in changing the rate from three-tenths to five-tenths as to intangible property, there is nothing which is not germane to the original act and the amendments thereto. Consequently we again are not confined to rates on real estate and tangible personal property, even though they had not added to their amendment the words "and other taxes shall be as now provided." When the Senate went into the question of tax rates they opened that entire matter, and that is particularly true when those tax rates provided the fund from which the general expenses of the District are paid.

A question is also raised as to the revenues which are derived from sources other than taxation, and the same principle that applies to tax rates applies to these sources of revenue, because those sources of revenue are created by amendments to the original act. This is true—a portion of that property that is now rented, which belongs to the United States exclusively but which under an act amendatory of this, to which I have called attention, is now paid solely to the District, the United States getting no return whatever; that same provision creates a part of this fund from which the expenses of the District are paid. For that reason it is germane.

Attention has been called to the concluding paragraph of this amendment which precedes the appropriating clause. The limit is taken off the estimates which the commissioners can make. The present law is, in substance, as follows: That the commissioners are restricted to double the amount of the revenues that are derived from taxation in the District. The theory under which that limitation is placed, of course, is that the Federal Government was to pay half and the District government was to pay half, hence their expenditures would be just twice what the amount of the revenue was that should be raised by the District. In this we claim that we have stayed clearly within the rule of germaneness in permitting the District to estimate for just what they desire. If they wish to estimate for $30,000,000 for expenditures, they may do so, of course, coming through the regular channels; but their privilege is not hedged in by any amount; however, after having made their estimates, they may again levy a tax which will produce proportionately the amount with which they are charged. That being next to the last clause of the Senate amendment, we have only kept within the limits prescribed by the rule of germaneness.

Again, they have in their concluding clause of the amendment made certain exemptions to taxation, and in making those exemptions to taxation they have therein opened up the question of taxation as to what properties shall be taxed and at what rate it shall be taxed. Nothing in amendment No. 1 presented by the gentleman from Minnesota, to which I have had my attention called, that is not germane to Senate amendment No. 1. It has to do with the collection and the disbursement of taxes, either with the raising of a fund out of which the District expenses shall be paid the ratio of contribution, or else with the manner in which they shall be disbursed. I can see no way in which legislation can be fairly presented to this House and the action of the House secured upon it if the Senate can put upon a bill an amendment like No. 1 and then restrict the House to simply things between that and nothing, where the House has not offered the legislation and could not, as in this case, it being an appropriation bill.

I wish to call the Speaker's attention to a few citations before I conclude. The first is 5 Hinds', section 5824, which is the amendment to the bankruptcy bill, to which I have called attention. The next is 5 Hinds', section 6424, where there was an amendment which struck out all after the enacting clause and which opened up the entire subject. The one to which I have already called attention, 4 Hinds', section 3916, and one is to be found in 5 Hinds', section 6646[5].

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to sustain or oppose the point of order?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I think the point of order is good.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I find myself in the unpleasant position of being in favor of a proposition in fact, and yet thinking that it is subject to the point of order. I do not intend to weary the Speaker with any long discussion of the matter, but it seems to me that the only question before the Speaker is this: Is the amendment presented by the gentleman from Minnesota germane to the amendment of the Senate, and that no other question is particularly involved in this discussion? I do not believe that in the consideration of this matter the Speaker should consider the text of the bill as it was originally passed by the House, nor do I believe that the other sections of the House bill have any relevancy to this discussion at all, but that the matter gets down to the single issue of whether the matters contained in this proposed amendment are germane to the Senate amendment and the things contained in it. On that proposition we are supported by authority. I have found only one precedent, and that is in 5 Hinds, section 6188. In that case it was said:

> In the consideration of Senate amendments in the House an amendment must be germane to the particular Senate amendment to which it is offered, it not being sufficient that it should be germane to provisions of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is familiar with that decision.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. There is no decision which I can find anywhere to the contrary. It evidently is the accepted rule that this amendment must be measured by its germaneness to the Senate amendment. On that proposition I can not see, from my consideration of the two amendments, how it can be considered to be germane to the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment is broad, it is true, but it is only broad in a certain direction. The Senate amendment provides in brief this: It first provides that the general expenses of the District of Columbia shall be paid out of the United States Treasury. It next provides the rate of taxation for 1923 and following years shall be fair and reasonable and paid into the Treasury, and then provides the rate shall be $1.75 per $100. Then appropriations are authorized in an amount equal to the District's surplus; that hereafter there shall be no limit of estimates to Congress, and that $2,000 of the value of any piece of real estate shall be exempt from taxation. Now, what is the idea of that Senate amendment? It is simply this, as I understand it, Mr. Speaker, that all moneys collected here in the District from taxation shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States; that the United States shall pay their bills out of that by appropriation and that the rate of taxation shall be $1.75 per $100. Now, if there is anything else in that Senate provision I have been unable to understand what it is.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. How about the $2,000 exemption?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. They say it is very broad and includes a change of law, but it changes it only in the way of fixing the rate of taxation and having the funds go into the Treasury and be paid out from that source. It does not in any other respect change the machinery by which the taxes shall be collected and it does not do the various other things that are contained in this amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota offers different features which are not contained within the meaning of the Senate amendment. They are these: After July 1, 1922, 60 per cent is to be paid by the District of Columbia and 40 per cent from the Treasury of the United States. Where is there anything in the Senate amendment relative to that proposition? Not a single word appears in the Senate amendment that would give anybody any idea that that was to be the division of the revenues which was to be made, and yet in the House amendment which is sought to be made to the Senate amendment this new idea is incorporated which may be the law of the land or may not, but it is new so far as the Senate amendment is concerned——

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I will.

Mr. WALSH. In reference to the gentleman's point that the amendment must be germane to the Senate amendment, does the gentleman see any distinction between considering Senate amendments in the House in due course and considering amendments where the disagreement stage has been reached?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Well, that presents a somewhat academical question. The question is, as the gentleman appreciates, not on the House bill, because the House bill has passed beyond our action here except in so far as it has been brought before us by some action of the conferees. The thing that is before us is not the House bill or any provision of the House bill; the only thing is this Senate amendment——

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The gentleman has said that we should not legislate on the different amounts respectively. The Senate amendments had nothing to do with that.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. How will the gentleman construe this, "that the general expenses of the District of Columbia shall be chargeable to and paid out of the Treasury of the United States"? Is not that the one feature justifying this, and can not we change that?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. That announces a principle——

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It announces a fact.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. It announces this fact, that the money shall be paid into the Treasury and shall be paid out, but it does not indicate——

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It says the United States shall pay it.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. It says it shall be paid out of the Treasury, but it does not say in what proportion, and then in the House amendment you say what proportion shall be established. I do not think you have any right to do that. I think that is a matter of distinct legislation. This was fixed in the law as exists to-day, and it should be fixed by substantive enactment of legislative acts, and I do not think it is a germane amendment to the Senate amendment which contains nothing about that subject at all.

Now, what more does it do? It establishes a fund for a cash basis to be completed by the end of 1927. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. EVANS] says that is included in the general broad language of the first two lines of the Senate amendment. I do not so consider it. The Senate amendment provides in the first two lines that all money shall be paid into the Treasury, but where does it say that we shall in addition to the $1.75 a hundred, or any other rate that may be established by an act of Congress, collect a sinking fund which in five years will put this District upon a cash basis?

Mr. EVANS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. EVANS. Has the House at this time, in the opinion of the gentleman from Illinois, in considering this amendment, authority to change the first two lines and make it that the expenses shall be chargeable one-half to the United States Treasury and one-half to taxes to be collected by the District?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. No; I do not think so. I do not think it would be germane.

Mr. EVANS. Not even that the law that is being amended has exactly that provision in it?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I do not think that has anything to do with it. First, we can refuse to concur in the Senate amendment and reject, or we can concur in the Senate amendment. In either case we vote it down or vote it up. Then we can concur with an amendment, but the amendment must be germane. It must, Mr. Speaker, be something that is reached in the original amendment. And I contend that there is nothing in this amendment, in the provision that taxes shall be paid into the United States Treasury, that says how we shall divide it and how much the District shall pay and how much the United States shall pay. But the House amendment does that, or purports to do it, and therefore I conclude that it is not germane. Now, I may be faulty in my argument and my views about this matter, but I truly believe, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. It makes no difference whether it is germane as a House amendment or not.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Not at all. Under Hinds' Precedents I do not believe it makes any difference.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Is the gentleman considering this as a proposition to adjust the differences between the two Houses?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. No; I am considering it as an attempt of the House to pass upon this Senate amendment which is before us.

Mr. WALSH. This is a proposition which reaches the disagreement stage. The two Houses are in disagreement.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Is not this an effort to adjust those differences by the House receding from its disagreement and submitting an amendment to the Senate amendment?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. This is a parliamentary situation, as I view it: The conferees bring in this Senate amendment for action by the House. It is not an attempt of the House to agree with the Senate or the conferees to agree, but the conferees have brought this amendment in here and say to the House, "What shall we do with it?" That is original action in the House. And when the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] presents this amendment to the amendment of the Senate, he presents to this House this proposition, and it is a new proposition.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman contend an amendment might be proposed to the Senate amendment striking out all except the first three lines of the Senate amendment and restoring the language of the House proposition?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Whether that would be a proper action?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I can see no reason why, if it was not subject to a point of order, any motion——

Mr. WALSH. You contend that would be subject to a point of order?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. If you are asking whether that action could be taken, of course the gentleman knows the motion to concur with any amendment would be a proper motion to make. The only question would then be the one that is raised here, whether the amendment would be subject to a point of order.

Mr. WALSH. I am asking the gentleman's opinion, since he stated that the House proposition can be laid aside entirely in considering this question, as to whether the proposed amendment to the Senate brought back provisions of the House amendment on certain lines in the Senate amendment?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Whether the original House bill would be proper as an amendment to the Senate amendment I have not given any particular consideration to.

Mr. WALSH. It has been done very often.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. It would seem to me it would be proper, and it would seem to me that it would be tantamount to a rejection of the Senate amendment, and I imagine it would not be subject to a point of order. But that has not been done here. Why discuss matters that are not before us? In the case that I have called attention to the point of order was sustained on the ground that the House bill was not before it. The RECORD of yesterday shows that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] moved to recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment which he presented, and that is the parliamentary situation, and it is a new situation so far as the House is concerned. Now, I contend that there is not anything in the Senate amendment that provides for the establishment of a sinking fund or that might by any intendment be brought into anything of that kind. That is incorporated in the gentleman's amendment. However that may be, it is a new proposition and can not be properly deduced from the Senate amendment.

Next, there is a commission authorized to fix the rate to produce this sinking fund. Where is there anything in the Senate amendment that authorizes any machinery of that kind? So far as I know it is new. I do not know how the rates are fixed now, but I do know that this House amendment, which is now sought to be incorporated in the Senate amendment, directs the commissioners to fix a rate, which must be subject to their decision and must be sufficient to raise this sinking fund which they provide for. It provides there shall be no advancement by the Treasury of the United States after June 30, 1927. There is nothing on which to base that. It cuts off the advancements which are being made ordinarily.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Does the gentleman intend to say that under the existing law the commissioners do not fix the rate of taxation, or do you simply plead ignorance of it?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I do not say they do not. I do not know what they do. But I do know this, that there is no machinery set up in the Senate amendment for doing that thing. Now, for instance, would the Speaker or anyone else contend that in an act establishing a tax rate by a legislature of a State, or by the Congress of the United States, that it would be a germane amendment to provide for the election of assessors and collectors and to provide the machinery by which they might do it, and to fix automobile licenses, as is mentioned in this House amendment, and do a lot of other things, among them to fix 3 per cent for ground rent?

There is nothing in this Senate amendment except the announcement of a principle that the moneys collected in this District shall be paid into the Treasury, that the debts of the District shall be paid out of the Treasury on warrants, and that the tax rate shall be $1.75 a hundred; and yet the House amendment goes on and provides for all of these things in addition to that. It provides that the District shall pay 3 per cent ground rent on certain buildings.

Is that a mere broadening of the scope of the Senate amendment? No. It is absolutely new legislation, whether it is incorporated in the current law or not. It certainly is not germane to the Senate amendment. It provides for the opening of certain books by the Treasurer of the United States by July 1, 1922, in which books he shall keep accounts of the disbursements and receipts. It directs the assessor to fix the full value of certain ground upon which ground rent is to be paid to the United States. It makes funds available for next year's use by the authorities. It provides that the District Commissioners shall collect the moneys for the United States. It has a clause relative to the revenues of the Center Market down here, and what shall be done about that, and then ends up by stating that 40 per cent of certain amounts shall be paid by the United States and 60 per cent by the District.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if the Speaker will rule, it seems to me, that these things were germane to the Senate amendment, it broadens the matter beyond all reasonable intendment. The Senate amendment can not be construed as justifying amendatory provisions relative to the machinery for doing these various things, which ought to be carried by legislative bills. In so far as this amendment affects the rate of taxation which the Senate has attempted to fix in its amendment and the principle that the money shall be paid into the Treasury and paid out, it is germane; but I respectfully submit, Mr. Speaker, that otherwise it is not germane and that these matters, which I believe to be proper, perhaps, ought to be brought in here in the way that other such matters should be and are brought in.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Suppose instead of the amendment actually proposed by the House committee they had brought in Senate amendment No. 1. Suppose that had been brought in. Would it be subject to a point of order?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. It would not be subject to a point of order, as I understand it, but the House would have to take action on it under our revised rules. But this is our amendment which we are trying to incorporate on the Senate amendment, to which it is not germane. And so it seems to me that the point is very narrow, Mr. Speaker, not a broad one, but it gets down simply to that narrow compass of the germaneness of these various provisions to the facts and matters which are stated in the Senate amendment.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, there is just one suggestion that I want to make to the Speaker. Something less than two years ago we amended section 2 of Rule XX. Under that we took away from the conferees of the House the right to agree to these legislative riders which the Senate was in the habit of adding onto House appropriation bills, and we said that the conferees should not agree to them unless they be given authority by the House so to do.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not care much about the merits of this pending proposition, and I recognize that the Speaker can rule either way with sound logic and good reason. But if you hold that this amendment is in order you make the confusion worse confounded that we sought to eliminate by that change of Rule XX. Why? What was the evil that we wanted to eradicate then? What was the protection we wanted to give to the Members? Before we adopted that amendment the House was compelled to vote yes or no upon substantive legislative propositions which not only had not been considered by a legislative committee of the House and on which it had received no advice and had no opportunity to exercise its matured judgment, but the Members in the hurried examination which they could make on the floor could not in justice to themselves determine whether the provisions containing the riders were sound or not, or whether they should be voted up or voted down. We sought to extricate ourselves from that procedure by making the change I have referred to in the rules.

What do we have here? Not only does the Senate follow the same old procedure, but we ourselves use the check which we sought to erect against that condition as a peg by which the House itself authorizes its conferees or any Member to confront the House with the same bad practice; that is, to compel the voting up or down of a proposition involving the whole tax system of the District of Columbia.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. In a moment. I want to be brief.

The Speaker, I think, has caught my thought without my pursuing it further. The House, then, if the Speaker overrules this point of order, finds itself in the position of having increased and added to the evil that it sought to eradicate. It will simply do this, Mr. Speaker: It will make it possible, if you overrule the point of order, that on an annual appropriation bill taking care of the Treasury of the United States and the Federal reserve system, if the Senate sees fit to put on a slight general legislative proposition changing first in a minor detail the reserve requirements of the Federal reserve act, and second, the rediscount provisions of the Federal reserve act, two substantive provisions of the Federal reserve act, then it will be possible for the conferees, Mr. Speaker, to come in here and, on that little provision of the Senate as a peg to move to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment completely rewriting the Federal reserve act, and you will be compelled to hold it in order. Not only that, but on that same bill, if the Senate saw fit to offer a little amendment as to the collection of customs duties and their distribution, and should change one tariff rate on one schedule and provide, as they do here, that all other customs rates or schedules shall remain as now provided by law, then under the decision of the Speaker to-day, if he holds this amendment to be in order, the conferees of the Committee on Appropriations could come in here and move to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment which would include a new tariff law outright, because that little provision would be parallel to this case. So I ask the Speaker to hesitate before he holds this amendment germane. There is a broad distinction as to what is germane. It must not simply be related. The amendment not only is not directly germane, but it violates the rule which the House has adopted to try to protect itself against this very same situation. What has resulted, Mr. Speaker? We have already consumed three or four hours discussing this one proposition, and if the House is to vote intelligently upon this one question it must put itself in the attitude of considering the whole taxing system of the District, and in fairness to the Members of the House we ought to have more opportunity than simply the one hour that the gentleman in control of the floor may yield.

I submit that the philosophy of the rule is to protect the Members of the House against hasty action and to enable Members when they vote upon a major proposition to vote after due deliberation, aided by the mature judgment of a committee that has investigated the subject, and after a chance to discuss it fully on the floor; and I think that in making his decision the Speaker ought to look to the purposes of the rule and the objects which the House had in mind in making this rule, not only to expedite its action but to guarantee that its action shall be intelligent and based upon full consideration and matured judgment.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. May I make a suggestion to the gentleman?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I suggest that important, unlimited legislation could be enacted at the instance of the conferees without any evidence being presented.

Mr. WINGO. Why, certainly. You could make the three conferees on a House appropriation bill into a legislative committee if they could simply get the Senate to tack on some little provision that would be a peg upon which they could hang their action. Why, they can not accept these riders in the first instance because you can make a point of order against it; but get the Senate to put on a general provision, though short, and they, the conferees, can change the whole legislative proposition and say it is germane.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule. This question has occasioned the Chair considerable difficulty in coming to a decision, for there are very strong arguments on both sides, as has been illustrated to the Members who have listened to the debate.

The Chair appreciates what the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] has just said, that if the Senate puts on a legislative provision it may prevent the legislative committee of the House from considering the proposition, and therefore is not the proper way to have it brought up. But, after all, that can not be prevented. That is still in the control of the House. If the House does not like that method of legislating, it may simply refuse to agree to the Senate amendment. But, after all, the Senate has a right to put on a legislative amendment if it desires, just as the House has that right, and when such a legislative amendment comes over to the House from the Senate the House is obliged to consider it, and it is just as properly before the House as if it had been reported from the House legislative committee.

It seems to the Chair that some of the arguments which have been presented as to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] to the Senate amendment have been a little confused, because it has been referred to as action by the conferees. It is not action by the conferees. It is a motion made by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] as a Member of the House. Any other Member of the House might offer the amendment. Of course, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS], being the chairman of the subcommittee, would have the first right to recognition; but the Senate amendment, being before the House, is subject to amendment by any Member of the House. There were two grounds stated for this point of order; first, that it was legislation, and, second, that it was not germane. The first point has not been insisted upon, and, of course, could not be, for there is no question that the whole Senate amendment is legislation. It is practically nothing but legislation. In fact, curiously enough, the Senate seems to have been so absorbed by the fact that it was legislation that it forgot to put on the appropriating clause. So that the Senate amendment is clearly legislation, and legislation of a very broad and sweeping character. It entirely changes the system under which taxation and appropriations in the District of Columbia have been made. It has always been on a proportional basis—half and half or some other ratio. This Senate amendment simply says at the outset that all expenses shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States, and then it goes on to provide the details. That is a radical change, and, of course, it is legislation. Now, the Senate amendment comes before the House as an amendment to the first section of the House appropriation bill and it strikes out all of the House provision, and, therefore, is a substitute. It seems to the Chair that, this being the fact, the precedents cited by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] do not apply, and that this being a substitute and the matter being in the stage of disagreement any amendment can be offered which is germane either to this substitute or to the original House proposition, because it would be natural that a substitute should be offered which would bring the two Houses together, which would harmonize the two, which might contain part that was in one and part that was in the other, and yet the part that was in the original House bill might not be at all germane to the Senate amendment. But it seems to the Chair that it could hardly be argued that such an amendment was not germane, because the most natural amendment would be one tending to harmonize the provisions of the House and the provisions of the Senate and containing part of one and part of the other. Therefore, it seems to the Chair that, this being a substitute, anything is germane, and therefore in order, which is germane to either the original House section or to the Senate amendment.

The question remains, Is this amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota a germane amendment? The Chair having considered it overnight confesses that he has had considerable difficulty. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] has offered suggestions showing that there are provisions in this amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] which do not directly touch anything detailed in the Senate amendment. But the Chair has come to the conclusion that the Senate amendment is a complete and sweeping revision of existing law. It covers the whole field of relationship between the District and the Government in the affairs of taxation and expenditures. As the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. EVANS] says, it practically repeals the existing law and establishes a new basis and a new system. In doing that the question arises whether only amendments can be offered which are directly applicable to the specific provisions which are detailed in the Senate amendment, or is the whole field so open that amendments can be offered which, although not specifically mentioned in the Senate amendment, apply to the changes made by the Senate amendment and are incidental to its whole subject and purpose. It seems to the Chair that the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota contains such provisions only; that they are fairly incidental to the expressed purpose of the Senate amendment, and that the House has a right by amendment to adopt such incidental changes. The Chair therefore rules that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota is germane and in order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division of the question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks for a division of the question, and the first question would be on the motion to recede.

Mr. EVANS. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. EVANS. If we vote to recede and that should be carried, then will the second question be open to argument before a vote?

The SPEAKER. Certainly; open to argument and amendment. The first question is on the motion to recede.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment with the amendment I have offered.

The SPEAKER. That motion is now pending. The question now is, Will the House concur in the Senate amendment with the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. DENISON. Is not that subject to debate, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

[Cries of "Vote! Vote!"]

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I will move the previous question.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, here are two gentlemen who were given to understand that they should be heard upon this question. I think in fairness the gentleman ought to let the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] present this matter to the House. It is a matter that involves the whole taxing system of the District.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the motion, and I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON].

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I think I can state my position in five minutes. I want to take up just enough time of the House to state for my own personal satisfaction the rule of action that I have decided I will be governed by from now on. Whenever the Senate puts legislative provisions on an appropriation bill sent over by the House, and these legislative provisions are brought back to the House, I will vote against every one of them from now on, I do not care what they are. I think the sooner the House comes to that conclusion the better it will be for the country. Here we have an appropriation bill from a committee that was authorized simply to appropriate the money needed for the District of Columbia, and they have usurped the functions of the Committee on the District of Columbia and brought in a provision changing the entire fiscal system of the District.

I can urge this position without being suspected of having any personal feeling, because I am on a committee that never has had any appropriating power, and none of the jurisdiction of my own committee has been affected in any way by the creation of the large Appropriations Committee. But all of the legislative committees of the House are going to degenerate into purely honorary committees unless the House rises up and protects them in their proper jurisdiction by preventing legislation by the Committee on Appropriations. The sooner the House realizes that and asserts the rights of these committees the better it will be for the House and the country.

I am not talking about the merits of this particular proposition that is now before the House. The gentleman from Kentucky and those associated with him may be right. I do not know; I have not had a chance to consider it; the House has not had a chance to consider it. They have not held any proper hearings. This whole question of the District fiscal system ought to go to the District of Columbia Committee, and let that committee have hearings and let the people of the District have an opportunity to be heard. This legislation reaches into every home in the District, affects every property owner in the District, and now the House of Representatives is called upon to pass upon this important question that will affect every property owner in the District without giving the citizens an opportunity to be heard at all. It is not right; it is not fair; it is not common sense.

The appropriation committee ought to be confined to appropriating the money that is needed for the expenses of the Government and ought not to be given legislative powers. Let us come to some conclusion on this question now and vote down this legislative proposition without regard to its merits and let the District's fiscal system be considered in a proper way.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Is it not true that every District of Columbia appropriation bill has contained some legislative methods of taxation?

Mr. DENISON. Yes; that is true.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. From 1878 to the present time.

Mr. DENISON. If we are going to keep on doing that and the House wants to do it, then let us abolish the District Committee and put the members of that committee to work on something else where they can work instead of merely gracing a nominal committee, and letting the Appropriation Committee do all of the legislating for the District. That is not only true about the District Committee, but it is true about other committees. The Committee on Appropriations is doing nearly all of the legislating for the House, and it does not conduce to orderly legislation. It is not fair to the rest of the Members of the House, it is not fair to the other important committees, and it is not best for the country for one committee to do all of the legislating for the country. Here are these conferees—and they are all good men; I have no criticism to make of them—who get together in a sort of star-chamber meeting, and they reach a conclusion that will affect every man and woman in the District who owns property. The question of taxation is a vital question to every man and woman who has anything to be taxed, and I say that the people of the District ought to be given an opportunity to be heard; they have no right to vote and have no chosen representative here. The House itself ought to have an opportunity to study this question carefully after we know the facts. We can not act intelligently on an important question of this kind with only one hour's discussion. If I had not risen when I did, the gentleman from Minnesota would not have given us any time. He was moving the previous question, and we would have had to vote on this matter without any discussion at all. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the subcommittee having charge of the District appropriations. The work of this committee began on the 12th day of December last, and they have been in almost continuous session ever since. The problems with which this committee is confronted are intricate and important. They deal with every phase of District life. No more painstaking study has ever been made of important problems than the study made of the problems involved in the pending bill. The chairman of this committee [Mr. DAVIS] has been indefatigable in his work. He has worked night and day, giving of his long and valuable experience in the solution of the problems that have confronted this committee. He has made every sacrifice to reach the proper conclusion. He has always been accessible to the people who have had questions before the committee. He has been unstinting in the time that he has given to the hearings and to those who were affected by the legislation. He deserves the encomiums of the people of the District for the unselfish devotion he has given to the study of the problems affecting their life. He understands the problems of the District better than any other man. He has been modest in his approach to questions affecting the people. He has regarded himself, as the chairman of this committee, as the representative of the Nation's Capital. He has done his work well. He deserves the praise not only of the people of the District of Columbia but of the people of the Nation, and the people of h's district ought to be proud to have a man here like him representing them, charged with the great responsibility that he has been called upon to assume. [Applause.] As chairman of the Committee on Appropriations I want to say that my association with Mr. DAVIS has been most pleasant. I have more confidence in his judgment on questions relating to the problems that have come before him for consideration than I have in the judgment of any other man, and I want to thank Mr. DAVIS as chairman of this committee and every member of the committee for the painstaking care and the minuteness with which they have gone into every question relating to this wonderful District, in the development of which we are all interested, and of which we are all so proud. I not only want to thank the chairman of the committee especially for his work, but I want to thank the entire subcommittee, because I know of no five men anywhere who have been as unselfish in their devotion to their work as have these five men under the able leadership of the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota, my colleague, Mr. DAVIS. [Applause.]

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ZIHLMAN] for five minutes.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am not at all surprised that the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations should pay high compliment to the chairman of the subcommittee having in charge this bill. He might also congratulate the entire committee on the additional power that has been given to the Committee on Appropriations by the ruling of the Speaker. Congress two years ago gave to the Committee on Appropriations the entire power of making appropriations, and it was attempted at that time to reserve to the legislative committees of the House the duties of legislating in matters such as are now before the House.

The proposed amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota is the most far-reaching and drastic proposition that has ever been brought into the Congress on a District appropriation bill. They seek here in an hour's debate to increase the basis of assessment which would result, under the prevailing tax rate, in increasing the taxes of the taxpayers of the District more than $4,000,000. They seek to increase the rate on intangible property two-tenths of 1 per cent. They seek to change the system of collecting rents in the Center Market. They seek to set up a ground rent in the District of Columbia on Federal property.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I have only five minutes.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. If the gentleman wants to make a misstatement of facts, he can do it.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. The Senate amendment is a purely legislative matter. It is contained in a bill that has passed the Senate and is now pending before the Committee on the District of Columbia, the legislative committee of the House having jurisdiction over affairs dealing with the District, and without giving the people of the District an opportunity to be heard, without giving a single taxpayer an opportunity of raising his voice, the conferees come into this House with a proposition that the basis of assessment shall be changed from two-thirds to full value and that the District Commissioners shall fix a rate of taxes not only sufficient to meet the financial needs of the District but that they shall levy a tax rate sufficient to create a surplus and change the system of paying the expenses of the District of Columbia which have been in operation here for half a century. It is small wonder that the chairman of the committee rises here to congratulate his colleagues and to also congratulate himself on the enormous power which has been vested in a few conferees meeting in secret session. I say to you that it is unfair to the legislative committees of the House. It is unfair to the people of the District of Columbia to deliberately attempt here in an hour's debate to raise their taxes fully one-third and to establish an entirely new system of financing the needs of the District of Columbia.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. What is the present tax rate of the District?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. It is 7 cents more than is carried in the Senate amendment—$1.82.

Mr. WALSH. Is that $1.82 a hundred?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. One dollar and eighty-two cents on the hundred-dollar valuation. It was $1.90 last year.

Mr. WALSH. Does that mean that the $1.82 applies to three-thirds or to the two-thirds valuation?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Two-thirds of the value fixed by the Congress many years ago, and if the Congress desires to change that basis of valuation it should be done in deliberation and with full consideration and by giving the people of the District a fair opportunity to be heard. I contend it is unfair to put this enormous burden of taxation on the people of the District without giving representative citizens and taxpayers a chance to be heard on the proposition.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I do.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Does not this prove that legislation which was favorably acted upon by the House or by the District Committee has gone to the other body and died there, and that necessitated its being reported upon the District appropriation bill?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. No such far-reaching and drastic proposition as this has ever been passed upon by this House or the Senate.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. But is not this the fact, that the 60–40 plan died over in the other body and it is was necessary to be attached to an appropriation bill——

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I will say to the gentleman the 60–40 proposition was submitted in the District appropriation bill of this year and the Senate refused it and adopted a more advanced or more radical proposition on the tax question, in that they sought to increase the percentage that the District government should pay, when they decided that the tax rate should be $1.75, the Federal Government making up the difference between the amount received and the expenses of the District.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. As I understand it, all this committee is doing is to substitute this for the provision of the Senate bill when they refused to go ahead with the 60–40 plan.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, a while ago in ruling on the point of order the Speaker correctly said that the pending amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota is of a most radical character; that it changes the entire fiscal system of the District of Columbia. Think of that! A complete change of the entire fiscal system of the District of Columbia, affecting nearly 500,000 people, brought in here yesterday for the information of the House, and now to be passed upon after practically no debate at all! Now, I ask how fair-minded men can justify any such course. If I may without disrespect use the term, I would say that it strikes me as positively absurd for the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] to take the floor and spend nearly five minutes in eulogizing the conferees. What does personal eulogy amount to when we are considering a fiscal situation involving questions of taxation and various other questions of extreme importance? How are we speeded toward a correct conclusion by having certified to us the fact of which we are all aware, that these conferees are very eminent and respectable gentlemen? However high they may stand—and they do stand high—they ask us to do a thing utterly unreasonable, accept what they have resolved upon and propose, without any evidence except their own statements, and without any chance at all for real debate. Now, I have tried to look at this matter as a judge, although I have never been one. I know, however, what the attitude of a judge should be, and, taking a strictly judicial attitude, approving some of the propositions contained in this amendment and disapproving others, I submit that there never was a document of five pages, to be now immediately disposed of, containing more legislation of greater importance and variety than this amendment contains. It is said that the excuse for our action is because the legislative committee on the District of Columbia sends legislation to the Senate and it is buried there. Is that any reason why the House of Representatives should put itself in any such position that it is now about to assume? Does that constitute a reason why the House of Representatives, exercising its power and rising to its dignity, should not find some better method of dealing with the affairs of the District?

Now, I wish to say a little about some of the specific things in this amendment. The amendment, for instance, provides for basing taxes upon the full assessed value. If any of us were sitting around a table on a legislative committee we would, in considering the basis of taxation, inquire whether there should be exemption or mitigation extended to the small property owner; we would consider the question of imposing higher taxes upon the unearned increment of unimproved property. But there has been no such inquiry.

As to the tax on intangibles, I do not object to that.

I do not think an excessive rate is provided by the amendment, but if we were legislating deliberately, as we are not, it would be proposed that we look into the legal rate of interest in the District of Columbia and see whether it is not so high that the man who wishes to borrow money upon his house or desires to negotiate a loan for some other legitimate purpose will be required to pay a rate of 7 per cent interest or more plus the prospective intangible taxes.

In my opinion, the most objectionable feature of the amendment is the provision that requires the District to raise and pay into the Treasury, by a yearly contribution for a period of five years, the very large amount that will be needed to enable the District "to get upon a cash-paying basis by the end of the fiscal year 1927." The theory for this is that while the annual contribution of the District toward the common upkeep is roughly about $14,000,000, this is not available until toward the end of the fiscal year, and meanwhile all payments are made from the Federal Treasury, so that the Government along during the fiscal year really advances $14,000,000, for which the District is bound, and that the only way to remedy the burden to which the Government is thus subjected is to accumulate during the five-year period $14,000,000, which at the end of that period will make possible the payment of the common liabilities from common resources.

The present practice which this theory criticizes and condemns as a hardship upon the Government is sanctioned by an old statute. If there is any real grievance of which the Government is entitled to complain, it should surely not be corrected by forthwith adding to the normal 60 per cent contribution paid by the taxpayers of the District an annual item of perhaps nearly $3,000,000 for five years. It goes without saying that such an addition at any time, and especially at such a time as this, would be a very serious thing. To create a fresh tax liability of such a large amount naturally causes the people of the District a great deal of uneasiness and anxiety. Incidentally, it may be noted that against the proposed five-year $14,000,000 charge this bill gives no credit for a clear balance of $4,646,000, which in the period from June 30, 1916, to June 30, 1920, the District paid into the Federal Treasury over and above the contribution it was called on to make to the total revenue and expenditures. As I understand, the existence of this balance is not only undisputed but has been expressly recognized in communications from the Treasury Department.

If it is inequitable for the Government to make advances as heretofore, it would nevertheless seem likewise wholly inequitable to attempt to correct that condition by exacting from the taxpayers of the District an extraordinary fund of something like $14,000,000. They would fare much better by amending the present law so as to compel the payment of a substantial part of the local taxes, say by November 1, instead of permitting payment to be postponed to the close of the fiscal year. Or they would suffer less by the District being called on to pay the Government a fair rate of interest on the Government advances for the average period during which the Government lays out its funds, which would probably be a period of six months.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Can the gentleman from Minnesota yield me five additional minutes?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. No; I can not.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The gentleman's courtesy is invariable.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Absolutely. I will say that my courtesy is equal to that of the gentleman. I have more gentlemen who want to speak here than I have time.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. May I ask the gentleman if he will not agree by unanimous consent to extend the time of debate?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I could not; no, sir.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The gentleman is very summary.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I know he is, but the gentleman's speech indicates his generosity, too.

I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, the argument has just been made against this procedure, because it gives so much authority to the Committee on Appropriations. I wish the House to remember that much authority has been taken away from the Committee on Appropriations by the present proceedings; that authority has been taken away from the conferees, and has compelled the conferees to come back to the House, not to accept an amendment put upon the bill by the conferees but merely to accept or reject an amendment proposed in the open House. That procedure is different from past procedure, and is much more liberal toward the House than the former practice.

As I have such a short time to discuss the merits of this amendment I shall have to get at it hurriedly, but I do wish to say that at no time since the end of the Shepherd régime in the early seventies has Congress placed so much power in the officers of the District of Columbia as this amendment does. We see in the newspapers that some of the commissioners have said that this amendment will pile untold taxes on the people of the District of Columbia. When they say that they seemingly do not bear in mind that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia themselves, selected from among the people of the District of Columbia, fix their estimates, and that they themselves fix the rate of taxation. What could be more fair?

Only the other day one of the wealthiest and one of the most prominent men in the District of Columbia, a prominent banker, was in my office, and he complained that the taxes were going to be so heavy in the District of Columbia that nobody could stand them. I laid the proposition before him that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia would be economical or extravagant in their estimates just as they chose to be, and then that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia were given the power by Congress to fix the rate of taxation, that they can make it much or make it little. That gentleman said to me, "I came to complain, but there is nothing that is fairer than the proposition which this amendment submits to the people of the District of Columbia, except that the tax on intangible personal property is too high."

It has just been said by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] that if this amendment is adopted it will impose a greater rate of interest upon borrowers. Let me show you that just exactly the reverse of that proposition is true. If a man in the District of Columbia has a mortgage on real estate in the District, and that mortgage is either exempt from taxation entirely or has a small tax upon it, just as is here, then it is more profitable to own the mortgage than it is the real estate. This proposition to increase the taxation upon intangible personal property does not suit me, because it does not go far enough, but it was the best we could get. Then, if under the present rate of 3 mills more than $1,000,000 is raised in the District of Columbia by taxing intangible personal property, under the proposed amendment one million and three-quarters will be raised, and when one million and three-quarters is raised on intangible personal property the amount that must be raised from taxing real estate and tangible personal property is correspondingly reduced.

The commissioners, by the provisions of this amendment, can either make the estimates big or little. Therefore it depends on them whether the tax rate shall be great or small. If they demand and succeed in getting an extravagant appropriation bill the taxes must be more than if they get an economical bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. May I ask the gentleman how the rate here compares with the rates in the different cities?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will say this to the gentleman, that the House conferees proposed to the Senate conferees in writing that 20 cities be taken; that the Director of the Census Bureau be directed to take 10 cities immediately larger in population than the District of Columbia and 10 cities immediately smaller than the population of the District of Columbia; let the Director of the Census pick the cities and then permit the Director of the Census to gather the taxation that would be paid in each of those 20 cities, and then from that taxation strike an average, and let that rate of taxation apply to the District of Columbia. That was a fair proposition. But because it would make the rate of taxation in the District of Columbia comparably up to that paid by other jurisdictions it was rejected. Then we were forced to cast about for another way. Finally the House conferees yielded to the proposition that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia should make their own estimates and also fix a rate of taxation for the District. I believe in my heart that there is no fair-minded man in the District of Columbia who can complain about it when he comes to understand. There is no avenue in the District of Columbia through which the people of the District can know about their own affairs. The papers here will not fully tell them about their public business. Even this amendment has been distorted. It has been misrepresented. The people have been told that Congress is heaping a burdensome tax upon them. Two distinguished men from private life here in the District of Columbia and a distinguished Army officer, making the third District commissioner, are to fix the rate of taxation for them. The papers say that the tax will be upon three-thirds instead of two-thirds. It must go out from the Nation's Capital that cheating in the way of valuation is not to be recognized. A model is to be established in that respect.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. EVANS].

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, there has been considerable said in reference to the matter of no hearings having been had on this proposition, and in order that the matter may be thoroughly presented to the House, as I think it ought to be, I wish to state what the facts are with reference to this matter. There have been extended hearings before the District Committee in this body on the question of the fiscal system of the District. Not only is that true, but in the Senate, in the District Committee, they had extended hearings, in both of which the people of the District have been heard.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EVANS. I yield.

Mr. KING. Have there been any hearings on this amendment now before the House?

Mr. EVANS. I will cover that in a moment.

Not only have they been heard, but bills have been presented in the House and in the Senate. There is pending right at this minute before the District Committee of this House a bill passed by the Senate which has been lying there for two months, and one of the Members who finds fault because there has been no hearing on the question is one of the men who are members of that committee.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EVANS. Yes.

Mr. KING. Are the people of the District of Columbia to be punished for the shortcomings of the Senate?

Mr. EVANS. The gentleman's question supposes that the House is trying to punish the people in the District of Columbia, which is not supported either by common sense or any facts. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a very short piece of history that will add to our information?

Mr. EVANS. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Seven years ago, in 1915, we got just this far with a proposition to change the fiscal relations of the District of Columbia. Then the Senate got some matter on the District bill. Mr. UNDERWOOD, of Alabama, was then the Democratic leader in the House, and the House was Democratic. The very complaint that they had not had a hearing was then brought up. Then Mr. UNDERWOOD offered an amendment by which a special committee was appointed to have a hearing. That special committee held its hearings until after Congress adjourned and long afterwards into the summer, and it was gone over by everybody that wanted to be heard, and thereby wholesome legislation both for the District and the United States was defeated.

Mr. EVANS. With reference to the amendment which has been presented here in the House certain persons high in District affairs were called and were heard. No general hearings have been had, but I challenge your attention to this, that there has not been a single criticism of this amendment which was reported here on the 28th of April by any Member on the floor of the House because it was unjust.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EVANS. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Is it not a fact that hearings have been held on bills involving the same questions as those contained in the amendment?

Mr. EVANS. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming moves a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. STAFFORD). Two hundred and seventy-four Members are present—a quorum.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] has 25 minutes remaining.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, was my time all used?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is advised that the gentleman's time is exhausted. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] has 25 minutes remaining.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I think the Speaker made a mistake.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is advised by the Clerk that 35 minutes have been consumed, so that the gentleman has 25 minutes remaining of the hour.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I wish the Chair to call my attention to it when I have consumed all but two or three minutes of my time.

Gentlemen of the House, I would like your attention as much as possible. As most of you are aware, I make very few speeches on this floor. In the first few years after I came here—the first 8 or 10—I was talking considerably, but since then I have been engaged in committee work, and chiefly upon the District of Columbia Committee, so much so that I have been called "the sole alderman of Washington." And I want to say to you now that there are more difficulties, in my judgment, connected with the position I occupy than there are in being the sole alderman of the city of Chicago because of the complications that arise in every way, raising money from all sources and distributing it by half a dozen or a dozen different organizations or commissions.

I began a few years ago to aid and assist the school-teachers of the District. I found that the lower-grade teachers were getting only $500 and $600 a year. I succeeded in about three years or more of effort in getting them so adjusted that the lowest kindergarten and first-grade teacher gets now $1,440, and others in proportion. Was I liberal with the District from this standpoint?

When I began here the policemen were not getting as much salary as they are now receiving. I assisted in getting their salaries raised. The firemen were not getting as much as they now get. I assisted in getting their salaries raised. I aided in getting a platoon system for the firemen, so that instead of working 24 hours a day they have a platoon system. But I want to say that in all the bills that I have helped to engineer and get up, as a member of the subcommittee before I became chairman, and as chairman, this is the most liberal bill that has ever been presented to this Congress for the District and contains the greatest amount, two or three million dollars more than the bill of last year. Inside of 10 years, since I have been on this committee—and I do not want you to lay it up against me—this District of Columbia appropriation bill has about doubled. But be that as it may, we now have in this bill and the bills just preceding it, including the deficiency bill, within 14 months, over $5,000,000 appropriated for new school buildings. Many of them are not yet built. Because they said the schools were crowded I have given them every school building they have asked for except possibly one in the last bill or two. We have improved their streets and roads and given them virtually everything they asked except one in the last year or two.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I should like to ask the gentleman where there is one good road in the District of Columbia anywhere outside of Potomac Park?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will say to the gentleman that if they have not got good roads it is not because they have not had the money, but it is because the money has not been spent where it was appropriated for in many instances. There was a little road that goes out into Maryland for which my friend Sidney Mudd got an appropriation.

Mr. LINTHICUM. And he had to fight hard to get it.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. No; he did not. I assented to it. If I had not assented to it he never would have gotten it, and that money which was appropriated for that road has never been spent on that road, only a little part of it.

Mr. MUDD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. MUDD. The gentleman recalls that an appropriation of $51,000 was obtained for the Bladensburg Road leading to Baltimore city?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. MUDD. And the gentleman recalls very well that not a cent of that money was spent on that road.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Am I to blame for that?

Mr. MUDD. No.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I should like to know who is to blame?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I do not wish to make any accusations against the officers in charge of this District.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I know, but the gentleman in charge of the District appropriations ought to know who is to blame.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I did not spend that money.

Mr. LINTHICUM. The gentleman ought to tell us who is to blame.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The commissioners or the Engineer commissioner spent the money for that particular thing. I did not.

Now, gentlemen, ever since I have been in the city the papers here have raised a great howl, saying, "We do not have a vote, we do not have anything to say about our taxes, or about our estimates, or about anything. Some of these Congressmen from the western prairies come down here and skimp us," and so forth. We have the right under the Constitution to make their assessments, to fix up their estimates after they present them, and to say what shall be appropriated. We have done what we thought was right.

And now I am going to get down to the real proposition here, this amendment No. 1. What is it? You know the people of the District of Columbia are legislative orphans. They can not vote. They can not have a word to say about their taxation or anything of that kind, not a thing; but this Senate amendment No. 1 for the first time gives them full power to do it. That is what it does. It says to the District Commissioners, "Fix your own estimates, fix your own rate of taxation." Ah, but I hear my friend from Maryland saying, "But you raised the assessment to the full value." True; and why did we do it? Do you want me to tell you why we raised it?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. No. I will tell you why we raised it. It was because I know, and many gentlemen on this floor know, that there have been assessments against the small home owner that were very nearly up to the full value, or at least to the full amount of two-thirds, under the law, while some of these houses of multimillionaires, houses worth half a million or a million dollars apiece, have been assessed at only about one-fifth of their value. We simply put that in here for the purpose of protecting the small house owner instead of the large one.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Just for a question.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Why did you cut out the exemption on page 3 of the bill, the $2,000 exemption on real estate which would have helped the small householder?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I hate to mention names, but we had as conferees on the part of the Senate Senator PHIPPS, Senator JONES, and Senator GLASS. Ask them if they did not agree to this section. They agreed to it fully, and to-day they are somewhat chagrined at some of the erroneous statements that are being told through the papers concerning their action.

Mr. LINTHICUM. We ought to have held it in there, because that is the only thing that does help the small householder.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Now, as I say, under the standard law we have a tax rate of 15 mills on real estate and tangible personal property.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I can not yield.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. The gentleman does not wish to state the tax rate incorrectly. That is not the tax rate.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. All right; if it is not, the gentleman can contradict it in his own time. Fifteen mills has been the tax rate for a great many years. Two or three years ago we raised the limit so they could go between 15 mills and 20 mills if they wanted to, in order to raise a sufficient amount. Last year they raised it to 18 mills, or $1.82 on $100. Now, we did not wish to confine them to that. We simply say that we fix the valuation at par, and we say to the commissioners, "Fix your tax rate at anything you have a mind to. Fix it at 5 mills, 10 mills, 20 mills, anything to raise enough to pay your 60 per cent of the estimates and appropriations that you want made." They can fix it any way they have a mind to, so this full valuation cuts no figure. It is the tax rate to be fixed by the commissioners that counts.

I have told you why we put on the full valuation—to make them put a full valuation on the large property owners as they have on the small property owners. Now, gentlemen, as I have said, this is the largest bill for the District that has been considered since I have been a Member of the House. I think we had hearings before our committee and had the auditor of the District and all the commission and everybody connected with it about two months, and took 1,500 pages of testimony. Then the Senate had hearings, extensive hearings on similar matters, and we have been in conference for about six weeks. The matter has been thoroughly thrashed over. This bill meets the situation exactly regarding school buildings, playgrounds, water, eight or nine million dollars for a new aqueduct, the school for feeble-minded, and everything you need. It is a large bill. The fact is next year if the taxes are not right it will be the fault of the commissioners, because they have enough in this bill, so that next year the bill ought not to be as large in amount as this bill. They have buildings appropriated for that they will not build for two or three years. It is said and published that the taxes will be higher—$3,000,000, they say—which is all nonsense and bosh. But we do tell them to raise a little surplus. I notice one or two men looking at me who think and say that we have already a surplus. How do you know we have? Because somebody told you so. Dig down into it and you will find that there is no surplus. Furthermore, I want to say that since 1878, 44 years, the Government of the United States has advanced each year for 11 months in each year all the money, without any interest, running into hundreds of millions of dollars. This bill continues this advancement for five years more. For instance—take the expenses of the current year—has the District got any money in it? No, sir; the Government of the United States has got it all, and will have it until they collect the taxes about the 1st of June. Then they recompense the Government. In 1923 the Government advances the money again, and they always have done so without any interest.

The interest at 2 per cent on that loan for the 49 years would amount to many millions. Still, talking about the surplus, we wish to put the District on a cash basis, and we give them five years in which to levy a tax and put a little something in the Treasury so that in 1927 they will have at least money enough of their own to pay the 60 per cent of the current expenses as they go along. Is there anything unfair about that? I can not see it.

But here is the great rub: When section 1 was written I suggested to the conferees that the raising of the intangible tax from three-tenths of 1 per cent to five-tenths would cause much trouble. In other words, the man that has come from another State and put millions of dollars worth of bonds and mortgages into the safety deposit vault and paid nothing will now object. The State from which he came probably taxed him from 1 to 2 per cent on intangible property and he can not now wholly escape taxation. When the first intangible law was passed for the District it was 1 per cent, or more, and it ran along that way for a few years, and then the whole thing was abandoned and nothing was collected on intangible property. Three or four years ago, through the efforts of some gentlemen—and I had something to do with it—we decided that the intangible property owners in this city should pay at least a little something on their bonds, stocks, and mortgages—the intangible property—and we put upon it the enormous tax of three-tenths of 1 per cent. Think of it, gentlemen! I know that in Maryland they have the next cheapest tax of any place in the United States. In Virginia they have 5 mills down there. I do not know of any other place where they have a tax as low as that. This District lies between Maryland and Virginia, and we thought at this time we would raise it two-tenths of 1 per cent, and we think that ought to be fair; that men who have these large amounts of mortgages and stocks and bonds, drawing 6 and 8 per cent, should pay one-half of 1 per cent on a dollar and thus help out the poor people who can not afford to pay taxes.

Make the bigger ones pay two-tenths of 1 per cent more, or 5 mills on a dollar of intangible property. That is the reason why we have this item in the bill. It is in the interest of the poor men in Washington instead of the rich ones. Poor men are not coming here except they get up a little association down in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing and get the employees to send me a large volume of what they call facts, which are not facts. I tell you in my experience this is the most just proposition, as far as taxation is concerned, that has ever been known.

Now if hereafter you have to pay an extra tax blame your own commissioners, because they will make the rate of taxation. Congress does not make any rate at all except to raise the tax two-tenths of 1 per cent on intangible property. That is all there is to it. The Senate conferees, when they fully understood this, heartily indorsed it. This amendment originated over there; it did not originate with me. These men who have more brains than I wrote it out very carefully, and I am much obliged to them.

Mr. Speaker, I do not care to talk about the matter any more. Every word that I have said I believe to be true, and much more could be said along this line.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I wanted to ask the gentleman who drew this amendment No. 1?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will not tell the gentleman further than to say that it was drawn by one or two, chiefly; but it is really the combined effort of six men—three Representatives and three United States Senators—and if the gentleman will look at the list of conferees he will know.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Oh, I understood the gentleman to intimate that it was some one in the District of Columbia who had drawn the amendment.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. No; I did not. The gentleman's hearing is bad.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does not the gentleman think that an important piece of legislation of this sort should be considered under the general rules of the House? Does the gentleman believe generally that a large piece of legislation such as this, covering the whole subject of taxation for the District of Columbia, should come in here merely as an amendment on an appropriation bill?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Does the gentleman understand the rules of the House now?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Very well; it is because of the rules that we bring it in. I did not make the rules. We could not have considered this on our bill originally. It went over to the Senate, and the Senate put on an amendment, and then under the rules we have a right to bring it here with an amendment, which we have done.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit another inquiry?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. STAFFORD). The question is on ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ZIHLMAN) there were—ayes 103, noes 24.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote upon the ground that it discloses the absence of a quorum, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maryland objects to the vote upon the grounds that there is no quorum present, and makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and sixty-one Members present, not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 200, nays 81, answered "present" 1, not voting 148, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present; the Doorkeeper will open the doors.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Maryland rise?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, the time was so limited in debate that I ask unanimous consent that any Member may have five legislative days in which to extend his remarks on amendment No. 1.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent that all Members may have five legislative days in which to extend remarks on amendment No. 1. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker—well, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 11 insert: "For the purchase or condemnation of a piece of ground to take the place of Columbia Heights playground, $50,000."

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur, with an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment No. 78, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$25,000."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman make some little explanation of this? I think the House is entitled to it.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, this is to provide for the condemnation of a piece of ground to take the place of the Columbia playground. The amount asked for was $50,000, but after mature investigation we found that $25,000 was all that was necessary, and we all agreed to it, the Senate and the House; but I could not agree to it without bringing it back to the House for a vote, because it was subject to a point of order under the rules of the House. The Senate agrees to all this.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 79: Page 32, line 31, strike out "$109,220" and insert "$159,220."

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment, this simply being the total. I send the amendment to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota moves to recede and concur in amendment No. 79 with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$134,200."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 86: On page 41 of the bill strike out of line 23 "$75,000" and insert "$90,000."

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota moves to recede and concur in Senate amendment No. 83 with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed, insert the following: "$75,000: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be expended on courses of instruction not embraced in the day-school courses and the grades of the first two years of high school."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain something concerning this amendment?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. This amount is fully agreed to between the Senate and the House conferees, and the reason why we did not put it in is simply because it would have been subject to the point of order if we had agreed to it, and we simply bring it back here for a vote under the rules.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the purpose of the amendment?

Mr. DAVIS. The purpose of the amendment is simply this: They have been spending a good deal of money, and we are willing to give a good deal of money. They have been teaching everybody from 6-year-old children up to people of 50 or more years of age, and we want to limit it to those who want to take the day-school teaching and the first two grades of the high schools.

Mr. STAFFORD. May we have the amendment again reported?

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

There was no objection.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. LANHAM. I would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota what instruction is now being given in the night schools? What does it include?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. There is no regular instruction. They teach what they want to.

Mr. LANHAM. Does it include four years of high-school work?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. With some of them it does and with some it does not. They want it limited to two years in the high school.

Mr. LANHAM. If it is a good thing to have night schools for these people, why not give them the benefit of four years of high-school work instead of two?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I can not answer that, except to say that after a long investigation it has been found satisfactory to everybody. Recently there has been a propaganda going around that a few people might be shut out, but the majority of people and pupils are satisfied with this proposition.

Mr. LANHAM. I will say to the gentleman that, regardless of propaganda, my view is this: That if you are going to have night schools for the benefit of the people who can not attend schools in the daytime, and who want after their daily work is over to get an education in order to be of better service to this country, they ought to be given the proper opportunity to do so.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division of the question.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recede.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring with an amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the motion to concur by an amendment to strike out the proviso.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 31, noes 32.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I think the number shows that there is no quorum present, and I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland makes the point that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

[The Speaker proceeded to count.]

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask for tellers.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not do that when the question of no quorum is pending. The Chair is counting. [After counting.] It is clear that there is no quorum present, and the Doorkeeper will close the doors. The Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees. Those in favor of the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts will, as their names are called, answer "yea" and those opposed will answer "nay," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 140, nays 115, not voting 175, as follows:

So the motion was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. Vare with Mr. Wright.

Mr. Griest with Mr. Garner.

Mr. Newton of Missouri with Mr. Wise.

Mr. Connell with Mr. McClintic.

Mr. Faust with Mr. Rucker.

Mr. Mondell with Mr. Stedman.

Mr. Morin with Mr. Ward of North Carolina.

Mr. Williams with Mr. Park of Georgia.

Mr. Patterson of Missouri with Mr. Aswell.

Mr. Fenn with Mr. London.

Mr. Wyant with Mr. McSwain.

Mr. Bland of Indiana with Mr. Rainey of Illinois.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. The question is on agreeing to the amendment without the proviso.

The amendment was agreed to.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report from the Committee on Ways and Means on House Joint Resolution 314.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa presents a privileged report from the Committee on Ways and Means, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Report on House Joint Resolution 314, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The Chair refers it to the House Calendar.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 101: For equipment, grading, and improving six additional school yards for the purposes of play of pupils, $2,400.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and to concur with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota moves to recede and concur with an amendment. The Clerk will report the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 101 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the sum "$2,400" insert the following: "Provided, That such playgrounds shall be kept open for play purposes in accordance with the schedule maintained for playgrounds under the jurisdiction of the playgrounds department."

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed out of order. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the attention of the House has been recently called to the dismissal of former Maj. W. O. Watts from the Department of Justice. Considerable newspaper publicity has also been given to the matter. From these publications it might appear that Major Watts had been unjustly treated. In view of my intimate connection with the matter of Major Watts's employment I feel, in justice, the House should have correct information relative to the matter.

During the work of the Select Committee on Expenditures in the War Department in the Sixty-sixth Congress the committee was given very considerable information which was useful, by Major Watts after his discharge from the Army. Major Watts, a resident of Tennessee, was connected with the Quartermaster Department during the World War, and hence had valuable information of things being inquired of by the committee. For a time he was employed by the committee as an investigator, doing faithful work. He is not a lawyer, and his principal fault is that of not understanding the vast difference between the making of a charge and the preparation of such a charge for a successful prosecution.

When the Sixty-sixth Congress adjourned the work of the select committee ended. From that time any investigation of matters growing out of the conduct of the war, or consequent proceedings, were problems for the Department of Justice. After Attorney General Daugherty had taken his office, being advised that the Department of Justice was taking up certain matters theretofore investigated by the select committee, I recommended to the Attorney General, in a special visit to him, that he employ Major Watts as an investigator in his department, at the same time vouching for him in the most positive terms as a trustworthy, intelligent, and reliable man.

In the Department of Justice Major Watts was given access to all the secret files and correspondence of the department in the matters in which he worked and also was in touch with all information of the Secret Service of the Government in these same matters. His relations with the department were those of a highly confidential nature.

The House can imagine my chagrin and embarrassment when I found that recently Major Watts, being dissatisfied with conditions in the Department of Justice, without consultation with his superiors, absolutely ignoring the ethics of the situation and in gross violation of his trust, had made public a large amount of the information about pending matters in the department which he had obtained by virtue of his access to the confidential information and files I have mentioned. This he did without even tendering his resignation, but persisted in holding his office while thus forgetting the duties imposed upon him and ignoring his superiors. If he would make public a part of the information he had, of course, if he has the notion to do so, he will make public anything else he knows, irrespective of its effect on pending matters in the department.

I arose to state that I approve of the decision of the Attorney General in dismissing him. There was nothing else he could do. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Not now. Wait until I get done here.

To retain him was to absolutely destroy the morale of the employees in the most confidential department of the Government, the Department of Justice. There is not a man here who would retain even a stenographer in his office who would, without consent, make public matters occurring within his office. How much less, then, can we justify the violation of faith by one employed where the most vital secrets of our Government are lodged? Having been sponsor for Major Watts in the matter, I want to state publicly now that he has no just cause for complaint at his dismissal—he had it coming to him. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes; I yield.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I want to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that the information that Major Watts imparted to others was imparted relative to expenditures in the War Department to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department? And if——

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Wait until I answer it. It does not matter whom it was given to. He gave it while he was an employee of the Department of Justice under oath. He had no business to give it to anybody. It was entirely secret and confidential and sacred.

Mr. WOODRUFF. The gentleman will remember a certain law passed by this Congress which stated that no employee of the Government would be interfered with when he was giving information to Members of Congress relative to public business.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I do not know of any law of that kind.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I think the gentleman will find it.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Is it the gentleman's position that anybody who tells the truth about the Department of Justice ought to be fired? Is that the gentleman's position? [Applause.]

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. It is not my position at all. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes out of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes out of order. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I know Major Watts, but not intimately at all. My acquaintance with him began at the time that he was serving the Graham committee, and particularly the subcommittee on ordnance, of which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] is chairman, and of which I was the minority member.

In the reports made upon those matters concerning which Major Watts furnished testimony to the committee I never saw fit to enter into any criticism of him, but I was just struck with this peculiar thought while the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] was talking: Major Watts was an employee of the War Department. In that capacity he obtained information or what was accepted as information. After he quit the service of the War Department he came into the employment—I presume he was employed—of the Subcommittee on the Investigation of Expenditures in the War Department, and he gave to the chairman of that committee the facts, or alleged facts, which as an employee of the War Department he had obtained. The chairman of the committee accepted and acted upon the information which was thus given in his reports, and I confess that it was just a little bit difficult for me to see where Major Watts is subject to criticism because of information which he gave while an employee of the Department of Justice and is not subject to criticism because of information which he obtained while an employee of the War Department and gave to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM]. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] that the House recede and concur with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment numbered 114.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that amendment numbered 115 be taken up before amendment numbered 114, for the following reason: Amendment 115 is for the building of a large schoolhouse, and if that amendment should not be agreed to amendment 114 would be useless, because it applies to the purchase of ground for the building.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that amendment 115 be taken up before amendment 114. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report amendment 115.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 115: On page 52, line 3, insert:
"For beginning the erection of an addition to the Armstrong Manual Training School and alterations thereto, to include an assembly hall, additional classrooms, shops, and laboratories, within a limit of cost of $500,000, which is hereby authorized, $100,000, and the commissioners are authorized to enter into contract or contracts for said addition at a cost not to exceed $500,000."

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota moves to recede and concur with an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 115 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:
"For beginning the erection of an addition to the Armstrong Manual Training School and alterations thereto, to include an assembly hall, additional classrooms, shops, and laboratories, within a limit of cost of $500,000, which is hereby authorized, $100,000, and the commissioners are authorized to enter into a contract for said addition at a cost not to exceed $500,000."

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, the only change in the text of the amendment is to strike out the words "or contracts," and limiting it simply to a contract instead of more than one. That is all the amendment amounts to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. What objection is there to delegating to the District Commissioners the authority, if they see fit, to enter into more than one contract for the construction of an addition to a manual training school?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Because the bill provides otherwise in another place.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. And if the gentleman will permit, the architect for the District of Columbia advises that this be done.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. But usually in the construction of public buildings the contract is not awarded to one person for the whole job, but to various contractors. Here we are taking away from the District Commissioners the discretion as to the number of contracts and the method of awarding the contracts.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. There is a provision for that in another part of the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no other provision in the bill before this, is there, relating to the same subject?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes, there is; making it one contract, and that has been agreed to already.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask that amendment 114 be reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report amendment 114.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment numbered 114: On page 52, line 1, insert: For the purchase of land adjoining the Armstrong Manual Training School, $50,000.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I move to recede and concur. That is for the purchase of land for the building of this schoolhouse for which we have just provided. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOODYKOONTZ].

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent to speak out of order. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Speaker, it is my purpose, on this occasion, to make certain observations in respect to the coal industry in this country, but before proceeding to that subject may I call the attention of the House to the urgent demand for legislation necessary to articulate and coordinate the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Chicago Railway Labor Board, and the Shipping Board? These agencies of government are either working at cross purposes or else not working at all. It is a crying shame that the great industries of this country should be balked and stifled on account of the failure of the governmental agencies to work in harmony. Such agencies should operate in conjunction or else be consolidated.

My attention has been called to certain propaganda, widely circulated and specially directed toward Federal officials, including Members of Congress, in support of the theory of Government ownership of coal mines. It might be well for the House of Representatives to amend its rules and by-laws in order to provide for an additional standing committee, the title of which committee ought to be the "Committee on Propaganda," and the function of which should be the investigation of the sinister dope that by subtle methods is constantly being circulated to influence congressional action.

The particular propaganda to which my attention has been directed is a circular, printed in large type, copy of which was mailed to me. The heading of the circular reads thus: "Some merry gentlemen who have picked our pockets," meaning the coal people. Near the bottom of the circular is the following:

Reprinted from Baltimore News and Baltimore American, April 5, 1922.

The paramount impression sought to be conveyed is that the article was really a news item, or perhaps an editorial, published in the aforesaid papers. In smaller print is cautiously embodied the statement that the matter was an advertisement, in space paid for by a concern styling itself "Baltimore Chapter of the Church League for Industrial Democracy," and that one Bishop Charles D. Williams, of Michigan, was the president, and one Rev. Richard W. Hogue, of Philadelphia, was the executive secretary of the "church league."

Years ago the Louisiana State lottery, in order to give its name and business respectability, induced two gallant ex-Confederate soldiers to permit their names to be used as officials of the lottery. Now it seems that the "Church League for Industrial Democracy," whatever the latter overworked, high-sounding, and nebulous phrase may mean, has induced two ministers of the gospel to sign themselves up as connected with the league.

The matter set forth in the circular is of a slanderous character. Those responsible for the promulgation of it must be Socialists of the most pronounced type. Their atterances are virulent, having a vicious tendency. The authors of the article are calumniators of character. In this article coal operators are described as profiteers, having a disregard for public welfare and human suffering; that these are predatory; that they are running amuck; that their course is marked by want of common humanity, of common decency, and of common sense; that the coal industry is deathly sick with a dangerous disease; that the industry is in ruthless hands; that the people are the victims of coal operators' greed; that the disease is the logical outcome of lack of head and heart, and marks gross mismanagement. The gist of the article—the main objective—is summed up in these words:

Eventually the coal mines must be nationalized. Why not take the first step toward nationalization now?

Socialists are therefore agitating the subject of "nationalization" of coal mines, or, in other words, urging Government ownership of coal lands and coal-mining plants.

The World Geological Congress, which met in Canada just prior to the war, put the United States coal reserve or stock remaining underground, at 3,839,000,000,000 tons, or 52 per cent of the world's total, and the supply of Great Britain as being 190,000,000,000 tons, or less than 3 per cent of the world's total.

The feverish activities of the nations during the period of the war called for the production of an immense volume of coal, and as a result there was stimulated a greatly increased development of coal mines at an enormous expense. The United States having decided to enter the war, Congress, exerting a war power, gave authority to the Executive to take over the railroads and operate them, and also to fix the price of coal, which was done. The price of coal was made uniform to Americans, to the Allies, and to neutrals. The operators were forced to abide by the prices so fixed. The schedules of price, promulgated from time to time by the Government, were very low, and in many cases confiscatory. While those engaged in other industries were allowed to charge according to whatever their own sweet will might dictate, coal men were bound in a strait-jacket.

At the close of the war, and as due to a strike of coal miners in England and Wales, there was a temporary increase of production and demand for American coal, but when the British strike was ended, England not only rapidly recovered her former coal trade but also captured our own coal business in South America, in Central America, and in the West Indies. In addition to this England has been putting down coal—brought as ballast—in our ports on the Atlantic seaboard at less than $5 per ton, and furthermore, it is true that the cities on the Pacific coast are getting their coal from foreign countries. More than a score of dealers in Seattle, Wash., have been advertising for sale coal brought from Australia.

Having the greatest coal-mine development in the world; with all the men that are needed to work the mines; with the railroads clamoring for business and fully supplied with cars that are idle; with a merchant fleet, which has cost us billions to build—likewise idle and deteriorating and watched or guarded by the Government at great expense—is it any wonder that the people, aggravated by circumstances and vexed with intolerable conditions, are asserting that there is something wrong with respect to the coal industry?

Furthermore, the people who are clamoring most for relief are the coal operators themselves and the miners. For more than a year the mines have not worked much over half time. The losses to the people engaged in the industry have been very great. Operators at the time of the strike were selling at the tipple run-of-mine bituminous coal at prices ranging from $1.25 to $2 per ton. The accuracy of this statement can be verified to the satisfaction of anyone who may be interested to discover the truth of the allegation.

Could the Government take over these vast properties—developed and undeveloped, and of an estimated value of $4,000,000,000—and put coal on the cars at prices cheaper than has been done already by the present owners? I should think that the public has already had its fill of Government operation, as witness the railroad and telegraph performances.

That, due to the necessities of war, there is a greater coal-plant installation and development than the country requires is well known, and that there are perhaps more men, trained for work in and about coal mines, than can, under present conditions, profitably find employment in such work, is equally well known.

If things go on as during the past year there are many coal-mining plants that will sooner or later break down and fail. As regards coal mines—operating under the rule of supply and demand—it will be the case of the survival of the fittest, and the excess of miners, if such there be, will have to engage in other occupations. One is usually attracted to the job that pays the best. The operators and miners that thus may lose out will have to try and console themselves with the thought that their misfortune comes, in part at least, as an incident or as an aftermath of the great World War.

The coal strike has come largely as a result of the almost hopeless and apparently helpless condition of the industry. Many of the operators have been losing money. Every ton of coal mined and sold by these has been getting them deeper into debt. The miners, although being paid apparently high wages for the time actually worked, have found the time when they do work so limited as that they can not live comfortably. The miner, I do not doubt, would have been willing to work for a lower wage if regular employment could have been assured unto him.

If the operators had been able to obtain a reasonable price for the coal on board cars at the mines, in my judgment, the strike would never have been.

If the premises stated be correct, and the conclusions drawn be sound, then why should there be any agitation for Government ownership?

The coal operator and his corps of assistants at the mines are the general average of the American technical and business man. Some of these are men of culture and college education, but many of them were originally coal miners, and proud of it. By brain and brawn these diamonds in the rough have worked themselves up from the bottom to the top, educating themselves in the school of hard knocks. As a class, man for man, as respects industry, business ability, strict integrity, and general resourcefulness they are the equals of any other group or class of business men in America or in the world.

These coal operators and their helpers, the employees, can not justly be criticized for their overdevelopment of coal lands, for such development was a necessary act incident to the prosecution of the war; nor should they be criticized or held responsible for the failure of the other industries to engage in normal operations; nor for neglect of the general consumer to buy coal uniformly throughout the year, and thereby to avoid the intermittent or spasmodic employment of the miner; nor for the high freight rates—the rail-and-water rate from my district in southern West Virginia to New England approximates $8 per ton—nor for the long-delayed action of the Interstate Commerce Commission in respect to a specially reduced rate on export coal; nor for the action of the British Government in subsidizing coal mines and miners and coal-carrying vessels, and the consequent loss to the American coal operator on account of the export trade he has heretofore enjoyed; nor for the conduct of the Shipping Board in tying up the vessels of the merchant marine while the British preyed upon the coal and other industries of the United States; nor for the act, or failure to act, of the Chicago Railway Labor Board.

The coal operators have no control over the several factors enumerated. These factors are the main cause of the demoralization of the coal industry, constituting the elements, acting jointly and severally, that are damming up, oppressing, and crushing the coal industry, bankrupting the operator, bringing suffering to the miner, injuring American prestige abroad, and disgusting the people at home.

Why talk about Government ownership as the remedy? This nostrum, sought to be administered by ignorant socialistic quacks, would be far worse than the disease.

President Harding is a patient man, but there is a maxim to the effect that at times "patience ceases to be a virtue."

Permit me to say in this open public way, but with all candor and in all seriousness, that the Chicago Railway Labor Board, the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Shipping Board of the Emergency Fleet Corporation have utterly failed in the fulfillment of their plain duty to the American people. Oppressive rail and water rates have held back, and, unless corrected, will continue to hold back, trade and industry. Remove the obstruction caused by high rates and the stream of commerce thus released will resume its natural flow.

It may be true that the administration is not responsible for the appointment of a majority of the men constituting the several boards and commissions I have named, but the administration is responsible and will be held accountable for the official performances of these departments of the executive branch of the Government. Sooner or later it may become necessary for the President to wield the big stick, and then, when he is compelled so to do, the people will say:

Lay on, Macduff;
And damn'd be him that first cries, "Hold, enough!"

It was boastfully said, that upon completion of the new merchant marine America would be able to compete with European coal in Mediterranean ports.

The American coal operator can load his coal on board cars at a very low price, but he does not have any control over the transportation of that coal to the consumer.

There are some proprietors of coal properties who would gladly surrender their holdings to the Government, being weary of continual attack from those who are least informed about the business; but there are others—more patriotic—who as American citizens believe that Government ownership, or sovietism, as it is practiced in Russia, is not a wise governmental policy, knowing that under our Constitution property rights are secure and that, except in time of war or for a public use, such rights can not be taken or damaged, and then only upon the payment of just compensation to the owner.

The Constitution stands as a bulwark of safety for the protection of all property of whatsoever nature and wheresoever situated, within the jurisdiction of the Government. Politicians may scold, demagogues may lie, Socialists with warped judgment may loudly clamor, anarchists with the jaundiced eye and the red flag may seek to stir up rebellion, but the calm, deliberate judgment of the great majority of the American people stands firm for the Constitution, which protects the right of the citizen to life, liberty, and property. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] that the House recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment numbered 116: Page 52, line 10, insert:
"The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to have plans prepared for an addition to the Western High School, including repairs to the present building, with a view to providing not less than 24 additional classrooms."

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota moves to recede and concur with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the Senate amendment insert the following:
"The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to have plans prepared by the municipal architect for an addition to the Western High School, including repairs to the present building, with a view to providing not less than 24 additional classrooms."

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will state, Mr. Speaker, that the only difference is that the words "by the municipal architect" are added.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment 142: Page 71, line 7, after the word "debt," insert the following: "payable one-half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia and one-half out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $400,000."

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota moves to recede and concur with an amendment, as follows: Strike out the matter inserted by the Senate amendment and on page 65 of the bill strike out lines 1 to 5, inclusive.

Mr. WALSH. To that, Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Let me say that this is $400,000 appropriated for interest on the sinking fund. Heretofore we have appropriated $475,000. This year they only wanted $400,000, and while in conference the Treasurer sent us word that we need not appropriate anything because the matter had already been paid. So we are asking to strike out the $400,000 appropriated for the sinking fund.

Mr. WALSH. How can you jump back to page 65 of the bill and strike this out?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Page 65 of the engrossed bill.

Mr. WALSH. You can not refer to the printed copy in one part and the engrossed copy in another.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I hold the official bill in my hand.

Mr. WALSH. That is a printed copy; it is not printed in accordance with the engrossed copy.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has the engrossed copy, and lines 1 to 5 of the engrossed bill is the clause in relation to the interest and the sinking fund.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, may we have that read?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Interest and sinking fund:
For interest on the sinking fund on the funded debt, $400,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for redemption of any bonds above their par value plus accrued interest.

Mr. WALSH. Does the first part of the amendment also refer to the engrossed bill?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It refers to the Senate amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment 155: Page 84, line 9, insert the following:
"The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized and directed to acquire a site for a home and school for feeble-minded persons, said site to be located in the District of Columbia or in the State of Maryland or in the State of Virginia, and to erect thereon suitable buildings at a total cost not exceeding $300,000, of which not more than $40,000 shall be expended for a site, and toward said purpose there is appropriated the sum of $125,000; if the land proposed to be acquired is within the District of Columbia and the same can not be acquired by purchase at a price satisfactory to the commissioners, they are authorized to condemn the same under the provisions of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia. If the land can not be acquired within the District of Columbia, the Attorney General of the United States, at the request of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, shall institute condemnation proceedings to acquire such land as may be selected for said site either in the State of Maryland or in the State of Virginia in accordance with the laws of said States, the title of said land to be taken directly to and in the name of the United States, but the land so acquired shall be under the jurisdiction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia as agents of the United States, and expenses of procuring evidence of title or of condemnation, or both, shall be paid out of the appropriation herein made for the purchase of said site."

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 155 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:
"The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized and directed to use a site for a home and school for feeble-minded persons, said tract to be located in the District of Columbia on land owned by the District of Columbia and now allotted to the Home for the Aged and Infirm, and to erect thereon suitable buildings at a total cost not exceeding $250,000, and toward said purpose there is hereby appropriated the sum of $100,000, to be immediately available. The persons to be admissible thereto and the proceedings with reference to securing such admission to be in accordance with law."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to recede and concur with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 163: Page 90, after line 2, insert:
"National Library for the Blind: For aid and support of the National Library for the Blind, located at 1729 H Street NW., to be expended under the direction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, $5,000."

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 163, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$2,500."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota to recede and concur with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment numbered 164: Page 90, line 8, insert:
"Columbia Polytechnic Institute: To aid the Columbia Polytechnic Institute for the Blind, located at 1808 H Street NW., to be expended under the direction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, $1,500."

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment numbered 175: Page 97, line 4, insert: "For the maintenance of a tourists' camp in East Potomac Park, $5,000."

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 175.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield me some time—five minutes?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, the subcommittee on the preparation of the War Department appropriation bill had occasion to inspect the Arlington Amphitheater in company with the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds, Colonel Sherrill, and on that tour of inspection we were shown the proposed site for a tourists' camp in East Potomac Park. The site in East Potomac Park has been used during the past summer, and I believe the summer before, for automobilists who come to Washington to visit the Capital, as a place where they may store their machines and also have some limited accommodations for staying overnight. Many municipalities are arranging tourists' camps for the benefit of the tourists, where people may store their machines and while stored there make an inspection of the city. Certainly the District of Columbia should have some place where these thousands of tourists coming eastward in ever-increasing numbers may have opportunity to park and lodge their cars and stay overnight. There is provision now made for their accommodation, and all that is provided in this amendment is the sum of $5,000 to maintain, I understand, baths and some shelter. Are we going to take the position here that in the National Capital we shall discourage tourists from coming here at small expense? Are we to say that we shall not provide some place in the public parks where they may house their machines?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman think that we ought to pay the hotel bills of people who come here in automobiles?

Mr. STAFFORD. But we are not paying their hotel bills. We are not providing for their upkeep. We are providing a place where they may house their machines and stay overnight.

Mr. WALSH. And at a cost of $5,000 for the year.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why, in Wisconsin, and in every State where they have public parks throughout the West, there are provided accommodations for tourists, where they may house their machines. It is in keeping with the spirit of the times that some provision be made for these tourists. Are you going to say that people coming here with automobiles, poor people, are not to be provided some place where they may house their machines? Are you going to compel them to go to garages and compel them to stop at hotels and rooming houses overnight?

Let us keep up with the spirit of the times and recognize the need. We are spending millions of dollars for good roads, and all that this provides is $5,000.

Mr. WALSH. What is it to be used for?

Mr. STAFFORD. As I recall the statement of Colonel Sherrill, it is for the maintenance of a place for the tourists to take a bath and also a tenting place.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. The gentlman does not mean the housing of machines?

Mr. STAFFORD. Well, the storing of them.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Camping. The gentleman repeatedly used the term "housing the machines" when he meant the parking of them.

Mr. STAFFORD. The grounds are not used for any other purpose and it only is to cost $5,000. Are we going to say to these persons, because they are poor, that there will be no place on which they can park their machines? That is all.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask for two minutes more.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. Is it not true that almost every community of every size, at least every progressive community in the country, does this very thing and at some expense?

Mr. STAFFORD. At a larger expense than is provided here. We are inviting tourists; we are providing some place where the tourists can park their cars. That has been done for the past year, and why should it not be continued? We are spending $75,000,000 for good roads. Mr. Speaker, I offer a preferential motion.

Mr. ROSSDALE. I just wanted to know if the gentleman proposed to have a wet or a dry camp?

Mr. STAFFORD. As far as there is provision made for taking a bath it is a wet camp. Mr. Speaker, I offer a preferential motion to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman has just stated that money has been provided for the upkeep of this camp. The gentleman is mistaken about that. It may be true, however, that money has been taken from another appropriation to the extent of $1,000 a year and spent for this purpose. It is now proposed to get $5,000 to build kitchens and bathhouses and shelter for the automobiles in one of the most beautiful parks in the city. Upon the roads entering from Maryland and Virginia are public places where all these poor (?) people, to whom the gentleman refers, traveling over the country for pleasure from the north to Florida in the winter and fall, and from Florida back to the northern climates in the summer—there are places where they can camp without disfiguring that beautiful park which has been made at so great an expense. There is no difference in my opinion between providing kitchens and bathhouses and garages, and, as the gentleman from Massachusetts just stated, paying their hotel bills. The chambers of commerce in the various cities have raised the money among the merchants of the town to encourage these tin-can campers in order to sell that upon which they live while they are traveling. But here the proposition is not for the merchants to pay it, but to pay it by placing a tax upon the people who derive no benefit whatever from their coming here.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it not a fact that for several years past and for the current year these grounds, or grounds tributary thereto, are open to the people of the District for raising garden vegetables?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. During the time of the war on this newly made ground, which was pumped out of the bed of the river, where 300 acres were made, the people there were given that ground to cultivate so as to raise something upon which to live.

Mr. STAFFORD. And they are doing it now.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. After the war was over and the soldiers and those disfiguring that place had been put out, some of those old buildings are asked to be left for housing these people, and $5,000 in addition is to be expended for additional accommodations, and it is but the entering of the camel's nose into the tent and God knows where it will stop when it does get started.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I want five minutes.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I yield.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I imagine that every Member of the House has passed this camp; that he knew it if he has been here 8 or 10 years. He knows the conditions before the road was completed south of the railroad bridge.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present. You can not sandbag the gentleman in charge of the bill.

Mr. RAKER. I do not know as I am sandbagging him. The gentleman yielded to me very courteously.

Mr. WALSH. You intimidated the gentleman. [Laughter.]

Mr. RAKER. I never intimidated a man in my life. [Laughter.]

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland makes the point of no quorum.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I reserve it for five minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on amendment No. 1.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RAKER. Now, the District of Columbia and the Government improved that property. We have a beautiful road around it. There is enough room there for golf players and others, many acres. At the upper end, right south of the railroad track, 10 acres can be used without any disfiguration whatever for the people who travel over all parts of the United States in their machines, and they may have some place in Washington where they may stop for one or two or three days. All you have to do is to drive past and see the benefit that comes to them in order to be in favor of it. There are not many progressive towns in the United States to-day of any size but that are paying out of the funds of the town for accommodations for camping grounds. Now, the Government of the United States has a greater interest in this city than any other people in the world. It is our National Capital. People like to drive here in their own machines as well as to come here on trains. They come here from all over the United States. They want some decent place in which to stop. You are appropriating money for the national parks; you are appropriating money for the national forests, for the purpose of providing sanitary conditions for the public that may travel to see those parks and go through the national forests. This is the Capital of the Government of the United States. Give these people a chance to have a sanitary place upon which to camp, to have pure water, to have a chance to build a little fire and cook their meals.

Call them "tin-can" travelers, if you will, but they are of the best people in the world, and they ought to have some opportunity to live in decency while they are stopping in the greatest Capital in the world. It seems to me picayunish, it seems to me it is dealing in peanut propositions, not to authorize the District of Columbia, through its proper authority, the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds, Colonel Sherrill, to properly provide for this. The House should concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Not at present.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 19, noes 16.

So the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 186, page 100, after line 5, insert:

"The jurisdiction of the Rock Creek and Potomac Parkway Commission, as granted in section 22, public buildings act, approved March 4, 1913 (Public, No. 432), is hereby extended to cover the following tracts of land for park purposes, to wit: The tract known as the Klingle Road Valley Park, containing about 17.21 acres, as shown on map filed in the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia, and designated as park map No. 647 D, the Piney Branch Valley Park, containing about 16.3 acres, as shown on a map filed in the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia, and designated as park map No. 291, and the Patterson tract, known as parcel 129 (sub 2), containing about 81.76 acres; the commission is further authorized to reduce the area to be acquired in either of said tracts, where, by reason of improvements constructed or unreasonable prices asked, or for other reasons in their judgments the public interests may require and the limit hereinafter fixed to be paid for said tracts shall be reduced accordingly: Provided, That if acquired by purchase the cost of the respective tracts shall not exceed the following sums: The Klingle Road Valley Park, $186,600; the Piney Branch Valley Park, $237,700; and the Patterson tract, $600,000; and there is hereby appropriated toward the purposes authorized herein the sum of $300,000: Provided further, That the tracts authorized to be acquired by this act shall become part of the park system of the District of Columbia and be under control of the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army: Provided further, That an agreement of purchase shall be entered into or condemnation proceedings begun with reference to the Patterson tract within one year from the approval of this act."

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 187. Page 102, after line 6, insert:

"INCREASED WATER SUPPLY.

"For increasing the water supply of the city of Washington in accordance with the project E, submitted in Senate Document No. 403, Sixty-sixth Congress, third session, including the purchase of land, $1,500,000, to be immediately available and to be expended in such manner as will afford an increased water supply at the earliest possible date: Provided, That the Secretary of War may enter into a contract or contracts for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete the said project, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $1,450,000, exclusive of the amount herein appropriated: Provided further, That the Secretary of War is authorized to acquire any lands, easements, or rights of way that may be needed in connection with this project; and whenever he causes proceedings to be instituted for the acquirement by condemnation of any such lands, easements, or rights of way the United States, upon the filing of the petition in such proceedings, shall have the right to take immediate possession of said lands, easements, or rights of way, to the extent of the interest to be acquired, and use the same in the prosecution of the said project.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota moves to recede and concur with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota moves to recede and concur from disagreement with Senate amendment No. 187, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For increasing the water supply of the District of Columbia in accordance with project E, submitted in Senate Document No. 403, Sixty-sixth Congress, third session, the estimated cost of which has been revised and placed at $8,738,000, there is hereby authorized an appropriation, including those heretofore made, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, of not to exceed the sum of $8,738,000, which shall include the cost of all land, rights of way, easements, materials, engineering, labor, equipment, service, and all things necessary to complete said project and its full and complete connection with the present water plant of said District and its distribution system, and of said sum there is hereby appropriated for said purpose the sum of $1,500,000, to be immediately available, and to be expended in such a manner as will at the earliest possible date provide for the completion of said project. The Secretary of War may enter into contracts for materials and work necessary to the construction of said project, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made, not to exceed in the aggregate the sum of $1,450,000 in addition to the amount herein appropriated. The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to acquire all necessary land, easements, and rights of way necessary to the construction of said project by purchase or condemnation: Provided, That no bid in excess of the estimated cost for that portion of the work or plant covered by the bid shall be accepted, nor shall any contract for any portion of the work, material, or equipment to constitute a part of the plant for which this appropriation is available be valid unless the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army shall have certified thereon that all its terms are within the requirements of this authorization and the revised estimates: Provided further, That the Secretary of War shall submit to Congress on the first day of the next regular session a supplemental report on said water system and increase of water supply, showing, among other things, new or proposed construction within said District, connections with the present system of distribution, and revised estimates of cost."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota.

The motion was agreed to.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. WALSH, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of H. R. 8021, first session, Sixty-sixth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

FISCAL AFFAIRS OF THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas submits a privileged report from the Committee on Rules. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 342.

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider H. R. 10442, being "A bill to amend an act entitled 'An act to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for these islands,' approved August 29, 1916, as amended by an act to amend said act approved July 21, 1921." That there shall be not to exceed two hours of general debate on said bill, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] and one-half by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT]. At the conclusion of the general debate the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendments the committee shall rise and report the bill back to the House with the amendments, if any; the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and on all amendments thereto to final passage, without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the bill relates to the fiscal condition of the Philippine Islands. I understand that it was unanimously reported by the Committee on Insular Affairs, which committee requested a rule for its consideration. The rule just read is plain in its terms. I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill H. R. 10442, in relation to the fiscal affairs of the Philippine Islands.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 10442. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] will please take the chair.

Thereupon the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 10442, with Mr. STAFFORD in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 10442, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10442) to amend an act entitled "An act to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for these islands," approved August 29, 1916, as amended by an act to amend said act approved July 21, 1921.

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for these islands," approved August 29, 1916, as amended by an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for these islands,'" approved July 21, 1921, be further amended as follows:

That the proviso of section 11 of said act as amended be, and the same is hereby, further amended to read as follows:

"Provided, however, That the entire indebtedness of the Philippine government created by the authority conferred herein, exclusive of those obligations known as friar land bonds, shall not exceed at any one time 10 per cent of the aggregate tax valuation of its property, nor that of the city of Manila 10 per cent of the aggregate tax valuation of its property, nor that of any Province or municipality a sum in excess of 7 per cent of the aggregate tax valuation of its property at any one time. In computing the indebtedness of the Philippine government, bonds not to exceed $10,000,000 in amount, issued by that government, secured by an equivalent amount of bonds issued by the Provinces or municipalities thereof, shall not be counted."

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. STAFFORD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration the bill (H. R. 10442) to amend an act entitled "An act to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for these islands," approved August 29, 1916, as amended by an act to amend said act approved July 21, 1921, had come to no resolution thereon.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 14 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, May 4, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to announce that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] is detained on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-two Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a memorial of the board of governors of the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association (Inc.) of Washington, D. C., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation increasing the assessment valuation of real estate in the District of Columbia, as increasing the high cost of living, violating established taxation principles of the American Government, and as being unfair when applied without hearing to citizens not having the franchise and confined to the right of petition, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Federation of Citizens' Associations of the District of Columbia, protesting against the enactment of legislation increasing the assessment valuation of real estate in the District of Columbia (in principle), against taxation without representation and the nonhearing of those to be taxed, and also as tending to increase the high cost of living in the District, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions of the Sixteenth Street Highlands Citizens' Association of Washington, D. C., protesting against the enactment of legislation increasing the valuation of real estate in the District of Columbia, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BALL presented a letter in the nature of a memorial from the board of governors of the Mu-so-lit Club (Inc.) of Washington, D. C., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation increasing the assessment valuation of real estate in the District of Columbia, as tending to aggravate the already distressing and deplorable housing conditions, and praying for the hearing of those interested in the matter, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Mid-City Citizens' Association of Washington, D. C., protesting against the enactment of legislation increasing the assessment valuation of real estate in the District of Columbia as being detrimental to the already acute housing situation in and the future development of the Capital City, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented resolutions of the board of directors of the Washington (D. C.) Chamber of Commerce, protesting against the enactment of legislation increasing the rates of taxation on real estate and intangible property in the District of Columbia, particularly (among other reasons) because of the effect it might have in discouraging home building and investments in mortgages, the added burdens to wage earners and persons of small income, and the added encouragement it might afford to the profiteer and extortioner, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Conduit Road Citizens' Association (approved by the Federation of Citizens' Associations), protesting against the enactment of legislation increasing the assessment valuation of real estate in the District of Columbia and favoring the hearing of those interested in the matter, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Real Estate Board of Washington, D. C., protesting against the enactment of legislation increasing the assessment valuation on real estate in the District of Columbia, particularly in view of the disastrous effect it might have on the already acute rental and housing situation in the said District and favoring delay as to changes in the fiscal relations until such time as the matter can be thoroughly considered and all parties afforded a hearing, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CAPPER presented a petition of sundry citizens of Weir, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation creating a department of education, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Kansas State Dental Association at Kansas City, Mo., favoring the enactment of legislation to reorganize and promote the efficiency of the United States Public Health Service, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Topeka, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation to control the traffic in narcotics, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. OVERMAN:

A bill (S. 3547) for the relief of Robert G. Hayes; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. McKELLAR:

A bill (S. 3548) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the town of Kingsport, Tenn., one German cannon or field-piece; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BALL:

A bill (S. 3549) to tax motor-bus companies and other transportation companies operating in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 3550) extending the charter and granting certain special privileges to the National Congress of Mothers and Parent-Teacher Associations, a corporation existing under the laws of the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

AMENDMENT TO NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment providing that three reserve officers shall be hereafter authorized to be retained on active shore duty in the historical section of the Office of Naval Intelligence, though beyond the age of disenrollment or retirement, intended to be proposed by him to House bill 11228, the naval appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF THE PATENT LAWS.

Mr. STANLEY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3410) to amend section 4886 of the Revised Statutes relating to patents, which was referred to the Committee on Patents and ordered to be printed.

TARIFF BILL AMENDMENT.

Mr. POMERENE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 7456, the tariff bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

OWNER OF THE STEAMER "MAYFLOWER."

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1813) for the relief of the owner of the steamer Mayflower, which was, on page 1, lines 8 and 9, to strike out the words "and detention of."

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

OWNERS OF THE SCHOONER "HORATIO G. FOSS."

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1817) for the relief of the owners of the schooner Horatio G. Foss, which was, on page 1, line 9, to strike out the word "and detention of."

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. This is the same amendment which was applied to the other bill. I move that the Senate concur in it.

The motion was agreed to.

OWNER OF THE STEAM LIGHTER "CORNELIA."

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1814) for the relief of the owner of the steam lighter Cornelia, which was, on page 1, line 9, to strike out the words "and detention of."

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

RECLAMATION IN IRRIGATION DISTRICTS—CONFERENCE REPORT (S. DOC. NO. 198).

Mr. McNARY submitted the following report, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4382) to provide for the application of the reclamation law to irrigation districts, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the Senate amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the term 'first mortgage,' as used in section 12 of the Federal farm loan act, approved July 17, 1916, shall be construed to include mortgages on farm lands under United States reclamation projects, notwithstanding there may be against such lands a reserved or created lien in favor of the United States for construction or other charges as provided in the act of June 17, 1902, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, known as the reclamation law: Provided, That such lands are otherwise eligible for loans under the Federal farm loan act: And provided further, That the amount and date of maturity of such lien shall be given due consideration in fixing the value of such lands for loan purposes."

And the Senate agree to the same.

CHAS. L. McNARY,
W. L. JONES,
MORRIS SHEPPARD,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

M. P. KINKAID,
N. J. SINNOTT,
CARL HAYDEN,
Managers on the part of the House.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR POMERENE AT GRANT CENTENARY CELEBRATION.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, on the 29th of last month, at the Grant centenary celebration at Georgetown, Ohio, the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] delivered a very able and eloquent address. It is rich in historical allusion and patriotic utterance. I ask that it be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in 8-point type.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The address is as follows:

ULYSSES SIMPSON GRANT.

Senator ATLEE POMERENE spoke as follows:

Mr. Chairman, Judge Nichols, members of the Grand Army of the Republic, ladies and gentlemen, we come to Georgetown today to do homage to the great captain of the Civil War. I understand with what pardonable pride the citizens of this good community recite the boyhood deeds of him who rose from comparative obscurity in a few short years to become the great commander of our great armies in suppressing the great rebellion.

BOYHOOD OF GRANT.

General Grant's boyhood days in Georgetown did not differ materially from the youthful days of many Americans in every community in the country. All who knew him or the history of his generation will recognize in him a boy clear of head, pure of heart, and clean of hand. His parents did not permit him to indulge in idleness. He did not fritter away his days. He always was occupied either at school or in his father's tannery or with his team. He was never idle.

His father must have been a very positive character, ambitious for his son's advancement, as any father should be. Full of hope, aye, of confidence, in his future, he determined that his son should have every advantage which his limited means would permit him to give.

Grant the boy does not seem at first to have been ambitious for a military career. In his personal memoirs he tells us that his father had received a letter from Hon. Thomas Morris, United States Senator from Ohio, and after reading it, he said:

"Ulysses, I believe you are going to receive the appointment." "What appointment," I inquired. "To West Point; I have applied for it." "But I won't go," I said. He said, "He thought I would," and then General Grant adds, quaintly, "I thought so, too, if he did."

Again he tells us that a military life "had no charms" for him, and he did not "have the faintest idea of staying in the Army, even if I should be graduated."

He received his education at the National Military Academy, but his career at West Point can hardly be regarded as a brilliant success if we are to rate him according to prevailing standards. He had an unusually retentive memory. He tells us he "rarely ever read over a lesson the second time during my entire cadetship." He devoted more time to the books in the library than he did to those relating to his course of study. As a result, as he puts it, "I never succeeded in getting squarely at either end of my class in any one study during the four years."

He thought of obtaining a permanent position as a college professor, but he tells us "circumstances always did shape my course different from my plans."

He left the academy "with a good average record as a student and a very high record as a man." It was said of him, "He betrayed no trust, falsified no word, violated no rights, manifested no tyranny, sought no personal aggrandizement, complained of no hardships, displayed no jealousy, oppressed no subordinate, and was ever known for his humanity, sagacity, courage, and honor." High praise this for any man.

His first military service was in the Mexican War. He was then a very young man. He occupied minor positions of responsibility. There is nothing extraordinary in his experience in Mexico, but a careful scrutiny of the history of the Mexican War shows that even in his minor position of lieutenant he always was ready to do and did do his duty.

On one occasion his colonel called for volunteers to get word to General Twiggs, division commander, calling for ammunition and reinforcements. "It is a dangerous job," said Colonel Garland, "and I do not like to order any man to do it. Who will volunteer?" "I will," said Quartermaster Grant promptly, "I have got a horse." "You are just the man to do it," said the colonel. "Keep in the side streets and ride hard." Needless to say, the message was delivered.

While Grant was acting as quartermaster he was always at the front during the fighting. General Longstreet, who served with Grant in Mexico, said of him, "You could not keep Grant out of battle." Again he said, "Grant was everywhere on the field. He was always cool, swift, and unhurried in battle. He was as unconcerned as if it were a hailstorm instead of a storm of bullets. I had occasion to observe his superb courage under fire; so remarkable was his bravery that mention was made of it in the official report, and I heard his colonel say, 'There goes a man of fire.'"

CIVIL LIFE.

Shortly after the close of the Mexican War Grant was sent to the Pacific slope with his regiment. He was separated from family and friends. His record in the far West his most enthusiastic friends can hardly claim to have been creditable. On April 11, 1854, he resigned his position as captain in the United States Army, and apparently his military career had closed. He returned to the East.

Later he located on a small farm which had been given to him by his father-in-law. It was almost entirely, if not quite, virgin soil, covered by a virgin forest.

To use a homely expression, Grant was all but down and out. Almost any other man would have become discouraged and quit. Not so Grant. His clearness of vision and his high resolve enabled him to see his duty to himself, his family, and his country. He cleared the forest. He built his log hut. He plowed and sowed and reaped. He cut firewood and hauled it to St. Louis. He did teaming for his neighbors. Nothing that he found to do was left undone. In this way for a time he maintained himself, his wife, and his growing family.

Later he engaged in the real estate business in St. Louis. He was not fitted for this work. He was not successful in it, and he resigned his position.

Still later, in April, 1860, he went to Galena, Ill., entered his father's leather store, and joined his brothers as salesman.

While in private life he was devotion itself to his wife and children. During all this period he was a great reader, a close student and observer of the passing events which were rapidly drawing the peoples of the North and South into the maelstrom of fratricidal war. He seemed to have a premonition that the fateful struggle was coming.

Hard this life may have seemed to him and his family, as well as to those who knew him, but these experiences were not in vain. They were the crucible in which were melted, purified, and fused together the elements of his manhood. It made him master of himself, and having mastered himself he was fitted to become, and did become, the master and the leader of men. In no period of his life did he develop more than in the time between his resignation and the date when he tendered his services again to his country in the darkest hour of her history.

GRANT IN THE CIVIL WAR.

On May 24, 1861, while at Galena, Ill., Grant wrote to The Adjutant General of the Army at Washington, tendering his services until the close of the war "in such capacity as may be offered." So little was thought of this man that his letter was not even acknowledged.

With that clearness of vision which always characterized Grant, whether in peace or in war, whether in camp or battle, or at the council table, he foresaw the conflict coming. In his judgment it was to decide two question:

First. Has a State the right to secede from the Union?

Second. Shall we tolerate slavery under the Stars and Stripes?

Grant believed, as Webster believed, that the Union was "one and inseparable." Grant believed with the advancing progress of civilization no human being ought to be held in bondage. In both these beliefs he was right—eternally right; and though we accord to those who held different beliefs honesty of conviction, if these same questions were to be presented now to the people, North or South, for decision at the ballot box they would be decided overwhelmingly in the negative.

Grant, in discussing the question of secession, says, in his memoirs:

> Doubtless the founders of our Government, the majority of them at least, regarded the confederation of the Colonies as an experiment. Each colony considered itself a separate government; that the confederation was for mutual protection against a foreign foe and the prevention of strife and war among themselves. If there had been a desire on the part of any single State to withdraw from the compact at any time while the number of States was limited to the original 13, I do not suppose there would have been any to contest the right, no matter how much the determination might have been regretted. The problem changed on the ratification of the Constitution by all the Colonies; it changed still more when amendments were added; and if the right of any one State to withdraw continued to exist at all after the ratification of the Constitution, it certainly ceased on the formation of new States, at least so far as the new States themselves were concerned.

Secession, says Grant, "was illogical as well as impracticable. It was revolution." He believed that as man has the inherent right of self-defense, so has a government the right to protect itself against revolution.

But it is purely academic to discuss such problems now. They were settled by the arbitrament of the sword, and out of the Civil War our Union of States was cemented together more closely than ever before.

I have often indulged the thought that if the people of the South before the Civil War had known the people of the North as they know them now, and if the people of the North before the Civil War had known the people of the South as they know them now, there would have been no war. And of this, too, I am perfectly clear: If there had been more Grants in the North and more Lees in the South these questions would have been settled without the shedding of a single drop of blood.

THE EARLY DAYS OF THE CIVIL WAR.

A few days after the firing upon Fort Sumter a meeting of the loyal citizens of Galena, Ill., was held and Captain Grant was made chairman of the meeting. He did not devote his time to grandiloquent talk. He was even then the soldier, the commander. Calling the meeting to order, he said, in substance:

> Fellow citizens, this meeting is called to organize a company of volunteers to serve the State of Illinois. * * * Before calling upon you to become volunteers, I wish to state just what will be required of you. First of all, unquestioning obedience to your superior officers. The Army is not a picnicking party, nor is it an excursion. You will have hard fare. You may be obliged to sleep on the ground after long marches in the rain and snow. Many of the orders of your superiors will seem to you unjust, and yet they must be borne. If an injustice is really done you, however, there are courts-martial where your wrongs can be investigated and offenders punished. If you put your name down here it should be in full understanding of what the act means. In conclusion, let me say that so far as I can I will aid the company, and I intend to reenlist in the service myself.

This was the Grant whom the country later learned to know and love. His direct and straightforward statements as chairman of the Galena meeting were characteristic of his every thought and act during the entire period of the war.

The enlisted soldiers offered to make Grant captain of the company. He refused, stating that he thought he could serve the State better at Springfield. He tendered his services to Gov. Richard Yates, but the governor could find nothing for him to do. After some days he determined to go home. Governor Yates, learning of his intention, asked him to remain overnight and call at his office in the morning. Grant was assigned to a desk in the adjutant general's department doing clerical work. Grant was hoping for a command. He returned to Galena almost in despair because he did not receive suitable recognition of his military experience.

Mr. Houghton, the editor of a local paper, wrote concerning him:

> We are now in want of just such soldiers as he is, and we hope the Government will invite him to higher command. He is the very soul of honor, and no man breathes who has a more patriotic heart. We want among our young soldiers the influence of the rare leadership of men like Captain Grant.

Grant was a newcomer in Illinois. Public men did not know him. Other men unfitted by training or experience were given positions in the organization of the State troops, but there seemed to be no place for Grant, the West Point cadet.

He went to Cincinnati and tendered his services to Gen. George B. McClellan, then in command of the military district. He met his old comrade, Carr B. White, in Georgetown, a member of the Ohio Legislature, and to him he related the circumstances and his ambition to serve in the Army. Mr. White replied that there ought to be a command for him, and said, "I am going to Columbus and I will see what I can do." In a few days he returned with a commission for Grant as colonel of the Twelfth Ohio, but meanwhile Governor Yates had wired him, asking him to accept the command of the Seventh District Regiment. This position he accepted, and it gave him his opportunity.

His regiment lacked in discipline and was said to be a "little unruly." When asked if he could manage them, his quiet reply was, "I think I can." When presented to his regiment by Colonel Goode, he said, after returning the salute of the adjutant: "A soldier's first duty is to learn to obey his commander. I shall expect my orders to be obeyed as exactly and instantly as if we were on the field of battle."

A little later, while at St. Louis, Grant received a telegram from his friend, Washburne, advising him that the President had appointed him as brigadier general of Volunteers.

In the brief space of time allotted to me it is, of course, impossible to go into all of the details of this wonderful commander's activities.

Grant was the one man above every other commanding officer in the West who seemed to have the military genius to bring order out of chaos, to convert raw recruits into trained veterans, and to inspire them with the bravery of spirit and love of country which was necessary to suppress the rebellion and preserve the Union.

Shortly after he had assumed command he found that the Confederates were marching onto the city of Paducah. On September 6, 1861, he issued this proclamation to its citizens:

I have come among you, not as an emeny but as your friend and fellow citizen, not to injure or annoy you but to respect the rights and defend and enforce the rights of all loyal citizens. An enemy in rebellion against our common Government has taken possession of and planted its guns upon the soil of Kentucky and fired upon our flag. Hickman and Columbus are in his hands; he is moving upon our city. I am here to defend you against this enemy, and to assert and maintain the authority and sovereignty of your Government and mine. I have nothing to do with opinions. I deal only with armed rebellion and its aiders and abettors. You can pursue your usual vocations without fear or hindrance. The strong arm of the Government is here to protect its friends and to punish only its enemies. Whenever it is manifest that you are able to defend yourselves, to maintain the authority of your Government and protect the rights of all its loyal citizens, I shall withdraw the forces under my command from your city.

Lincoln, later seeing this address, said, "The man who can write like that is fitted to command in the West."

He took Belmont. The Confederates held Columbus. In the midst of the fighting one of the Union officers shouted, "My God, we are surrounded." Grant replied, Grant-like, "We cut our way in and we can cut our way out."

He moved with vigor and precision. On February 5 he advanced against Fort Henry. On the day following it fell, and he telegraphed Halleck, "Fort Henry is ours," and added, "I shall take and destroy Fort Donelson on the 8th and return to Fort Henry."

Weather and other conditions, however, prevented his taking Fort Donelson as quickly as he thought, but he moved on to his objective with that persistence and determination which always carried him through every obstacle that came in his way. Generals Floyd, Pillow, and Buckner were in charge for the Confederates. Floyd and Pillow fled. General Buckner thought it useless to continue further fighting. He sent word to Grant, asking for terms of capitulation. Grant replied, "No terms except immediate and unconditional surrender can be accepted. I propose to move immediately upon your works."

Victory was now in the air. The North began to find itself. They had a general who could fight and win. He was little known either to the people of the North or the East. The whole Nation began to inquire, "Who is this man Grant, who fights battles and wins them?"

After Shiloh great pressure was begun to have the President remove Grant from his command in the west. But Lincoln, after full investigation, replied, "I can't spare Grant; he fights."

Shiloh was one of the most terrific battles in the West. An eminent writer, after reviewing this battle, says:

The Battle of Shiloh showed Ulysses Grant to be a commander of a new type. His personal habits in conflict were now apparent to all his staff. He did not shout, vituperate, or rush aimlessly to and fro. He had no vindictiveness. While other officers in the heat of battle swore and uttered ferocious cries, Grant voiced all his commands in plain Anglo-Saxon speech, without oaths or abridgment. His anxiety and intensity of mental action never passed beyond his perfect control. He fought best and thought best when pushed hard.

A man of singular gentleness, he had displayed the faculty which enables a man to consider soldiers en masse, to look over and beyond the destruction of human life in battle to the end for which the battle is fought. Unwilling to harm any living thing himself, he had the resolution to send columns of men into battle calmly and without hesitation. Without this constitution of mind no great commander can succeed.

Perhaps his next greatest achievement was the capture of Vicksburg. He laid siege to the city in the spring of 1863. It was a giant's task. The public began to lose faith in the hero of Donelson and Shiloh. Lincoln declared, "Even Washburne has deserted Grant." Charles A. Dana was sent to the front by the Secretary of War to report on the conditions of the Army. Later Gen. Lorenzo Thomas was sent with an order relieving Grant, if he should find it necessary. Commodore Porter told General Thomas that "if the news got out the boys would tar and feather him." The order was never delivered. The siege continued. He assumed all responsibility. He knew if he failed his reputation would be lost; if he won, it would greatly cripple and discourage the South and correspondingly encourage the North. The siege and the fighting continued. At last, on July 3, a white flag appeared on the Confederate works. The commanding general asked for commissioners to arrange terms of surrender; and again Grant replied, "I have no terms other than unconditional surrender."

After some little negotiation terms were concluded. They were so liberal that they were criticized in the North; but at 10 o'clock on July 4 the besieged "marched out of their entrenchments. With sad faces the men of each regiment stacked their arms, threw down upon them knapsacks, belts, cartridges, and cap pouches, and then tenderly crowned the piles with their faded and riddled colors."

Thus ended the siege of Vicksburg.

Then followed Chattanooga and Missionary Ridge. As Grant rode along the lines he was recognized by the soldiers, and they cried, "Now we know we have a general."

The Assistant Secretary of War sent this message to Washington: "Glory to God, the day is decisively ours. Our men are frantic with joy and enthusiasm, and received Grant as he rode along the lines after the victory with tumultuous shouts."

The next day was Thanksgiving Day and all over the Nation grateful millions of people blessed the name of Grant.

These victories, like the finger of fate, pointed to Grant as the one man in America who ought to command the forces in the East against Lee.

Washburne offered a bill reviving the grade of lieutenant general. In speaking of Grant he said:

He has fought more battles and won more victories than any man living. He has captured more prisoners and taken more guns than any general of modern times.

The President signed the bill and nominated General Grant to be lieutenant general of the armies of the United States. This announcement was received with universal acclaim. The modest Grant on March 4, 1864, wrote to General Sherman, and spoke of the success which had met his efforts, and his place in the public confidence, but he did not take all the credit to himself. With his characteristic generosity of soul, he said:

No one feels more than I how much of this success is due to the skill and energy and the harmonious putting forth of that energy and skill of those whom it has been my good fortune to have occupying a subordinate position under me.

There are many officers to whom these remarks are applicable to a greater or less degree, proportionate to their ability as soldiers; but what I want is to express my thanks to you and McPherson as the men to whom, above all others, I feel indebted for whatever I have had of success. * * * I feel all the gratitude this letter can express, giving it the most flattering construction.

To this letter General Sherman replied, in part:

You do yourself injustice and us too much honor in assigning to us too large a share of the merits which have led to your high advancement. You are Washington's legitimate successor and occupy a place of almost dangerous elevation; but if you can continue, as heretofore, to be yourself, simple, honest, and unpretending, you will enjoy through life the respect and love of friends and the homage of millions of human beings that will award you a large share in securing them and their descendants a government of law and stability. * * *

I believe you are as brave, patriotic, and just as the great prototype Washington, as unselfish, kind-hearted, and honest as a man should be; but your chief characteristic is the simple faith in success you have always manifested, which I can liken to nothing else than the faith a Christian has in a Savior. This faith gave you victory at Shiloh and Vicksburg. Also, when you have completed your last preparations, you go into battle without hesitation, as at Chattanooga—no doubts, no reserves—and I tell you it was this that made us act with confidence.

No one doubts the great and commanding genius and patriotism of General Sherman. His devotion to General Grant, his commanding officer, is almost unparalleled in the history of warfare.

Sherman advised him not to stay in Washington. True, it was the Capital of the Nation, but it seemed to be full of intrigue and of political connivance which since the outbreak of the war had had its effect upon every commanding general who preceded Grant and often jeopardized the movements of the troops in the field.

After Grant had assumed control and had gone West to close up his work there and have a conference with General Sherman and other generals, he returned to the East and pitched his tent in the fields with his armies. He was not given to ostentation and display. He went straight to his headquarters at Culpeper. He announced, "There will be no grand review and no show business."

Grant had work to do. He was commander of all of the forces of the North. "The far-flung" battle line of the northern forces was more than 1,000 miles in length. The Army was, to use Sherman's words, "a unit now in action." He kept his own counsel. The Army of the Potomac was moved with the same untiring vigor and energy, with the same clear intelligence and precision with which he commanded the forces in the West and brought victory to our colors. He was pitted against the greatest military genius in the Southern Confederacy. Neither Grant nor Lee underestimated one another. Greek had met Greek. But Grant was fighting a winning cause—Lee a losing cause.

The Army of the Potomac was well trained, but it had not been well led. Grant removed some officers. He placed others. Lincoln had implicit confidence in him. He did not interfere with Grant's action in the field.

At this time a correspondent writes of him:

Grant is not intoxicated with flattery. * * * I never met with a man of so much simplicity, shyness, and decision. He has lost nothing of his freshness of mind. He avoids Washington and its corrupting allurements. He is essentially a soldier of the camp and field. All his predecessors were ruined by Washington influences. He has established his headquarters 10 miles nearer the enemy than Meade. His tents are almost among the soldiers. That is a western and not a Potomac Army custom. He travels with the simplicity of a second lieutenant, with a small trunk, which he often forgets and goes off without. If Grant fails, then a curse is on this Army. He is a soldier to the core, a genuine commoner, commander of a democratic army from a democratic people. * * * From what I learn of him, he is no more afraid to take the responsibility of a million men than of a single company.

Up until Grant became lieutenant general and took charge of the armies in the field our forces, whether east or west, seemed to act without system, without unity of purpose. The officers in the field were partly responsible for this condition. But the Congress and the War Department at Washington must bear their share of the responsibility. Grant demanded of President Lincoln the assurance that the War Department would cease to command in the field.

On arriving in Washington he made up his mind to say to Lincoln: "I will accept the command of the Armies of the United States, provided I can be free from the interference of the War Department; otherwise I shall be obliged to decline the honor." But this was not necessary. Lincoln knew all too well the defects in his fighting machine.

The President, in presenting him with his commission as lieutenant general, said:

The Nation's appreciation of what you have done and its reliance upon you for what remains to be done in the existing great struggle are now presented with this commission constituting you lieutenant general in the Army of the United States. With this high honor devolves upon you also a corresponding responsibility. As the country herein trusts you, so, under God, it will sustain you. I scarcely need to add that with what I here speak goes my own hearty concurrence.

General Grant replied:

I accept the commission with gratitude for the high honor conferred. With the aid of the noble armies that have fought in so many fields for our common country, it will be my earnest endeavor not to disappoint your expectations. I feel the full weight of the responsibilities now devolving upon me, and I know that if they are met it will be due to those armies and, above all, to the favor of that Providence which leads both nations and men.

Other great generals had preceded him in commanding the Army of the Potomac. Many of them were men of great ability, brave in action, brilliant in achievement, but none of them had to their credit as many or as great victories as Grant had won in the West.

Reserved of manner, plain of dress, and soft of speech, he was not at home in the social whirl of Washington. His place was in the camp or on the battle field. There he was master of men and of measures—quick to conceive and quick to act. Entire battle fields were spread before him like a panorama. He knew what to do and when to do it. To think was to execute. His great brain worked like a Corliss engine.

After Grant's appointment as lieutenant general he returned to Nashville for a conference with Sherman, promising to return to Washington within nine days from the date of his leaving.

Upon his return Lincoln said to him:

I have never professed to be a military man, nor to know how campaigns should be conducted, and never wanted to interfere in them. But procrastination on the part of generals and the pressure of the people at the North, and of Congress, which is always with me, have forced me into issuing a series of military orders. I don't know but they were all wrong, and I'm pretty certain some of them were. All I wanted or ever wanted is some one to take the responsibility and act—and call on me for all assistance needed. I pledge myself to use all the power of government in rendering such assistance.

Grant replied:

I will do the best I can, Mr. President, with the means at hand.

Later Lincoln said in reply to a question:

I don't know General Grant's plans, and I don't want to know them. Thank God, I've got a general at last.

From the hour Grant assumed command of the Army of the Potomac a new spirit had been breathed into it. They knew they had a leader, and they knew that proper leadership was the one essential for complete victory.

The South, too, began to realize that a new man was at the helm. A southern editor gave this warning:

Grant is a determined man, and has a tremendous force under his hand, and we may rest assured that when he is beaten it will be only when the last capacity for fight has been taken out of him and his army. Until this is done our generals, army, and government should brace every nerve, stretch every sinew, force nature, and yield nothing to fatigue.

The South began its preparations for the last and final struggle. All men between 17 and 50 were called. Grant, in referring to this call, said the South was "robbing the cradle and the grave."

Grant was confident of final victory, but he knew the bravery and the spirit of his foe, and he did not underestimate either. In the great Battle of the Wilderness the two armies met in deathlike struggle. It was a long, a bloody battle. No man who survived it on either side, whether officer or private, ever lost his admiration for the courage of his foe.

Grant had supreme confidence in his men as well as his generals. To illustrate: During this terrific battle an excited orderly cried out, "They have broken through. Hancock has given way." Grant replied, "I do not believe it." He knew Hancock.

For days the tide of battle ebbed and flowed. Lee had failed to break the line or check the advance. At one time he was told Grant was retreating. "You are mistaken," Lee replied; "quite mistaken. Grant is not a retreating man."

After three days of fighting, Grant wrote: "The results of the three days' fighting are in our favor. I shall take no backward steps." And later he wrote to General Halleck, "I propose to fight it out on this line if it takes all summer."

The spirit of the men was equaled only by that of the commanding general. A historian tells us that at a critical period in the battle a part of the Union forces began to feel that they were again whipped by Lee. They feared another retreat would be sounded. But the orders were given. The march was forward. The men broke out with this refrain:

Ulysses leads the van!
For we will dare
To follow where
Ulysses leads the van.

After Grant established his headquarters at Culpeper, Virginia became the great battle field of the war. The struggle was gigantic. Not one, but many battles were fought. The slaughter was unparalleled in the history of our warfare. The world shuddered at the fratricidal contest. Union and the freedom of the race were in the balance. Grant knew that the cause must be won or lost in Virginia. Fair-minded men can not say whether the soldiers of the North or of the South fought with the greater valor or under the more brilliant leadership. Determination to win characterized both armies. For a time only the God of battles knew where success would lie. But Lincoln and Grant, their generals and their soldiers, aye, the entire North kept up their courage and did not falter. The superior strength and resources of the North were destined to win.

As I read the history of this struggle, no one battle decided the contest. It was a succession of battles, characterized by masterly generalship and a courageous soldiery. Who, whether he be of the North or of the South, does not recall with pride the heroism in the Wilderness, at Spottsylvania, at Cold Harbor, at Petersburg, at Appomattox, or in many another battle of perhaps less importance, but fought with the same spirit of heroism?

Grant's genius for command seemed to grow as the occasion demanded. True, he did not escape criticism, aye, virulent abuse; but what great man who served his country ever has? The greater his victories and the more battles he won, the more shafts of slander were hurled at him. He must have been stung to the quick, for he was a very sensitive man. But criticism, cruel and unjust as it was, never swerved him from his path of duty. He saw beyond the smoke of battle the glory of the country reunited and human slavery forever wiped out.

As this terrific contest progressed, the critics became more severe in denunciation. They called him "butcher"; and it must be admitted that blood flowed freely on both sides of the battle line. But great battles were never won without bloodshed. Carping critics never fought a battle, much less won a war. Of course they do not shed blood, because they do not fight battles with the sword. They never assault the enemy. They fight their friends from behind, and they fight them from afar off. Their swords are their pens and their tongues. Occasionally some of them are wounded, but they are not wounded in the front while facing and advancing upon the enemy. Their wounds are in their backs while running from danger.

During the fighting in Virginia he said in reply to his critics:
